HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 28, 1946

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rt. Rev. Louis V. Vaeth, archdiocesan director of the Propagation of the Faith, Baltimore, Md., offered the following prayer:

This is the victory that overcometh the world—our faith.—St. John.

O God! the true, omnipotent, wise, infallible, and divine Legislator, graciously and constantly and abundantly flood the souls and minds of these Members of the House of Representatives with that heaven-bestowed, peace-promoting, justice-dispensing and mountain-moving gift—faith. Faith in Thee, the one and only true God, the divine Lawgiver and just Rewarder of nations and peoples; the ever-vigilant and successful Builder and Protector—"Unless the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it; unless the Lord keep the city, they watch in vain that keepeth it"—faith in their Nation as Thy singularly blessed and approved model to other nations as a builder of cities and also of men; faith to consistently and honestly realize that:

"We all are blind until we see
That in the human plan
Nothing is worth the making if
It does not make the man.
Why build these cities glorious
If man unbuilded goes?
In vain we build the world unless
The builder also grows."

—E. Markham.

Faith in their Chief Executive and all lawfully elected and appointed authority, as the sincere, honest, and capable human representatives of Thy divine authority benignly established to promote our human happiness and to protect and defend our divine and natural rights and liberties; faith in their august organization, the House of Representatives, whose integrity, honesty, loyalty and deathless devotion to duty constitute it the palladium of the people's privileges and the defender of the Nation's rights to such a recognized degree of selfless service that both their personal and professional actions will give a satisfying and solacing answer to the heartfelt and soul-stirring prayer of today's masses:

"God give us men; times like these demand
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hand.
Men whom the lust of office does not kill,
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy,
Men who have honor, men who will not lie,
Men who can stand before a demagog,
And down his treacherous flatteries without winking,
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog,
In public duty and private thinking.
For, while the rabble with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their little deeds
Mingle in selfish strife, lo, freedom weeps, Wrong rules the world and waiting justice sleeps."

—J. C Holland.

Faith in themselves as specially selected men and women so God-blessed with the courage of their convictions and so convinced of their courage that their courage, convictions, sincerity, loyalty, and honesty become a spectacle to the world, to angels, and to men, causing them to see and respect and reverence the same spiritual, national, personal, and professional character qualities in their fellow members, whether as allies or opponents.

Finally, faith in the happy hope of procuring that priceless promise of the divine Legislator—"Well done, thou faithful servant, because thou hast been faithful in a few things, I will place thee over many," which promise the priest, poet, and patriot, Abram Ryan, so beautifully sang—

"Better than grandeur better than gold,
Than rank and titles a thousandfold,
Is a healthy body and a mind at ease,
And simple pleasures that always please,
A heart that can feel for another's woes
With sympathy large enough to enfold
All men as brethren, is better than gold."

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 5356. An act to provide assistance to the Republic of China in augmenting and maintaining a naval establishment, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6429. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had ordered, That Mr. TYDINGS be excused as a conferee on the part of the Senate to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5452) entitled "Making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances, in one to include a speech delivered by Hon. Hamilton Fish before the Committee on Banking and Currency on the British loan, and in the other to include a speech delivered by William S. Bennet at the John Hay Republican Club in April 1946.

Mr. SCRIVNER asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DOYLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain editorials from a dairying magazine in his district.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LEFEVRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LEFEVRE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION PLANS NO. 1, NO. 2, AND NO. 3

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Concurrent Resolution 155, and I ask unanimous consent that House Concurrent Resolutions 154 and 151 be considered; that the debate be limited on the three resolutions to 3 hours, the time to be divided equally between myself and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments; that after 3 hours of general debate on the resolutions, the resolutions be voted on separately.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, in these 3 hours a Member may talk about any one of the three resolutions.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And that at the end of general debate the resolutions will be voted on separately.

Mr. MANASCO. Each resolution separately.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent also that the plans be voted on in their order, plan 1, first; plan 2, second; and plan 3, third.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is the resolutions that must be voted on.

Mr. MANASCO. That is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. Reserving the right to object, the gentlemen have agreed on time, which is very satisfactory. The only suggestion I have to make is that I hope they do not use the entire 3 hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that there be 3 hours of general debate on these resolutions, at the end of which time the resolutions are to be voted on separately in this order: Plan No. 1, plan No. 2, and plan No. 3.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TUESDAY, JULY 2

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Monday next it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock on Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 685, Rept. No. 2399) providing for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 138 to implement further the purposes of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out an agreement with the United Kingdom, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 138) to implement further the purposes of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out an agreement with the United Kingdom, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said joint resolution are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 16 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 686, Rept. No. 2400) providing for the consideration of H. R. 5234 to authorize the Federal Securtiy Administrator to assist the States in matters relating to social protection, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5234) to authorize the Federal Security Administrator to assist the States in matters relating to social protection, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour and to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently no quorum is present.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 183]

The SPEAKER. On this roll call, 319 Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HERTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a resolution he is introducing.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 1, NO. 2, AND NO. 3

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 155, House Concurrent Resolution 151, and House Concurrent Resolution 154.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Concurrent Resolutions 155, 151, and 154, with Mr. THOMAS of Texas in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolutions.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the resolutions was dispensed with.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, there have been so many comments and criticisms of me in the public press in Washington in the last 10 days about the alleged delay in reporting legislation on the atomic bomb question that I feel it incumbent upon me to make a statement.

I wish to start my statement by saying that most of the comments as to my attitude on the legislation you have read are lies of the whole cloth. I have made diligent and repeated effort to bring the legislation to this House so that the Representatives of the people may, after debate and consideration, work its will.

When the committee first met after 8 months of delay waiting for the Senate, I made three efforts to have the bill reported just as the Senate had passed it, but the committee, in keeping with its customary practice of years' standing, decided they would consider the bill for amendment in the usual way. We have been working on that. We have had 10 days of meetings, and I believe there have been 20 or 25 roll calls in the committee.

I want it understood that what I am saying is not critical of my committee, but in justification of its efforts to bring to this floor legislation on this subject that you may consider. The committee is meeting at 7 o'clock tonight in an effort to report the bill out. My committee more than 8 months ago reported favorably a bill that had the unqualified support of the War and Navy Departments, and that bill still lingers on the calendar of this House. The reason for the delay was to await action by the Senate, and the bill we are considering came here and was promptly taken up by your Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that as many Members as possible will stay on the floor and hear the arguments presented on both sides of this question. Due to the press of business it is impossible for us to devote as much time as we would like for the consideration of these reorganization plans.

On December 20, 1945, the President signed the Reorganization Act of 1945. The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments held extensive hearings in October and November of 1945.

Mr. Chairman, we all realize that the Federal Government has grown in such proportions that it is absolutely necessary for some reorganization to take place in order to reduce expenditures and increase efficiency in Federal agencies. We also realize that it is very important that many bureaus and independent agencies be placed under Cabinet heads in order to take off the tremendous load that our President is under at the present time and has been for some time in an effort to administer properly the Federal agencies. We realize the Congress cannot or will not reorganize the executive departments and as evidenced by these resolutions will not permit the President to do so.

When we passed that bill we hoped that the President would immediately send up some reorganization plans which would carry out the objectives of section 2 of the Reorganization Act. So far as I know the representatives of the Bureau of the Budget did not consult any Member of the Congress about the reorganizations before the President transmitted them. Among those objectives were the following:

To reduce expenditures and promote economy to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government.

To increase the efficiency of the operations of the Government to the fullest extent practicable within the revenues;

To group, coordinate, and consolidate agencies and functions of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major purposes;

To reduce the number of agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and to abolish such agencies or functions as may not be necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government; and

To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort.

We had hoped that they could reduce administrative expenses by 25 percent, but I never thought they could for the only way to reduce expenditures is to cut off employees or reduce wages and you run into opposition to either course.

On May 16 the President submitted three reorganization plans to the Congress. Reorganization plan No. 1 contained, among other things, a reorganization of the housing agencies. In 1942, under the War Powers Act, the President issued an Executive order consolidating some 13 housing agencies that had grown up over a period of years. Some of them were in the building business, some in the rental business, some insuring loans. The agency was known as the National Housing Agency.

We had hoped that in this reorganization plan all similar functions would be consolidated. It was the opinion of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments that reorganization plan No. 1 violated the Reorganization Act of 1945 in that it tended to extend the functions of this Agency beyond the duration of the war and 6 months thereafter. I doubt the validity of that argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the committee also objected to this plan on the ground that it abolished the Federal Housing Administration, the agency recognized by the Congress and by the general public as being the one agency in the Federal housing program that believes in home ownership by individuals. The committee was also of the opinion that this agency should not be placed under the head of an organization the primary purpose of which was the construction of homes for Federal ownership and Federal operation.

The committee feared that if this reorganization plan went into effect that the encouragement given by the Federal Housing Administration and other lending agencies to individuals to build their own homes would be dampened by the National Housing Agency. For that reason the committee asks the House to reject reorganization plan No. 1.

Reorganization plan No. 2 contains, among other things, a provision for the abolition of the Employees' Compensation Commission. It was the opinion of the committee that that part of the plan was in violation of section 5(a), subsection 6, which prohibited the abolition of quasi-judicial agencies in the reorganization plans.

The Federal Employees Compensation Commission is a bipartisan board, and it was the opinion of the committee that bipartisan boards should not be abolished by reorganization plans. If they are to be abolished, it was the opinion of the committee that the Congress itself should do it by direct action. As far as I recall, that was the only objection to reorganization plan No. 2.

Let me advise the House that under the terms of the Reorganization Act you cannot amend these reorganization plans. You must either vote them up or vote them down.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Is the Employees Compensation Commission one of the independent agencies that was originally exempted from the basic Reorganization Act last before us by the report of the committee?

Mr. MANASCO. It was not exempted in the Reorganization Act of 1945. It is my understanding that it was exempted in the Reorganization Act of 1939.

Mr. HALLECK. But the gentleman's committee, in its original proposal, in the bill as reported, exempted certain of the independent agencies.

Mr. MANASCO. That is correct. They did exempt certain independent agencies, and it was the opinion of the committee that the provision of section 5, which exempted quasi-judicial agencies, also exempted the Employees' Compensation Commission. The Employees' Compensation Commission has been recognized by the Congress and the courts for some time as being a quasi-judicial body.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman has stated that the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is recognized as a quasi-judicial body by the Congress. As a matter of fact, it is recognized as such by the Supreme Court of the United States. As such, it must be exempted from any reorganization plan proposed by the Chief Executive. Plan No. 2 violates section 5 (a) (6) of the Reorganization Act because, as an agency exercising quasi-judicial functions, the Commission no longer could give the collective three-member bipartisan judgment upon cases which the present law requires; in fact, the Commission would be abolished. Moreover, under the plan, a super appeals board would have power to veto the exercise of judgment which the present Compensation Act authorizes. The "limitation on judgment" which the Reorganization Act forbids is apparent.

Mr. MANASCO. That is right.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RIVERS. Does the United States Employees' Compensation Commission also administer longshoremen's compensation?

Mr. MANASCO. That is correct.

The main objection that the committee had to plan No. 3 was because it transferred the Marine Inspection Service permanently from the Department of Commerce to the Coast Guard, where it should be, for the Coast Guard is charged with the safety of people who are shipwrecked on our coast and should be charged with the seaworthiness of seagoing vessels. Of course, I do not know whether that is such an important thing, but the other matter was the weakening of St. Elizabeths Hospital. Our colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] is more informed on that particular question than am I, and he will be able to explain to the House why the committee objected to that particular provision.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any saving at all in these three reorganization plans?

Mr. MANASCO. When the Director of the Budget appeared before the committee, that question was asked him several times, and we never could get an answer from him that it would save anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER].

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, I will try to not take more than just a few minutes, because I know that time is of pressing importance. First I want to say that I appreciate the courtesy of the House leadership in cooperating with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO] in bringing up these three resolutions: House Concurrent Resolution 151, House Concurrent Resolution 154, and House Concurrent Resolution 155. Each resolution seeks to repeal, in effect, one of the reorganization plans submitted by the administration on May 16 of this year.

The act of 1940 provides that unless both branches of Congress within 60 days after a reorganization plan has been submitted to the Congress affirmatively disapprove the plan, the plan then becomes law, with the same force and effect as though it had been passed by a roll-call vote in the House and in the Senate. The 60 days is fast expiring. If I figure correctly, on the 14th or 15th of July, unless this body disapproves any one or all three of these plans—and I hope it disapproves all three of them—and unless the other body does likewise, then that plan becomes a law.

Mr. Chairman, the resolutions which I have introduced disapproving these plans ought to pass, because the Members of Congress have not had an opportunity to give study and consideration to these complicated reorganization plans. This is very important. The Members are busy with many, many things, and the Members of the House have much to do. What happened? The administrative agencies—and I do not criticize the President, because he has to act through his administrative agencies, but what I say is directed at the administrative agencies—had from the 20th of December to take such time as they wanted to bring before this House at the earliest possible moment any reorganization plan in which they were interested. What did they do? They waited from the 20th of December until the 16th day of May, a time when the party leadership of this House was beginning to talk about an adjournment during the summer months.

It seems to me in the interest of good legislation that it is not unfair to suggest that this House ought to adopt these Concurrent Resolutions, 151, 154, and 155, and let this matter go over until the new Congress convenes in January, when the administrative agencies can submit their proposed legislation early in the session and not late in the session, so that Congress can study the complications and the effect of the proposed plans and give proper consideration to them.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The gentleman says that Members of Congress have not had an opportunity to study these plans. I find that the committee of which the gentleman is a distinguished member has held hearings that run to 341 pages, and that this committee, having studied these plans, recommends their disapproval. That is the same sort of consideration we give to other legislation. The only question is whether we are going to follow the recommendations of a committee that has given exhaustive study to these plans.

Mr. PITTENGER. May I correct the gentleman by saying that I am not a member of that distinguished committee. Otherwise, the gentleman's remarks are correct.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. How much more time does the gentleman believe Congress would require to determine that plan No. 2 is clearly in violation of the Constitution?

Mr. PITTENGER. May I say to the gentleman, who is a very able and learned student of the law, that other Members of the House have said the same thing about plans Nos. 1 and 3, and I think they are correct. All violate the law.

Referring to the remarks of my distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. VORYS], what we say is this, and this is an added reason why these resolutions should be adopted. Just as soon as I made application to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO], the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, he cooperated 100 percent by calling his committee together, by arranging for hearings, and by conducting hearings.

I was not present at all of these meetings although I attended several of them. It is significant that the members of the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments, men of ability and standing in this House and men whose judgment you respect and in whom you have confidence, after hearing the testimony and after studying the plans by a vote which unofficially has been reported to be 11 to 3, voted to report favorably on the Pittenger resolution, which in effect is an unfavorable action on reorganization plan 1, reorganization plan 2, and reorganization plan 3. The committee has set forth, probably not as elaborately as you and I might do after more lengthy study, some objections to these plans in the committee reports which accompany these House concurrent resolutions. If you have not done so, I would urge you to talk to Mr. MANASCO, to Judge WHITTINGTON, to Mr. BENDER, to Mr. CHURCH, to Mr. JUDD, and to Mr. HENRY, all members of the committee who were regular in attendance at these meetings and who approached these plans without any prejudice but solely with a desire to report to this House information on which the House could act.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. If these resolutions should fail, it would mean that the country would then have a permanent housing administration; is that not correct?

Mr. PITTENGER. I have been told that is absolutely correct. That is the effect and the purpose, although I do not think any Government agency can be justified that way, but the purpose of plan No. 1 would be permanently to put the Government in the housing business.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. JUDD. On May 31 the Director of the Budget, Mr. Smith, wrote to the chairman of our committee, and on page 2 in the second paragraph in talking about the changes in this reorganization plan he says: "Among these are the provisions which make permanent the National Housing Agency." There is the Director of the Budget speaking. There is no authorization for that in law whatsoever.

Mr. PITTENGER. I do not think there is any question about the correctness of my colleague's statement.

I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. I want to go on record as being opposed to making such an agency permanent. That seems to me to be one place where the Government should not intrude any further into the privacy of American life.

Mr. PITTENGER. In one way or another all three plans have that same legal defect—making wartime agencies permanent.

I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HENRY. Is it not true that if it does make permanent the National Housing Agency that is in direct conflict with the intent of the original reorganization law as it was passed?

Mr. PITTENGER. I do not think there is any question about that. I think all three of these plans violate some provision of the act which Congress passed last year. I supported that Reorganization Act. I did so because I believed that these Government agencies ought to be consolidated instead of expanded. You have just the opposite in these plans. Here and there, they have a couple of little sections and, in my opinion, if they put them together they do not even need a reorganization plan to do it.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. Is my memory not correct that when we supported that resolution the argument was that it would reduce the number of bureaus and agencies rather than create new ones?

Mr. PITTENGER. I will say to my colleague that is the reason I supported the reorganization or consolidation plans, as I recall it, first under Mr. Hoover and then under Mr. Roosevelt. I announced last summer a year ago that I was going to support the President's reorganization plan in the hope that he would give us some real reorganization plan. But they have fallen short of the purpose of the law.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to plan No. 1, section 501:

> National Housing Agency: The agencies and functions of the National Housing Agency established under the First War Powers Act, 1941 (55 Stat. 838), by Executive Order No. 9070 of February 24, 1942, are consolidated to form a permanent agency of the same name.

Can there be any doubt of the intent to create a permanent housing agency?

Mr. PITTENGER. I think one of the representatives of one of the bureaus used a lot of words, but I do not believe he explained away the objections that my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania has raised. Let me say in a little different way that plan No. 2 and plan No. 3 have in them the same elements of danger. They are not properly prepared.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, these plans are a regrouping of existing agencies, some created by law, others created by Executive order. There is no worth-while elimination. No economy is claimed. The real effect will be to give permanency to Executive orders which were made in the first instance as war necessities. We certainly should be timid before giving life and vitality permanently to all of these war agencies.

Mr. PITTENGER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. When our committee was in Moscow we held a conference with Mr. Andrei Vyshinsky. We asked him how the Soviet system functioned in a legislative capacity. He said the executive department agrees on policy and then comes to the Presidium for ratification. There is something strangely analogous to that procedure and the one we are called upon to ratify this afternoon.

Mr. PITTENGER. I will say if you will study these plans you will find they are a step in the direction of having legislation by Executive decree. That was not the purpose of the act of 1945.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield.

Mr. MANASCO. I think we should clear up one thing in these statements. If the reorganization plan is defeated and the War Powers Act expires, we will still have certain housing functions that were created by act of Congress.

Mr. PITTENGER. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. MANASCO. They will go back like the United States Housing Authority, and various others that were established by the Congress, and this plan will not have an effect on those.

Mr. PITTENGER. That is correct. You do not affect any of the existing housing agencies passed under law. You have got all that even though you defeat plan numbered 1.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. Did the committee make any findings as to the desirability of transferring the Bureau of Marine and Fisheries Inspection to the Coast Guard?

Mr. PITTENGER. I talked to one of the members of the committee and I am told that that failure to comment on that was an oversight; probably a little confusion. I will say to the gentleman that I have very decided views on that subject. I think that is one of the objectives that the committee passed on when they reported adversely to plan numbered 3. I will say that the shipping interests, the merchant marine, and seamen's unions, appeared before the committee and opposed reorganization plan No. 3. They do not want to remain under the Coast Guard. They want to be returned to the Department of Commerce. I hope you read the testimony of John Hawk, an official of the Seafarers International Union, of New York City. He pointed out very ably the objections to Reorganization Plan No. 3. This plan ought to be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, it was former President Hoover who remarked:

> Proposals for reorganization of the Federal Government always prove to be the signal for the mobilization of opposition from all quarters, which has destroyed the possibility of constructive action.

An editorial in the Washington (D. C.) Star correctly observes that—

> Insofar as the mobilization of opposition is concerned the observation is as true today as it was when Mr. Hoover was having difficulty in obtaining congressional cooperation in his reorganization program. President Truman's threefold plan for administrative reform has collided head on with opposition from the House Committee on Expenditures. There are indications that the House will follow the committee's advice and disapprove the plan. The committee's action in turn reflects the opposition voiced by sundry groups and individuals against various phases of the President's program.

The three-part presidential recommendation called for a consolidation of Federal housing agencies, a merger of welfare activities and a series of interagency functional shifts—all for the announced purpose of promoting administrative efficiency, eliminating duplication of effort and saving money. Mr. Truman made no claim that his proposals were perfect or all-inclusive. To a large extent, however, they did meet in part the demands which repeatedly have been made at the Capitol for a businesslike reorganization of the executive machinery. The Joint Committee on Nonessential Expenditures, for example, advised President Truman last November that a "multiplicity of agencies" were doing "identical, similar, or related" work, as in the case of the housing field, where there are 22 units in 11 different agencies.

We are seeing again an evidence of the view expressed many years ago by a Chief Executive of this country. Under the plea of my beloved colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER] and those who join with him, we are requested at this time to thwart the efforts not of a Democratic President but of a reorganization ideal that was first expressed in the request of President Hoover, again urged by President Roosevelt, and now in the third instance brought forward by President Truman. It is important for the membership to recall what a former member of this body, a very able one, said. I refer to the Comptroller General, Lindsay C. Warren.

We know—

from past experience, indeed from sad experience, in this body that the Congress will never of its own accord and of its own initiative reorganize the Government of the Nation.

I think it might be appropriate to call to your attention the words of Secretary of State James F. Byrnes, when he was a Member of Congress. He said:

I have yet to talk with reference to reorganization to one man in the Government service who did not make this answer: "I know it should be done, but" and then when he joins the great old order of "butters" you will find that he says: "Do not touch my department, do not touch my bureau, do not touch my division."

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman will admit that nobody in the committee had any objection to 23 or 24 of the 28 reorganization moves. The gentleman will admit that, will he not?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think the membership of the committee largely agrees with reorganization but——

Mr. JUDD. Therefore, we were not against reorganization, we were against four particular things which would not cut down, but extend. We favored the 24 that make some real reorganization along the line of the law passed by Congress. If we pass these resolutions and send them back to the President and he deletes those four or five, they will come back and go through automatically. We cannot accept the reorganization the way it has been submitted because there is no real saving achieved.

Mr. RANDOLPH. We talk reorganization but we fail to act. No legislation is perfect. We cannot get all we individually desire in these matters. My thinking goes to something deeper and that is the preservation of our democracy, our responsible Government, using the best connotation of the expression, and likewise the maintenance of a system of executive organization and administration which is effective and which functions as economically as possible. Although technically the gentleman from Minnesota is correct in saying "Yes, we agree with most of them but not with all," but then you come here against the proposition. We should meet the impact of this challenge.

My colleagues, we act unwisely if we turn down plan 1, or 2, or 3, or all of them, when for the first time really under any administration, and I refer not to a Democratic or a Republican leadership, this Congress, responsive to the will of the American people, attempts to put the executive house in order——

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. BARDEN. With reference to the quotation from the present Comptroller General, Lindsay C. Warren, I think that if the gentleman will refer back to that debate he will find that in that very reorganization bill that Mr. Warren presented to the House he made some very notable and very wide exceptions and the House responded and approved those exceptions. One of them I happen to recall was the United States Army engineers. At that time there was considerable agitation to put the Army engineers in the Interior Department; and I am not so sure that the gentleman would not agree with me that it would be a right unwise thing to have done at that time. The facts and circumstances that have taken place since made it such.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Of course, if the gentleman is referring to individuals, I do not desire to enter that realm of discussion because I submit my argument today on the plans themselves and what is contemplated for the better functioning of our Federal agencies. Mr. Chairman, to return to my theme I shall emphatically say that nothing in any plan changes the substance of any governmental program. Charges were made before the committee that the rights and privileges of citizens would be adversely affected; the plans make no changes which decrease such rights. The sole effect is to adopt or continue organizational arrangements which will permit the more effective conduct of governmental activities which have been authorized by the Congress. The organizational changes proposed in each case meet one or more of the requirements imposed by Congress of promoting increased efficiency, reducing overlapping and duplication of effort, consolidating agencies and functions according to major purpose, reducing the number of agencies, and promoting economy.

I shall be very happy to yield to those Members standing, but I have only a short time because of limitation of debate. I am not sure I can add to the intelligent reflections which the House would take after I have spoken. I shall go into these plans 1, 2, and 3, in the hope that the purposes of both opponents and proponents may be better served than if I am interrupted. But the discussion even in that manner will of necessity be brief.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER] makes a case for the opposition in an over-all way. Of course, it will be supplemented and expanded by others. He says he is in full agreement with the need of reorganization but that the plans should be rejected due to lack of study up to the present time of the proposals. In refutation of that statement, I may say that although we may not agree, each and every reorganization plan by the President has been carefully considered. In eight instances the plans make permanent organizational changes which have been in existence for many, many years, and full opportunity has been available to judge the wisdom of the arrangements that have been made. In cases involving new consolidations or transfers almost every item has a considerable background of study, both in the departments and agencies which originally proposed the action, and in the Bureau of the Budget and in the staff attached to the Presidential office.

There should be none of these items which should be rejected alone on the basis that further study is required. On the contrary, if full advantage is to be taken of the possibilities for economy and increased efficiency which are apparent, I believe, in the plans under consideration, they should be approved so that we can at the beginning of the next fiscal year start on an improved basis.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER], before our committee and in the House, speaks against the plans and says they will not consolidate and eliminate agencies. When a man makes that statement and nobody answers it, we can believe, at least, that he stands on ground that no one desires to oppose. Some of the items in the plans will yield immediate economies by the abolition of jobs and functions and in the long run will make possible the continuance in the postwar years of organizational arrangements which have proved their effectiveness under the stress of war. While no new economies result from this type of action, no one can deny that additional confusion and expense would be entailed if these organizations were to be broken up, and if six of the major departments and agencies of the Government were to be forced to abandon purely organizational arrangements which they adopted for reasons of increased economy and efficiency and which have proven to be practical over a period of several years.

Let us take them one by one. Plan No. 1 does abolish the office of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippines and the Office of Contract Settlement. In both of these instances savings, therefore, can be effected, because they will be attributable directly to the abolition of the two offices.

Let us go to plan No. 2. We abolish the Social Security Board, and we abolish the Employees' Compensation Commission.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has referred to the abolition of the office of High Commissioner to the Philippines. It would seem to me that after July 4 there will not be any need for a High Commissioner to the Philippines, because the Philippines will then become independent.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman has mentioned another instance of the abolition of an office, namely, the Office of Contract Terminations. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this is an agency consisting of an administrator and three clerks, the work of which has been 98 percent completed.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I did not say the degree in which savings will be effected, but said they would be abolished and there would be economies.

I continue with plan No. 2. We abolish not only the Social Security Board and the Employees' Compensation Commission, but we abolish the Board of Vocational Rehabilitation and the Board of Visitors to St. Elizabeths Hospital. We also consolidate the functions of the Employees' Compensation Commission, the Children's Bureau, and the Bureau of Vital Statistics and other activities of the Bureau of the Census into the Federal Security Agency.

I will ask the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Pennsylvania if these agencies I have mentioned are not being abolished.

Mr. WALTER. Yes; they are being abolished in name only. However, an illegal attempt is being made to impose the duties of those agencies in a place where they are unable to perform them.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Oh, let us be reasonable. We know direct savings should result from the abolition of the Social Security Board. No substantial sums are involved in either the Board of Vocational Rehabilitation or the Board of Visitors of St. Elizabeths so that no appreciable savings can be claimed for these items. While the functions consolidated in the Federal Security Agency may not immediately reflect savings in their administrative costs, some savings should certainly be reflected over a long term. More important than this, however, a greater return in terms of program effectiveness and service to the public should be received for each dollar spent under this regrouping of functions.

Plan No. 3 consolidates the Grazing Service in the General Land Office into a Bureau of Land Management in the Department of the Interior, consolidates the Paymaster General and Quartermaster General of the Marine Corps into a Supply Department, consolidates the administration of minerals on agricultural lands in the Department of the Interior, consolidated certain housekeeping functions at Hyde Park, makes possible the continued consolidation of certain functions of various bureaus in the Department of Agriculture into the Production and Marketing Administration, abolishes the Canal Zone Biological Area and consolidates its functions in the Smithsonian Institution.

The consolidations in the Interior Department and the Marine Corps will definitely result in direct savings. The other consolidations may result in savings. Each of these consolidations will result in increased efficiency and greater service from the dollars spent.

Aside from these direct abolitions and direct consolidations, the plan—as just noted—provides for the maintenance of several organizational arrangements which have worked well for several years. Unless the plan is approved, these arrangements must be broken up; and great confusion and inefficiency for a period of time will inevitably develop. That is particularly true in case of the National Housing Agency, Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, National Observatory and Hydrographic Office, and the supervision of credit unions.

In summary the contention of the opponents that the plan does not contain the consolidations and eliminations of agencies, is patently untrue. I recall that Representative PITTENGER referred, in his remarks, that the increased costs of plan No. 2 could be figured in terms of tens of millions of dollars in the program of the Federal Security Agency.

This statement is absolutely wrong. Mr. PITTENGER and others were referring to the increased appropriations for old-age assistance and public health grants to the States recommended for 1947 as compared to 1946. Obviously, neither of these programs are involved in the reorganization plan. The fact that a substantive program of the Federal Security Agency which is primarily a grant to the States is increasing in cost has nothing to do with these proposals.

I think it is important that in plan No. 1 we check back just a moment to the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER] in reference to making temporary wartime emergency housing projects permanent. I believe that no wartime emergency housing projects are made permanent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I believe that we in no way alter any of the basic legislation which has been enacted by this Congress. I know that is true. We have not done so.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. O'NEAL. I inquired of the Housing Expediter, Mr. Wilson Wyatt, as to his opinion with reference to making this a permanent agency, and with the gentleman's permission I would like to read one paragraph:

> Only two real arguments have been advanced against reorganization plan No. 1.
> The first of these is that it violates the provision of the reorganization law which prohibits the making permanent of a temporary agency. In reality, reorganization plan No. 1 does not make any temporary agency permanent. It does not continue any function or activity beyond the term specified by statute. It merely makes permanent a consolidation which was effected during the the war under the First War Powers Act.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I feel the gentleman is correct and I believe the opinion he has read is of benefit to the House in resolving the question.

In the minute and a half I have remaining I pose the question once again to my colleagues. Those who served under the two previous Chief Executives, Mr. Hoover and Mr. Roosevelt, have said that we are in favor of reorganization. In the first instance, when the measure was finally brought to the floor many exemptions were written into it. Then again in 1937 through 1939 there were fewer exemptions contained in the legislation. When we passed in 1945 the third reorganization legislation only a few exemptions crept into the measure. We thus indicated that by and large there was an increasing tendency in the Congress of the United States to show that individually and collectively there was a belief in reorganization. In 1932, 1937 through 1939, in 1945, and now in 1946 we meet this problem.

Having admitted our failure to do the job of reorganization, having by mandate of the Congress told the President of the United States, "We desire you to take affirmative steps," when the first three plans are sent to this Congress, are we going to say not only to the President but to the country, "We have admitted our failure to act. We put the burden into the hands and on the shoulders of someone else, and now, on the first occasion when plans come to us we weakly respond, 'Mr. President, we cannot approve'?" I do not believe the country is going to appreciate such an answer.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from West Virginia, may I say that neither the Reorganization Act of 1939, nor the First War Powers Act, nor the Reorganization Act of 1945 conferred any semblance of authority on the President to create new agencies. Indeed, the latter in express terms forbids it.

What was the purpose of this Reorganization Act that we passed on October 20, 1945? The express purpose of that act was to save the taxpayers' money, not to substitute new departments but to eliminate departments, to take people off the Government pay roll and to reduce the cost of government. That was written right in this bill.

Let me read from the act that passed on December 20 this language:

> The Congress declares that the public interest demands the carrying out of the purposes specified in subsection (a).
> It is the expectation of the Congress that the transfers, coordinations, and abolitions under this act shall accomplish an over-all reduction of at least 25 percent in the administrative costs of the agency or agencies affected.

The act that was passed in December of 1945 states in so many words that the cost of government must be reduced by at least 25 percent. When the Director of the Budget, Mr. Smith, appeared before the committee and I questioned him as to how much would be saved by these reorganization plans, he said, and his testimony is here and I can read it to you, that this was not even considered by the Bureau of the Budget when they adopted these three plans.

It is an amazing thing for the Director of the Budget to say that he had not even considered a reduction in the cost of Government. All of us here are aware of the fact that everywhere throughout the country the taxpayers are sick and tired of being welfared and inspected and wet-nursed from Washington.

They want it stopped. They want the cost of government reduced. Here, instead of reducing the cost of government, we are increasing the cost of government by over $546,000,000 as the 1947 Budget will indicate. These three plans are a part of that increase in the cost of the civil functions of government. I do not know of any individual who appeared before our committee who could stand up and be questioned and who could support an argument that this would bring about any kind of economy.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. What will be accomplished by the proposed consolidation in the Department of Agriculture? I understand that by this proposed plan No. 3 the functions of certain agencies of the Department of Agriculture are hereby transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture. And it refers to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Surplus Marketing Administration, the Commodity Credit Corporation, and the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation. What economies will be effected by that?

Mr. BENDER. No economies would be effected except more control would be given to certain individuals who want more control and who want to control these agencies—for what purposes I do not know except that they want to be big shots.

Mr. COOLEY. Would the personnel be reduced any?

Mr. BENDER. The personnel would be increased by all three of these plans. The personnel would be substantially increased, except in two or three minor instances. Now what in the world did we pass a reorganization plan for other than to reduce the cost of government? Every Member of Congress runs on a platform of reduced cost of government. You know we owe approximately $285,000,000,000 in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

You know we cannot go on indefinitely spending two or three times as much tax money as we put into the till of the Federal Government. Mr. Smith and all other members of the administration who appeared before us did not offer testimony in support of these plans claiming a reduction in the cost of government. What did you have in mind, any of you, when you voted for this reorganization plan last year? If you will read the hearings on that plan and if you will read what happened on the floor of the House and in committee when that plan was passed, you will find that everyone who spoke on this reorganization plan said they were interested in economy. Of course, we want efficiency and we do not want to stop anything that would improve the efficient operation of the Government even if it does cost a little more money. But this does not improve the efficient operation of the Government. It impedes the efficient operation of the Government.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. Was there any testimony before your committee that would indicate an increase in the cost of government in the event that these reorganization plans were adopted?

Mr. BENDER. Only the figures that were prepared for members of the committee by experts who analyzed the effect and the cost of these plans and in all but two or three minor instances there is a substantial increase in the cost of the Government in the event these plans become effective.

Mr. KEEFE. I was interested in asking that question because of the interrogation of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] who is now on his feet, wherein he indicated a few moments ago that the committee was unanimous on all of the suggestions in these three reorganization plans with the exception of some four or five of the proposals. As to all of the proposals except those four or five, the committee was in accord with the suggestions of the President that those reorganizations should take place. That is what I understood him to say.

Mr. BENDER. I say to the gentleman the contrary is true.

I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. JUDD. If I said that, I did not give the impression that I wanted to give. I said our major objection to the plans was because of four or five of the proposals and that there might be greater efficiency achieved by many of these other transfers. But I asked Mr. SMITH over and over again, trying to get some evidence that this would actually save any money and he would not give us a figure. So that they do not achieve the purpose, although the other 24 do not violate the terms of the act.

Mr. KEEFE. I was prompted to ask the question because I was rather astounded at what I understood the plain import of the gentleman's statement, which was agreed to by the gentleman from West Virginia, that the committee was in unanimous accord as to all of these proposals with the exception of four or five items. If that is true, then it ought to call for some explanation.

Mr. BENDER. At no time was there any evidence of any real enthusiasm on the part of the members of the committee for any one of these plans, either on the Republican or the Democratic side. As a matter of fact, with the exception of one member of the committee, who rather weakly supported some of the provisions of this plan, no other member of the committee appeared to show any enthusiasm for that plan.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. As a matter of fact, there were dozens of witnesses, groups, and organizations from all over the country in opposition to all three plans.

Mr. BENDER. That is right.

Now, in connection with plan No. 1, the Housing Agency, which I supported and which I believe is a temporary Agency and has done some good things—they are making that Agency a permanent branch of the Government. Do you want to do that? If you do, vote for this plan. If you want some of these war agencies made permanent, if you want to keep these office buildings occupied with thousands of employees on the Federal pay roll, go ahead and vote for the plans. But if you believe your own campaign statements back home, that you want this Government to be operated economically and that you want to save money, you cannot possibly vote for any one of these plans. The whole purpose of this reorganization business was to reduce the cost of Government. Now, after 6 months' time the Bureau of the Budget writes these three plans. I think they were written by Mr. Appleby of the Bureau of the Budget. I think they were handed to the President. I am not criticizing the President at all. I think the Bureau of the Budget is in error. I think they did not read the law when they prepared these plans. If they had read the law they would have had some testimony to offer, revealing that the cost of Government would be reduced 25 percent.

Mr. PITTENGER. And when they abolished the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, right away they created an appeal board of three members. They not only do not reduce the number of employees but they increase them.

Mr. BENDER. They increased them and provided fat salaries.

Now, do we want to pass another unconstitutional law here? That plan in connection with the employees' fund is wholly out of order, and wholly illegal.

Mr. PITTENGER. And they abolish the Social Security Board and appoint somebody else to function there, and take away from the Board any security, any independence, so that it can decide cases that come before it free from political interference. It is a bipartisan board.

Mr. BENDER. Not only that, but they increased the cost of the operation of that agency by $12,000,000. Now, if you want to increase the cost of these agencies, go ahead and vote for this plan. Is there anyone on this floor who will offer testimony to the effect that these plans will reduce the cost of Government one thin dime?

I have great respect for my good friend the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]. He and I are on the same side of the fence most of the time on this committee. I am surprised that he did not appear before the committee and offer this testimony and show such enthusiasm for these plans.

He did not voice the sentiments there as he is voicing them today. If he had voiced them he would have been the only Member to have voiced these opinions. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANDOLPH. And the hearings will show that I did voice my belief in the plans during the testimony of the witnesses, particularly when the gentleman from Atlanta, Mr. West, was testifying.

Mr. BENDER. Yes; I want to correct my statement to that extent and say that the gentleman was active in the committee. The gentleman is one of the most active members of our committee.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Then the gentleman from West Virginia agrees with the statement of the Speaker here that the National Housing Administration under plan No. 1 would be made a permanent agency of the Government.

Mr RANDOLPH No; I disagree with that, and so stated in my remarks. They are reaffirmed, however, by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. COOLEY. How can the gentleman take that position in view of the very language which states that the agencies and functions of the National Housing Administration established under the Second War Powers Act are consolidated to form a permanent agency of the same name?

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield that I may answer that question?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to my chairman.

Mr. MANASCO. I think it is unfortunate that that statement was contained in the transmittal of this plan, that the National Housing Agency is being made a permanent organization.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MANASCO. That statement is unfortunate on the part of the Administration because when the National Housing Agency was created it was created to consolidate agencies that had already been created by Congress. It would have been better had the plan said that these consolidated agencies were already created by act of Congress and merely grouped together under the Second War Powers Act under the name United States Housing Agency. I do not think there would have been any objection to that part of it. I do not think most of the members of our committee object to a continuance of the functions but they objected to the abolition of the Federal Housing Administration and putting it under the National Housing Agency or any other agency.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman agree that this plan seeks to make it a permanent agency?

Mr. MANASCO. I think that plan is unfortunate. If they had drawn it properly it would not have caused so much objection but it does make the agency permanent. The opinion of the committee was that it does not extend the Second War Powers Act.

Mr. BENDER. This not only makes that agency permanent but makes all these agencies and bureaus and departments created by Executive order permanent agencies of Government. That is what these plans do.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the dean of the Ohio delegation.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman knows that in the State of Ohio the building and loan companies are outstanding in the State and are the greatest building force in the State. They are firmly convinced that this will be permanent and will seriously handicap them in their activities.

Mr. BENDER. And they represent a pretty substantial section of the common people.

Mr. JENKINS. They represent over 2,000,000 people in our State.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. I call attention to this further statement in the report which says that these agencies and functions will constitute a permanent organization and further I quote from Harold Smith's own letter:

> Among these are the provisions to make permanent the National Housing Agency.

How can the gentleman say that it is not going to be permanent?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I refer the gentleman to the statement I have placed emphasis on in the minority report that I believe the plan carries out the congressional mandate as set forth in the Reorganization Act of 1945 when we specifically used this language:

> To create, coordinate, and consolidate agences and functions as nearly as may be, according to major purposes.

It will bring together within a single agency the major functions of Government relating to housing. I believe that is true.

Mr. COOLEY. And make them permanent.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I do not use the word "permanent" because we do not change any substantive law which has been passed.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman does not but Mr. Smith does and the plan does.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am not speaking for Mr. Smith. It was unfortunate language, I will be frank.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. But the law said that no reorganization plan shall provide for, and no reorganization under this act shall have the effect of, continuing any agency beyond the period authorized by law for its existence or beyond the time when it would have terminated if the reorganization had not been made.

We all know if this reorganization plan is not agreed to this agency will terminate at a certain time. This extends it ad infinitum.

Furthermore, it says that no reorganization plan shall provide for continuing any agency beyond the period authorized by law for its existence and no reorganization plan shall provide for continuing any function beyond the period authorized by law for its exercise. There is no authorization under law for this.

Mr. MANASCO. Under the law we created the United States Housing Authority and other agencies, that were charged with building houses and they will revert back to an independent status. We will have about 12 to 15 such agencies.

Mr. JUDD. But you will not have the National Housing Agency.

Mr. MANASCO. You can call it anything.

Mr. JUDD. There is another limitation. No reorganization shall provide for authorizing any agency to exercise any function which is not expressly authorized by law. This function is not authorized by law. It is under Executive order.

Mr. MANASCO. The functions performed by these war agencies were functions already authorized by law, and then consolidated and grouped together.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. If it would produce a more smoothly functioning operation, why are not these agencies grouped together under the authority given the Chief Executive by the First War Powers Act?

Mr. MANASCO. They are now.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] has used the term "permanent," and our chairman has said that was an unfortunate use of language. Does not the gentleman now addressing the House think that unless the House acts and rejects this plan that the House will be approving the permanency of it; therefore it is necessary to turn down the plan?

Mr. BENDER. I think the gentleman has made a very fine point. In the event we fail to turn down these plans they become part of the law on July 15.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman is equipped now to show the tremendous additional expense and I hope he will use his time to do that. I want to make another comment. The gentleman does know the contempt almost that some of the witnesses had for the subsection (c) of section 2 of the act which says:

It is the expectation of the Congress that the transfers, consolidations, coordinations, and abolitions under this act shall accomplish an over-all reduction of at least 25 per centum in the administrative cost of the agency or agencies affected.

I hope the gentleman will bring out before he leaves the floor these tremendous additional expenditures.

Mr. BENDER. I will be glad to make them a part of the record. It will take too much time to present the figures at the present time. Our time is too limited.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Because there has been injected into each one of these plans something that is not apparent to the eye of the average Member, does not the gentleman believe the wise thing to do is to defer these matters until the next session of Congress?

Mr. BENDER. Frankly, the wise thing to do is to defeat them, not defer them.

Mr. DONDERO. I mean defeat these plans so that they may be given further consideration later?

Mr. BENDER. Yes.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. This is the same agency, the NHA, and about the same personnel, that brought up a bill which the Congress defeated in 1939, a bill before the Banking and Currency Committee. Most of the Members now on the floor who were Members at that time were so utterly disgusted with the personnel and the way they lobbied Congress and put millions of dollars into projects just to influence votes in the various districts, and all sorts of skulduggery, that I cannot understand how anybody who was here at the time would ever vote for a bill of this kind to put all these good housing agencies under it.

Mr. BENDER. I do not know about the gentlewoman's statement, but I am sure she knows what she is talking about. However, I may say that at no time did the committee consider personalities or inject personalities into this thing. I may add further that the majority of the members of the committee were present when we voted on these plans. Not one of these plans at any time had over 3 votes for it in the committee. The most votes that any one of these plans had were 3 votes, and, you appreciate that the minority party does not control any committee of the House.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. Is it a proper Federal function for the Government to build homes for the people?

Mr. BENDER. I think the gentleman answers that question himself.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. On this question of the National Housing Agency may I read a paragraph from the President's message in which he transmitted reorganization plan No. 1:

I fully recognize that S. 1592, the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill, approved by the Senate on April 12 of this year, provides for the permanent organization of the housing activities of the Government along the lines set forth in this plan. However, since the House must act before S. 1592 can become law, and because of the heavy legislative schedule now facing the House, it is difficult to foretell when such action can be expected. On the other hand, action by the President, taken under the authority of the Reorganization Act, assures decision on the matter in 60 days.

Therefore the President has taken over the legislative function. If we had passed the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill and it was law, then he would have a right to reorganize, because he would have a National Housing Agency expressly authorized by law. He thinks we are too slow, so he is going about it in this way. He says:

It also seems desirable to confirm under this reorganization plan as many as possible of the organization changes that were effected under the First War Powers Act, 1941, and that it seems desirable to make permanent.

I do not know how anybody can get away from the language of the intent of the President.

Mr. BENDER. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. This morning one of the distinguished Members of the other body testified before the Committee on Banking and Currency on the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill. As I understood him, while urging the passage of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill, he pointed out that the approach made through this Presidential plan No. 1 was entirely different from that contained in the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill in that it did not preserve the autonomy and independence of these various housing agencies as the authors of that bill sought to do. In the plan they placed everything under the control of one Administrator so that he can dictate the policies and actions of each one of these subsidiary agencies, and that was one element which they sought to avoid in this very carefully prepared and thought out Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill.

Mr. BENDER. I might add this, that most of the time before our committee on any controversial issue there are many able witnesses who appear in support of programs, but the testimony in support of these programs or these plans, in my humble opinion, was most pitiful.

Let me say this in closing. You have repeatedly heard that great man, Thomas Jefferson, quoted by Members on both sides of the aisle. He said time and time again that "that government is best which governs least." Now, what you are doing here is writing into permanent law temporary agencies, agencies that were created under Executive order, and rather than decreasing the cost of government as you have written into the law on December 25, you are increasing the cost of government; not decreasing it by 25 percent but increasing the cost of government in practically all of these agencies by at least 18 percent.

Mr. DONDERO. And governing more.

Mr. BENDER. That is right. To vote against these three reorganization plans vote for all the Pittenger resolutions.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. WOODHOUSE].

Mrs. WOODHOUSE. Mr. Chairman, both in and out of Congress there has been for years widespread recognition of the need for realining, regrouping, and pruning the agencies and divisions of the administrative branch of the Government to the end of increase in efficiency and decrease in cost. Today the problems facing us are more complex than ever. Today the need for efficient administration is urgent. Today economy in expenditures is imperative. And yet, as we all know, there are far too many independent boards, commissions, and agencies, the heads of which report directly to the President. It is physically impossible, with his other pressing duties, for the President to supervise and coordinate their diverse activities. Moreover, the public is confused by a multiplicity of separate agencies, each dealing with the same general field of activity. Too often it is difficult for us, Members of Congress, to locate the right man in the right agency to deal with a given question. How much more difficult, if not impossible, it is for the pertinent committee and for Congress itself to ascertain where an agency may not be hewing strictly to the program Congress authorized it to administer.

Every factor in the situation points to the urgent need for reorganization. Congress, by the Reorganization Act of 1945, placed upon the President the task of such reorganization.

Today we have the opportunity of taking the first steps toward such reorganization. The three plans before us are far from radical. They deal almost entirely with minor administrative adjustments, many of which have functioned effectively on a temporary basis during the war.

Reorganization plans have been blocked in the past because someone wanted to retain a specific job or because some vested interest might be affected. If we wait for a reorganization plan which will not disturb any person or any group, we will wait in vain. But we cannot afford to wait. We cannot afford to let our governmental machinery break down from sheer weight and disjointedness. Our Government has got to function and function efficiently. The world is watching us for an answer to the question, "Can democracy work?" That may sound dramatic. It is not. It is a cold, hard fact. And in this House today we have to decide whether we want democracy to work or whether we prefer to risk its breakdown in favor of the apparent immediate interest of a special-interest group. And I say apparent interest, because efficient Government machinery is to the real advantage of everyone.

The objection to plan 1 turns on the establishment of a National Housing Agency, which coordinates the activities of some 17 different agencies which were dealing with housing problems at the start of the war. Members who were here at that time will remember that it was practically impossible for Congress to find out what was being done by the Government in housing, let alone to determine what needed to be done. It was a situation of utter confusion.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. WOODHOUSE. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. When the gentlewoman speaks of utter confusion I think it is important that we remember that prior to 1942 that was so, and there came into being a better housing program when we consolidated the various units. I do not think the statement should go unchallenged here that we are setting up new housing agencies or that we are making temporary bureaus permanent. Each and every constituent housing agency which came under the National Housing Agency as a temporary program was authorized by Congress. These were passed prior to our entrance into World War II—each and every agency dealing with housing. We cannot forget that. It was not a temporary program. It was not by directive of the President, but was by authorization of the Congress of the United States prior to the emergency of war.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. WOODHOUSE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. When Congress saw all that confusion at the beginning of the war it knew steps had to be taken to correct it and it therefore passed the War Powers Act giving the President that power. Whether all these agencies are to be consolidated under the NHA during peacetime depends on whether or not the Congress decides to give such power to the President. But we did not give him that power in the Reorganization Act. We specifically withheld from him such power in peacetime. My primary objection to this part of the reorganization plan is that the President is taking action that is not authorized by law. We authorized him to do that in the War Powers Act, but we did not authorize him to do it in the Reorganization Act.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Congress made the agencies permanent.

Mrs. WOODHOUSE. I know from experience as an elected State official in a State rapidly converting to war production, with thousands of war workers pouring into my State, how utterly frustrating and inefficient the situation was. It was always a question of whether it was the Federal Home Loan Bank Board which had jurisdiction over a particular problem, or whether it was the Federal Housing Administration, or the United States Housing Authority, or the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation or the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, or the United States Housing Corporation, or the Defense Homes Corporation, or the Division of Housing Coordination, or the Central Housing Committee, or the Farm Security Administration, or the Public Buildings Administration, or the Mutual Ownership Division of the Federal Works Agency, or perhaps even the War or Navy Department.

The private builders were just as confused. Here is a brief paragraph from a bulletin of the National Association of Real Estate Boards issued shortly after Pearl Harbor, before the temporary wartime consolidation of housing agencies and activities was effected:

> The urgent need of coordinated Federal housing agencies was highlighted last week in hearings before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor when the $50,000,000 District Housing Bill was under consideration. Members of the committee gave up in despair after hearing representatives of 20 different agencies offer a description of how they thought the $50,000,000 for emergency housing in Washington should be spent.

Now compare this situation as it was before the war with our experience under the wartime consolidation of government housing agencies.

First. The difficult war-housing job whose accomplishment had seemed so doubtful was done, and, more important, it was done in time and in a manner which was of worth-while assistance to the war effort.

Second. And especially significant is the fact, first pointed out by the National Association of Home Builders, that, while before the unification of the housing agencies the outlook for private enterprise doing a part of the war housing job was dubious, the simplified and intelligent housing program made possible by unification, in turn made it possible to assign to private enterprise the major part of the war housing job.

These statements do not represent merely my own personal findings. Practically every witness, including representatives of the various trade organizations, who testified before the postwar hearings of the Lanham committee in 1943 and 1944, the hearings of the Senate postwar Committee on Housing and Urban Redevelopment in 1944 and 1945, and the hearings of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee on the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill a few months ago, attested to the excellent results achieved from the wartime consolidation of housing agencies.

Further, in one publication after another during the war period, the various trade organizations interested in housing paid tribute to the accomplishments of the NHA for the job it did, and in a number of cases these very organizations took the initiative in advocating its continuance for the postwar period. Such statements and recommendations were made, to cite several examples, in news letters or other releases of the National Association of Home Builders, the National Association of Real Estate Boards, and the Producers' Council.

There are certain trade organizations who now oppose a National Housing Agency because of their opposition to public housing. Actually, the question of public housing is entirely irrelevant, because the reorganization plan has nothing to do with the substantive housing program. The Congress, and only the Congress, can determine, by specific legislation, the scope of any public housing program undertaken by the Federal Government.

It is significant that over a long period of years many of these trade organizations have strongly favored a unification of the housing activities of the Federal Government and have clearly shown their hearty approval of the results already attained through the temporary unification of housing activities through Executive Order 9070 of February 24, 1942. The following statements by various of these organizations illustrate this point:

Mr. Douglas Whitlock, testifying as president of the Producers' Council at the hearings on postwar planning held by the Lanham committee of the House of Representatives in January 1944, made the following statement:

> So long as housing is deemed a concern of Government, Federal housing policies should be stipulated by Congress, and the carrying out of all such established policies should, in our opinion, be vested in a central agency of the executive branch of the Federal Government, which would be charged as well with the conduct of research and advance planning activities in the related fields of housing, both urban and rural, the development of urban communities, and financing. It should provide over-all supervision and coordination of the programs of its constituent agencies. This means that an agency, either the National Housing Agency or a similar type of unit, should be established by legislative enactment for postwar operation. I am sure you will agree that a field of activity of such great importance as housing and construction deserves representation in the executive branch.

Similarly, a press release issued by the Producers' Council on June 13, 1944, stated:

> BOSTON, June 13.—The functions of the National Housing Agency should be continued by Congress after the war in order to coordinate all Federal housing activities and to encourage a sound governmental housing policy for the postwar era, James W. Follin, managing director of the Producers' Council, stated here today at a meeting of the Boston Building Congress held at the Architectural Club.
> "It is essential that this agency—NHA—or some similar branch of the Federal Government be set up with adequate authority and facilities to prevent a recurrence of the unsatisfactory experiences during prewar years when there was a multiplicity of agencies dealing with housing matters and offering incompatible and conflicting programs."

Likewise, the National Association of Home Builders in its Washington Letter, dated February 25, 1944, made the following statement:

> NHA OBSERVES SECOND ANNIVERSARY
> Born of a war need, and created February 24, 1942, by Executive order, NHA looks back on its accomplishments with modest satisfaction. Only those who were intimate with the housing situation, prior to NHA, have a full appreciation of the benefits of the consolidation. Nearly a score of governmental bodies had a finger in the housing pie. No one was sure as to the size of the war job, or how it should be done. Priority procedure was something of a mystery, the wildest sort of rumors existed, and red tape ensnared everyone in a chaos of confusion. The outlook for private enterprise doing a part of the war housing program was dubious, and the accomplishment of the total job seemed doubtful.

Alphabetically we had the following: DDHC, FHA, FHLBB, HOLC, FSLIC, USHR, USHA, FWA, PBA, TVA, FSA, and DHC. These stood for the Division of Defense Housing Coordination, Federal Housing Administration, Federal Home Loan Bank Board, Home Owners' Loan Corporation, Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, United States Housing Corporation, United States Housing Authority, Federal Works Agency, Public Buildings Administration, Tennessee Valley Authority, Farm Security Administration, and the Defense Homes Corporation. In addition to all of this the Army, Navy, and Maritime Departments were very much in the building picture, as were other agencies of lesser importance not listed here. Under Mr. Blandford's able administration uniform control was set up and an intelligent housing policy established and carried out.

A brief review of the war housing program under NHA is evidence of fine accomplishment.

The report of the Senate Subcommittee on Housing and Urban Redevelopment sums up, as follows, the reply made by the National Association of Real Estate Boards in mid-1944 to a written questionnaire of the subcommittee:

The National Association of Real Estate Boards favors placing all those concerned with housing and community developments under one general agency. It stresses the aspect of community development, feeling that the character of a neighborhood or community has just as much to do with good housing conditions as the construction of dwellings. A Federal community development authority is urged comprising all the agencies now included in the National Housing Agency as well as a certain portion of public works dealing with community development.

Again, in its brochure, Postwar Cities, issued September 1, 1944, this same organization stated:

The first thing the Federal Government should do in this field is to get all of its eggs into one basket. They are now scattered through a dozen independent agencies temporarily consolidated under the National Housing Agency.

The president of the Mortgage Bankers' Association, in testifying before the Senate subcommittee, while stating that the consensus of the membership of the association was that FHA be divorced from the National Housing Agency, had this to say:

At the beginning of the present war, 1941, we found on the urban side a cumbersome and varied group of Government agencies. * * *

With respect to urban housing, it is obvious that without central direction, the many existing agencies created at different times for entirely different purposes, and by various authorizations, will be working at cross-purposes with a duplication of effort. We believe also that the cost can be greatly reduced if a comprehensive program is developed under unified direction.

The Federal Government, in our opinion, acted wisely in simplifying the organization in order to expedite war housing and to prepare the Nation for any emergency which might arise to improve our war effort and production. * * * We believe that many benefits were derived by this simplified organization and that the program for war housing and the program for financing such housing was expedited and was very beneficial during the wartime emergency.

In brief, a plan of organization of the housing activities of the Government along the very lines embodied in the reorganization plan is vigorously supported by the organizations representing the general public. Also, a number of the very organizations who oppose a single housing agency, because of their opposition to public housing, are actually on record as being in favor of a single agency when this question is divorced from that irrelevant issue.

How then can anyone object to the President's reorganization plan for consolidating the housing activities of the Government on the grounds that it is a public-housing plan, that under it, public housing would come to dominate private enterprise in housing? Since this was not the result of unification in wartime how much less likely is such a result in peacetime?

The actual facts are that there is nothing in either the Reorganization Act or the reorganization plan to serve as a basis for such fears or objections. In the first place, there is absolutely nothing in the plan which in any way expands or broadens the public-housing program. There is no way in fact in which it possibly could, for under the Reorganization Act, any plans are necessarily limited to matters of organizational set-up and can have nothing whatsoever to do with expanding substantive programs for making permanent any temporary functions.

The only way in which the reorganization plan has to do with public housing is that it places the public-housing functions of the Government, just as it does all of the other basic housing functions of the Government, under a single National Housing Administrator. If this, therefore, makes the plan a public-housing plan, by the very same token it makes the plan an FHA plan, it makes the plan a home loan bank plan, and so on.

It has been suggested in this connection that the public housing people in the Agency will manage somehow to exercise a dominating influence. Again, it is not clear by what mysterious alchemy that they rather than the FHA people or the home loan bank people will do the dominating, especially so when the public-housing unit will be outnumbered 2 to 1 by the private housing units. Similarly, there is absolutely no basis on which to suppose that the National Housing Administrator, to whom the Public Housing Commissioner would be completely subordinate in authority, show favoritism to public housing. Certainly the experience during the war, when the opportunities for favoring public housing were much greater, completely belie the fears of public-housing domination. I say this on the basis of investigations made by committees in both Houses of this Congress on this very question. For example, in one of its reports in connection with a war-housing appropriation, the Lanham committee of this House stated that the question as to whether private enterprise is being aided and encouraged to do as much of the war-housing program as it possibly can was a question of constant concern to the committee. This committee then stated and I quote:

The committee has been well impressed with the attention and efforts which the National Housing Agency has concentrated upon this aspect of the problem.

Perhaps as effective a refutation of this argument of public housing domination as any is that made by the chairman of the Republican steering committee in the Senate, Senator TAFT, who was also chairman of a Senate committee which made a thorough investigation lasting over 2 years into the administration of our housing program during the war under a single housing administrator. This statement was as follows:

Considerable objection has been voiced by the building and loan people, and also the builders, on the ground that they do not want the FHA and home-loan banks consolidated into one department under the housing program. They fear that the overall appointee may lean toward public housing. I believe that such fear is unjustified, because Congress writes into the statute laws governing the FHA and laws governing the home-loan banks. I can see no way by which the Administrator can swing everything under public housing. After all, he may be a private housing man. * * * I believe that any fear to the effect that by adopting the suggested policy we subject one person to someone else is completely fallacious.

But even completely aside from the question of personalities, this fear of public-housing domination is completely untenable and fallacious on two very distinct grounds. In the first place, it completely overlooks and depreciates the function of Congress itself. It neglects the fact that the Congress, and the Congress alone, can and will determine the size and scope of the various housing programs undertaken by the Government, whether they relate to private housing or to public housing. No matter what may be the leanings of a particular appointee, no National Housing Administrator can administer a larger public-housing program or a larger program of insuring privately mortgaged houses, or a larger program of rural housing, than the Congress itself authorizes or desires. Further, I have complete faith in the ability of our Banking and Currency Committee, and also in the ability of our Appropriations Committee, to see to it that any administration of the housing program, contrary to the intent of the Congress, is stopped before it can make any headway at all.

The second weakness in this argument of the opposition is that, in effect, it constitutes an assumption that the various housing activities which the Congress has approved are, and should be, highly competitive with one another. Such as assumption embraces in turn the further assumption that since these various activities are competitive, they should be lodged in separate agencies, where they can be more free to engage in combat with one another.

These assumptions are wholly untenable. The various housing activities of the Government should not be competitive; they should not be working at cross-purposes with one another. On the contrary, they should be reconciled through a well-thought-out, well-administered, and unified policy laid down by the Congress, and this is possible only if we have a unification of our housing activities and functions in a single agency.

The third and very important justification for the reorganization plan is that it strengthens Congress in the control over our housing policy. This was demonstrated by the results of the wartime consolidation of the housing agencies which enabled the committees and individual Members of Congress for the first time to obtain from one source a complete and integrated picture of the entire housing program of the Federal Government. It was possible for our committees and individual Members to review our national housing program and activities in detail and directly shape the course of its development. For the first time the Congress had real facilities for knowing fully and promptly what is being done in housing and so what ought to be done and what ought not to be done. For the first time therefore this body had readily been in a position to execute its own prime function of determining basic policy on housing and checking on its administration.

To cite one typical example, our ability to work with a single agency and to obtain from it a thorough and understandable picture of housing needs and problems made it possible for us to give attention to the problems of demobilization on the housing front long before we were able to give similar attention to the case of other war programs. In fact Congress was able as early as the summer of 1943 to enact legislation which set forth the basic plan for the postwar disposition and removal of all temporary housing financed by the Government.

Certainly we do not want to do ourselves the tremendous disservice of returning to the hopeless confusion of the prewar period when we had a score of governmental bodies to deal with and to supervise, and when it was well nigh impossible for us to exercise any sort of effective control over the housing activities of the Government. Certainly, where we have finally managed to reach the point where we really get the facts on housing where we can know both what is being done and what should be done, and where we can actually direct our housing activities, we would think twice before hastily wiping out this achievement as we will if we vote for House Concurrent Resolution 155.

On the basis of our war experience, the President could, so far as the housing functions of the Government were concerned, give only one meaning to our declaration on the Reorganization Act that the public interest demanded that he prepare such reorganization plans for consolidation of the Government agencies and activities as will promote economy, increase efficiency, eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort and consodlidate and coordinate agencies having similar functions under a single head.

Today housing is a top priority domestic problem. It covers one of our more urgent obligations to the veteran. And the nonveteran, too, has desperate need of adequate housing. Here is an area in which we just have unified Government action. The very fact that housing programs have controversial elements makes it essential that we have a unified agency whose actions can be followed by the Congress. In this field of housing there is every reason why we should make it clear that we really mean business in passing the Reorganization Act. A vote for the resolution is a declaration of intent to nullify that act.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, as a result of such study as I have been able to give these three proposals coming from the executive department, I am convinced that all three of them should be defeated; that is, the measures now before us should be adopted.

However, I particularly want to address myself to that proposal or plan which has to do with the destruction of the independence of two of the great independent agencies of the Government—the Social Security Board and the Employees' Compensation Commission. Prefacing that, I would like to take you back just a little bit to 1938. Many of you were here then, and if you were not here you were reading the newspapers and you knew about the great controversy that was raging at that time about a proposed reorganization bill. That reorganization bill aroused a storm of protest which resulted in its defeat here in the House, principally, I think, by reason of two things which were included. One, it sought to destroy the independence of the Comptroller General who is the agent of the Congress of the United States to ride herd on expenditures of the Government. The second was it sought authority for the Executive Department to destroy the independence of the great quasi legislative and judicial agencies of the Government, such as the ICC, the FTC, the Employees' Compensation Commission, the Social Security Board, and all of the rest of them. I say that proposal was defeated. The conviction in the Congress and in the country was that those agencies should be continued as independent agencies of the Government.

Later, another reorganization proposal came along that did not undertake to interfere with the Comptroller General and which provided for certain specific exemptions for those independent agencies. That proposal was adopted by the Congress. There was one independent agency which was not exempted—the Civil Aeronautics Authority. History will record that subsequent to that time a reorganization proposal came up from the Executive to destroy the independence of the Administrator of the CAA and in large measure the independence of that Board and put that great independent agency in the Department of Commerce. When that proposal came on under the legislative veto system which prevailed then as now prevails in this matter, the House of Representatives, led by the chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], turned back that proposal which sought to destroy the independence of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. But when the measure went to the Senate, the Senate did not concur in the action of the House. So the reorganization went into effect. There is no one who knows anything about the situation today who can deny that that reorganization under which one cannot tell whether the Department of Commerce is running it or the CAA is running it has brought about bad administration. Today there are bills seeking to undo the wrong that I think was done at that time. I venture the suggestion that the gentleman from West Virginia voted against that proposed reorganization which sought to destroy and did destroy the independence of the CAA.

The last time a basic reorganization bill came on was in 1945. Many of you will recall that the committee bill as reported undertook to exempt three agencies. I am sure the ICC was one of them. I sought to extend the exemption to other independent agencies. We were told during the course of debate that no one had any designs on these independent agencies and that no one was seeking to destroy them or subject them to political control. At any event, after action in the other body the exemptions were not included in such a manner as to protect the two independent boards that are here involved.

Why has the Congress through all of this history insisted that these agencies be continued as independent agencies?

It is, first of all, because they are the agencies of Congress, to administer an act that the Congress has enacted. The Congress insists that they shall have a measure of responsibility to the legislative branch. Many of them are bipartisan in character. The Employees Compensation Commission is bipartisan in character. There are three members of the Board, not more than two of whom shall be of one political party. It is an extension of the whole philosophy of a two-party government and two-party responsibility. There is a man there to speak the minority viewpoint, even as there is a minority in the Congress to speak the minority viewpoint.

These agencies are quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial. The report of the Chairman of the Employees Compensation Commission as to their purposes and functions says this:

> The Commission was created and its status as an independent agency exercising quasi-judicial functions has been recognized and continued for the purpose of administering the Federal laws relating to workmen's compensation benefits.

They are quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial. Is it not better that these legislative functions be exercised, these judicial decisions be made, by an independent agency made up of members appointed for a term, answerable to the Congress of the United States, rather than that they be made by someone in the executive branch of the Government, subject to political control in many ways, not the least of which is that he may be removed by the Executive at any time? It just seems to me to be indisputable that that situation should prevail.

In spite of the assurance that we had at the time the 1945 Reorganization Act was before us, we have now this proposal to destroy the independence of these two agencies. I would like to call on a witness about this matter of the desirability of independence and the desirability of avoiding too much concentration of control in the executive branch. My witness is President Truman, then Senator Truman. I am going to quote from a speech he made in opposition to the proposal to reorganize the Civil Aeronautics Authority and transfer it to the Commerce Department. This is what Senator Truman said, in part:

The order requires that the Board report through the Secretary of Commerce, whose degree or indirect control is obviously unlimited. In fact, the Secretary is the Board. The whole set-up becomes political. Air regulation by a bipartisan board is out of the window.

Then he went on to say:

This and many other queries come to mind, but I need not here enumerate them further in order to illustrate the clever indirection with which the independent regulation of American aviation is being sacrificed on the altar of concentrated executive control of governmental functions.

Now, the immediate issue is, does President Truman believe what he then expressed so vigorously and so well as a Member of the Senate of the United States? If he still believes it, if that is still good logic and good common sense and good governmental doctrine, then we will be doing him a favor by turning down these plans, saying that the Congress of the United States is not going to stand by and see independent agencies destroyed and subjected to political control.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman speaks about the Employees' Compensation Commission. Is it not a fact that not as a board but as the deputy commissioner, the law gives full power to hear and determine questions with respect to claims?

Mr. HALLECK. I am not sure about that feature.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think that is true. The appeals go not to the Commission but to the courts. We make no change in the reorganization.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course the gentleman knows and understands that the activities of that Commission are directed by the Commission. Here is what we find in the United States Government Manual as a statement by the Chairman of the Commission as to the activities of the Commission:

Activities: The Commission administers the act of September 7, 1916, which provides workmen's compensation benefits for civil employees of the United States who suffer personal injuries while in the performance of duty.

* * * * *

The Commission is required to determine all questions arising under this law, and there is no statutory provision for review of its decisions. Among other functions, the Commission is required to determine what employments come within the scope of the law, whether the injury for which compensation is claimed occurred while in the performance of official duty, the period for which compensation may be paid, the amount thereof and, in case of death, the persons entitled to receive such compensation. The Commission is required to make arrangements to provide prompt and competent medical and hospital service for employees injured in the Federal service, irrespective of the place of their employment. It is also required to make studies and investigations of the causes of injuries to employees in the Federal service and recommend means for the prevention of such injuries.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Let me proceed just a moment; then I will yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Indiana three additional minutes.

Mr. HALLECK. There are some people who have a very direct interest in this thing because they represent employees. One of those organizations is the American Federation of Labor. I have a telegram that I suppose was sent to all of you, addressed to me by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. It reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25, 1946.

Hon. CHARLES A. HALLECK,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.:

The governmental reorganization plans 2 and 3 should be opposed because plan 2 continues wartime Coast Guard control of merchant seamen instead of returning control to Commerce Department in accordance with 1884 act. Plan 3 is illegal, according to House Judiciary Committee, in that it wipes out the United States Workmen's Compensation Commission set up by law. Please aid in rejecting both plans 2 and 3.

WILLIAM GREEN.

I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I will have to admit I know very little about this proposal, but from the argument the gentleman has made I have gotten the impression that this will constitute a very severe centralization of power in the Executive, more so than we have had heretofore, if it is approved.

Mr. HALLECK. That is, of course, undoubtedly true. As I say, I do not know whether the President fully understood the import of these suggestions. In respect to these independent agencies, what he has recommended here is certainly not in line with the definite policy announced by him a few years back when he was a Member of the Senate.

This is clearly an extension of one philosophy of Government which I hold is clearly not the majority opinion of this country, that all of these independent agencies should be destroyed, that they should all be brought under political control. I say there is too much tendency in that direction already; there is too much centralization of power; there is too much political control by which friends can be rewarded and enemies punished, by which the great institution of free elections upon which the very preservation of our country depends may be further endangered.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I wish to say to the gentleman in reference to this control of power in governmental agencies that I talked to one of the very high ranking Government officials recently. I asked him why he did not call in some man like Lindsay Warren, who knows about governmental agencies probably as well as any one man in this country. He replied that the Government today did not want to lose any power it now has; that it wants to keep in power those people they have in control; and that they want the Government operated by bureaus rather than by law laid down by the Congress.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman, of course, expresses the fear we all have.

I wish now to quote from a statement made by the Brookings Institution because of its clear and logical reasoning. I quote the following:

The regulatory agencies * * * have the power to make rules and regulations having the force of law and, consequently, in a real sense are legislative agencies. They also perform adjudicatory functions that should be carried out in an impartial manner free from political influence. Moreover, in order to preserve the necessary degree of continuity in public policy their freedom from the potentiality of partisan political action is also desirable. It is argued by some that administrative expenses could be cut by placing these agencies in the regular departments. But such savings would be very small. Since, as will be shown, administrative costs are but a small part of total expenditures. Consequently, the President should not have the power to place them in executive departments headed by political appointees.

In conclusion, may I say I agree with the chairman of the committee when he states that if the independence of these agencies is to be destroyed, then the Congress of the United States should carry that responsibility and initiate the action.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, plan No. 3 includes the transfer of the duties and functions of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation to the Coast Guard. I am in favor of that transfer.

The purpose of the transfer is to insure the best administration of measures looking to the safety of navigation and the protection of human life upon the oceans, lakes, and inland waters.

When the 13 States first became united there were only 12 lighthouses upon the Atlantic coast, all built by the individual States and precariously supported by lotteries or local taxes on shipping. The first lighthouse on the Great Lakes was built in 1818; the first on the Pacific coast was built in 1854. Not until 1850 was our system of buoyage standardized and made uniform in all ports by act of Congress. Buoys on the western rivers were nonexistent until 1874.

The administration of lighthouse service was initially in the hands of the collectors of customs, then under the Commissioner of Revenue or the Treasury Department, subsequently placed under a Lighthouse Board in the Treasury Department, from there transferred to the Department of Commerce in 1903, and finally to the Coast Guard in 1939.

The various Federal agencies in the maritime safety field overlapped in many directives. Consolidation of agencies improves safety, affords better organization, more highly trained personnel, greater efficiency in service, and more far reaching economy of operation. Opportunity is afforded for a higher degree of intelligent, efficient, and forward looking administration with a continuity of policy.

Such an agency should be intimately acquainted with the industry it is to serve, protect, and police.

In dealing with vessels on the oceans, the lakes, and rivers, from the largest liners to the smallest motorboat, the safety agency must be able to evaluate the risks and the problems in all of the varying conditions under which they operate. The diversity of these conditions is shown by the fact that in the year ending June 30, 1945, annual inspections had been made of 5,320 ocean and coastwise craft, 2,430 in lakes, bays, and sounds, and 1,970 on inland waters.

The Coast Guard is peculiarly qualified for the work of inspection in all of its phases. Its vessels have been putting to sea on police or rescue missions under extreme weather conditions since the inception of the service. The Coast Guard contains capable engineers, constructors, and radio technicians. Through its experience with lifeboats, it is well qualified to pass upon boat equipment carried on board, to pass upon fire fighting and fire protection.

The Coast Guard is a military type organization with large experience in the administration of civil functions.

The Coast Guard is fully acquainted with the safety problems of shipping on all waters, oceans, lakes, and rivers.

It has been maintaining and establishing aids to navigation on all waters. Its ice breakers have been opening channels to prevent damage to frozen-in vessels and to keep traffic moving. It knows merchant ships, fishermen, and yachts. It has given them medical aid, warned them of storms, towed them out of danger, or rescued them for years. Of all the Federal services no other has been so closely connected with oceans, lakes, or inland shipping as the Coast Guard.

The Coast Guard's policy is to promote a close association between the Coast Guard and all affected interests of the maritime industry so that the regulatory functions of the Coast Guard shall be intelligently administered and a harmonious relationship shall insure the attainment of best results with least burden to this vital industry.

The Coast Guard will endeavor to encourage all types of shipping to be safety conscious on their own initiative, mindful that self-discipline is the best discipline and that prevention is better than cure. The success of such a policy is illustrated in the formation of the Coast Guard Auxiliary, wherein thousands of motorboat owners, subject to only limited supervision under present statutes, have been encouraged by the Coast Guard to adopt of their own volition higher safety standards for their boats and to acquire greater professional skill for themselves.

The transfer should be made permanent now. The war has ended and plans should be initiated and consummated at once for the postwar future. The present uncertainty is delaying efficiency and economy. Many new techniques can be inaugurated, new safety measures can be adopted, new plans can be promulgated, new devices developed, and new methods inaugurated.

No long-range planning is possible while the present uncertainty continues. Certain of the civilian personnel may, at their option, be commissioned, if qualified, and if not, or if they do not choose commissions, the civilian personnel may be continued in their civilian status.

In 1942 our merchant tonnage was approximately 12,988,615 tons as compared with approximately 36,687,547 now.

In 1941, 136,788 seamen's documents were issued as against 318,448 for 1946.

If plan 3 should be rejected the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation would revert to a bureau status, a number of administrative divisions would need to be created to care for the personnel, budget and supply needs of the new bureau. These are handled now by the Coast Guard as part of its over-all operations.

Failure to approve the plan necessitates re-creation of a bureau.

The Nation has now, for the first time, a single agency which is charged with the administration of all maritime safety procedures.

The Coast Guard is organized along military lines for the better discharge of its maritime duties, and is fundamentally and basically a civilian arm of the Government. The Coast Guard has performed a splendid service and can do an even better job during the normal peacetime operation of the merchant marine.

In support of the proposed transfer I contend:

First. That one agency of the Government should be charged with the complete responsibility of all phases of maintaining safety of life at sea and on the navigable waters of the United States. Since the Coast Guard has for many years been charged with all remedial phases and part of the preventive phases of such responsibility, it is logical and desirable that it be the agency to which all the functions of maritime safety should be assigned in the interest of efficient operation, greater economy, and good government.

Second. That the Coast Guard is the only civilian agency equipped with facilities and knowledge for proper and adequate administration or discharge of the maritime safety function without requiring the services and assistance of any other agency or department.

Third. That economy can be achieved by the elimination of another agency performing similar duties. Under the law the Coast Guard is required to assist in the discharge of the maritime safety functions in any case, and by transferring them to the service it lodges all responsibility in one agency where it properly belongs, thus avoiding duplication of offices since only one maintenance staff and a reduced number of facilities are necessitated.

Fourth. That the Coast Guard brings to the problem a trained corps of officers and men, who, augmented with the personnel of the former Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, have demonstrated during the difficult war years the ability to provide under adverse conditions progressive leadership in the maritime field. This augurs capable and understanding administration of the problems connected with the merchant marine in the future.

Fifth. That the transfer of the merchant marine inspection functions to the Coast Guard was accomplished in 1942 by virtue of the Executive Order 9083, under the War Powers Act, and it is desirable that this transfer be made permanent at the earliest possible date in order that the personnel of the Coast Guard, particularly that transferred from the former BMIN under the Executive order, can be assured of their status. Further, the lack of permanency in the transfer precludes long-range planning on the part of the Coast Guard for the proper and effective administration of the inspection functions.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT].

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Chairman, in what I am about to say I do not want to be construed in any way as being critical of the President in submitting these various reorganization plans. Any attempt at reorganization, of course, is a complicated, difficult problem. Apparently, however, we are always to be disappointed in the operations under the various reorganization bills which the Congress has passed. In passing a reorganization bill some months ago the argument was made here, and I think it was generally agreed, that the Congress itself cannot reorganize the executive branch of the Government.

The whole purpose and objective of the reorganization bill, as you know, was to effectuate economy in Government and to reduce the size, cost, and activities of the executive branch of the Government. These reorganization plans that we have submitted to us wholly fail to carry out the purpose, the spirit, and the objectives of the reorganization bill. Generally speaking, with few minor exceptions, they simply shuffle the agencies around.

Reorganization plan No. 1 in particular is vicious and undesirable in that it not only fails to abolish agencies but seeks to make permanent one of the temporary wartime agencies. That is a thing that we have all feared would happen.

There must be a reduction in the number of agencies and bureaus of government or eventually this is going to become a government simply of bureaucracy.

All of us know that our system of checks and balances wisely written into the Constitution by our founding fathers has largely disappeared. The legislative branch of the Government—the Congress—one of the coordinate branches of the three departments of Government, is today unable to cope with the tremendous size and complexities of the executive branch. Not only is the cost item a factor with which we should be gravely concerned, but the numerous activities of these various agencies has grown into a reprehensible, at times overlapping, complexity.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSSETT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman mentioned that under plan 1 some temporary war agency is to be made permanent. What agency is that?

Mr. GOSSETT. The National Housing Agency, which was created under the First War Powers Act by Executive Order 9070. Most of the housing agencies are now transferred to the National Housing Agency and it is set up under Reorganization Plan No. 1 as an over-all housing administrative bureau and made permanent under this reorganization plan.

In the Reorganization Act passed some time back it was specifically provided that this sort of thing should not be done. Subdivision 3 of section 5 states:

> No reorganization plan shall provide for, and no reorganization under this act shall have the effect of continuing any agency beyond the period authorized by law for its existence or beyond the time when it would have terminated if the reorganization had not been made.

There is other language in the act to the same effect. As a matter of fact, when the President sent his message to the Congress asking for this reorganization bill, he himself stated that there was a great need for effective reorganization and the abolition of functions and agencies, and he indicated clearly in this message that he expected, if given authority under the reorganization bill, to use the axe, so to speak, and to ruthlessly go down the line and eliminate certain governmental agencies and activities.

I am sure some of you noticed in the press the other day that an agency set up during World War I to buy spruce for airplanes on the west coast is still in existence. Twenty-five years from now I venture to say that we will have most of these temporary World War II agencies with most of their employees still hanging on the Federal pay roll.

So, the only way we are going to get any reduction, any vitally needed reduction, any essential reduction, in the cost and activities of the Federal Government, is to abolish and not simply to shuffle and transfer agencies.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we should disapprove these reorganization plans for the specific reason that they fail to comply with the spirit and the objective of the reorganization bill which we passed. We should respectfully ask and urge the Chief Executive, regardless of pressure, that he abolish and not simply shuffle agencies.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSSETT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I feel that since Congress set up as temporary war agencies a number of organizations, in each one of which they fixed a time limit when they should expire, that that question should be settled by the Congress when the time comes for it and not this way.

Mr. GOSSETT. I think the gentleman has made a very good point there. Certainly we do not want to be put in the position of approving reorganization plans that extend a lease on life to an agency that was set up under Executive order as a temporary wartime agency to deal with an emergency problem brought on by the war.

For these reasons, in addition to others heretofore given, it seems to me that we should pass the concurrent resolutions now pending and refuse the reorganization plans. We must insist that reorganizations be done in line with efficiency, economy, reduction of Government expenses, and the elimination of overlapping and duplicating Government agencies and bureaus.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, to make certain that the full case is properly developed, let me dig up just a little ancient history. In 1932 the Congress created the Federal Home Loan Bank Board under the Federal Home Loan Bank Act. It had a board of five directors. That act also created 12 home loan banks in the 12 Federal Reserve districts of the country. The purpose of those banks was to discount mortgage paper on homes. It bears the same relationship to the building and loan industry that the Federal Reserve banks do to the banks of the country.

For 10 years that whole system operated beautifully and it operated efficiently. The mortgages of millions of home owners who were building homes under mortgage with funds that they got from a local institution—and there are thousands of them in every section of the country—could be discounted or used for security and so, more money could be available for this constant process of building homes.

I say that Board was in effect and that act was in effect for 10 years. Then came the First War Powers Act. In December of 1942 when the war was on, the National Housing Agency was created under that act. The interesting thing about the War Powers Act is that there was a proviso to the effect that the powers should be exercised only as they related to the conduct of the war. For the life of me, in all that time, I have never been able to discern what relationship the refinancing or financing of a mortgage for John Jones out in Illinois, had to do with the war. However, as the result of that Executive order the Federal Home Loan Bank Board was abolished. All the powers and all the functions were given to one man, to Mr. John Fahey, who became the Commissioner of that agency in the National Housing Agency. He has the authority today to appoint directors of the banks, mind you. You talk about centralization, you talk about regimentation. The President, by Executive order, virtually set aside an act of Congress which had no relation to the war, and conferred all those powers on one man, and he has been using them arbitrarily and capriciously, and I use the words advisedly.

For years the Independent Offices Subcommittee on Appropriations, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. CASE of South Dakota, and I on this side, and Judge WOODRUM and others on that side, have gone into this matter thoroughly. Constantly we were confronted with this business of arbitrary and capricious action, and all of it stemmed from the fact that an Executive order under the War Powers Act had abolished the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and conferred those powers upon one man in Washington, where they are today.

Suppose you make the National Housing Agency permanent? The net result will be that you have made permanent one of the most grave injustices that has ever been done to the people of this country, the humble people, who can go to some thrift institution in their own town, unmindful and insensible to Government control and regulation, and get a mortgage, and then if necessary have that mortgage discounted at one of the Federal Home Loan Banks, always under private control. But now it becomes an entirely centralized, planned Government operation. The day that that reorganization plan to make the National Housing Agency permanent is approved you will place the stamp of approval on one of the great injustices of the last decade and you will have lifted that entire function out of the hands of private business, which has done such a splendid job in the field of home mortgage refinancing, and hand it to one man in the Government of the United States.

If it requires nothing else, that would be sufficient for me to raise my voice in as stentorian fashion as I could and to reject that plan, because I will not put the seal of approval upon that kind of an injustice and make it permanent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HENRY. I have two questions I should like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Illinois. First, did the gentleman vote for the reorganization bill last winter?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I did.

Mr. HENRY. I did, too.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am confident that I did.

Mr. HENRY. Can the gentleman see anything inconsistent in a Member of the House who voted for the reorganization bill yet voting against these three reorganization plans?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely not. And for this reason: The guidelines and standards of conduct under which a reorganization plan must be submitted have been very meticulously recited in the law. When they submit a reorganization plan and it is not in conformity with the very pattern and very guide that Congress has established, it is not only the right thing to do but I think a responsibility rests upon every Member of Congress to reject it under the circumstances because it is not in conformity with the instructions given by this body.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman does not contend there is any basic change in what Congress already put into law in connection with these agencies; is that correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. A basic change?

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is right.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why, the very thing that I have recited here which was done in the fervor of war is basic and now it is proposed to make it permanent.

Mr. RANDOLPH. No; these agencies were created before World War II.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Federal Home Loan Bank Act was put on the statute books in 1932, but can anybody in this body relate to me where there is a single relationship between the function of refinancing the mortgage of a humble citizen in West Virginia or Minnesota or Illinois and the conduct of the war? Yet that is the very abolition of function undertaken by means of Executive order in December 1942, when the National Housing Agency was created that you will now make permanent if you do make this a permanent agency with its present constituent subagencies.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Is this not the point: That if we do not approve Reorganization Plan I, then when the First War Powers Act expires the abolition of the Board of Directors by Executive order will also expire?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Exactly so.

Mr. JUDD. But if we allow the reorganization plan to go into effect then we have endorsed the permanent abolition of a board which was temporarily abolished during the war supposedly for war purposes only.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I might amplify that by saying there were several Members of the House, I believe one from Oklahoma and one from New York, as well as myself, who have dropped bills in the hopper to roll back this abolition. Yet all of that will be futile and will be frustrated if the thing recited in the reorganization plan prevails.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Does the gentleman agree with me that the FHA as an independent agency has done a good job?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Federal Housing Administration?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It has done a very good job.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I would hate to see that Agency hampered in any way.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would, too. The gentleman being one of the outstanding members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, would agree that it was unsound practice for the administration, under the Executive order creating the National Housing Agency, to lump public housing, the Insurance and Mortgage Act, and credit functions in one agency, and that they should have been separated.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, the Constitution places exclusively in the Congress the power to legislate. This is a power that cannot be delegated. The Supreme Court on many occasions has stated that Congress cannot abdicate or transfer to others the essential legislative functions with which it is vested. It can delegate fact-finding and rule-making powers provided it enacts standards within the framework of which such delegated functions can be confined. Beyond that it cannot constitutionally go.

In plan No. 3 the President abolished the United States Employees' Compensation Commission. This is very clearly in violation of the rule I have just in substance stated. Under the United States Employees' Compensation Act there are functions of other laws that were expressly placed within the Employees' Compensation Commission by laws reported to the Congress unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary, among them being the Longshoremen and Harbor Workers' Acts. To delegate legislative power to the President to abolish unclassified agencies under a general policy which is concerned with custom in general is to abdicate an essential legislative function which is plainly unconstitutional.

The power that was given in the Reorganization Act is the power to act, not to carry out ministerial functions within well-defined standards. If the power were to only make findings for affirmative action by Congress, such delegated power would be valid, but the power to abolish on specified agencies is power which cannot be delegated.

We had an experience not too long ago when we attempted in the National Recovery Act to delegate to the executive branch powers which the Supreme Court in the Schechter case, reported in 295 United States 495, held was clearly a violation of the terms of the Constitution. Under this plan we are attempting to do practically the same thing. Of course it is not within the province of the Congress to pass on questions of constitutionality, but it certainly seems to me it is a grave reflection on all of us if we knowingly report a bill which is in clear violation of the terms of the Constitution. I cannot conceive of a case which violates the rule more plainly stated within the rule in the Schechter case than plan No. 2. I think it is our duty, under the circumstances, to support the committee in its recommendations that plan No. 2 be rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Does not the record show that the rule was laid down in the Schechter case by a unanimous court?

Mr. WALTER. Oh, yes. There is no question about that. The rule in the Schechter case was by a unanimous decision.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. HENRY. Would the gentleman favor these reorganization plans if he were satisfied that the procedure was constitutional?

Mr. WALTER. Certainly. It seems to me it would be a very simple matter for the executive branch to pay attention to the objections raised by the Congress and then report back to the Congress plans that are not in violation of those things that we feel are not proper. Reorganization must come and it can only come on the recommendations of the executive branch. It is impossible for the legislative branch to reorganize the Government, but I feel it can and should and must be done within the rules as we lay them down, and within the rules of the Constitution.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. If these plans are rejected, as presented by the President, can he make other plans and submit them to the Congress?

Mr. WALTER. Why, of course. Plan after plan can be submitted.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Is it not true that if we in our debate and committee report suggest those parts of the reorganization plans to which we are opposed all he need to do is delete those parts and send the plan back and it can become effective?

Mr. WALTER. Of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAND].

Mr. HAND. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that the executive department, and for that matter the Congress itself if not the Supreme Court, needs reorganization, and it is with a great deal of reluctance that I bring myself to oppose a reorganization plan that has merit. But it does seem to me from the arguments made, if we need further persuasion, that the suggestions made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] with respect to plan No. 1 and the suggestions made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] with respect to plan No. 2, are sufficient reasons for at least rejecting those two plans, as much as we need reorganization in all branches of the Federal Government. I have, however, heard very little criticism of plan No. 3, and I am interested in plan 3 because it seems to me that the plan transferring the Maritime Inspection Service to the Coast Guard permanently (where it has been for the last 4 years) is a meritorious plan, and I respectfully suggest to the committee (because I will not have time to read it in the limited time at my disposal), that Members read page 14 of reorganization plan No. 1. I think the gentleman from West Virginia in the course of his minority report is right in saying that the plan transferring that service permanently to the Coast Guard is a good plan. The committee has criticized the plan, as I understand it, only on one score, and that was with respect to St. Elizabeths Hospital. While there may be some ground for criticism in that respect, it seems to me there are other provisions in the plan which are of sufficient importance to warrant its adoption.

I do not believe we should turn these plans down simply because we want to fuss with the White House. On the contrary, we ought to adopt them if we can. Specifically, I think we should discriminate between them. Plans 1 and 2, I feel, are bad, but plan 3, it seems to me, is good, and I urge its adoption and will vote against Resolution 154.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAND. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. I am in thorough accord with the gentleman's statement about the transfer of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation.

Mr. HAND. And I may say the gentleman from Virginia knows more about navigation and shipping than any other man in the Congress.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAND. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. But the gentleman could introduce a bill and include the bureaus he wants in that bill. The trouble here is that this plan includes other things that this committee, after long hearings has decided should not be approved.

Mr. HAND. Only with respect to St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Mr. CHURCH. I am a member of the same committee the gentleman is a member of and of which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] is chairman. I may also say that everyone wants reorganization, but the trouble is there is almost unanimous opposition by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to these three plans before us today.

Mr. HAND. But on plan 3 only with regard to one particular subject.

Mr. CHURCH. I know; but that subject is enough; we cannot amend the plan.

Mr. HAND. I do not think that one objection is sufficient grounds to reject the whole plan. We cannot expect perfection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, when we approved the reorganization bill in December 1945 it made one specific reservation—that whatever program or plan of reorganization the President might submit must be submitted to the House and the Senate for their approval or disapproval. This action must be taken within 60 days. The President submitted three plans of reorganization, and the House, well within its rights, has made certain objections to each one of these three plans. These objections are well founded. The Committee on Executive Expenditures of the House, made up of 21 Members, 13 Democrats and 8 Republicans, after a thorough study and hearings from many witnesses, came to an almost unanimous conclusion that these 3 organization plans should be rejected for the reasons set out in the report. That does not, of course, mean that we object to everything that was put in the plans, but we do find some fundamental objections to each one.

Three resolutions were introduced. One was House Concurrent Resolution 155, which stated that Congress does not favor reorganization plan No. 1 of the President, because it makes permanent the National Housing Agency, a war emergency agency created by Executive Order No. 9070, and this agency was not created by Congress which would swallow up the Federal Housing Administration. The President thereby exceeded the authority granted him under the Reorganization Act and would destroy the Federal Housing Administration which is engaged in insuring loans to private builders and home owners. It is designed to encourage private ownership of homes.

The committee states in its report—and I share in that view—that we should favor and encourage private construction and private ownership of homes. While on the other hand, the National Housing Agency that would swallow up the Federal Housing Administration is an agency of the Federal Government whose primary purpose is to build houses with Federal funds and manage federally owned housing projects. It is just the opposite of private enterprise, and private construction, and private ownership of homes. The National Housing Agency was and is a war emergency agency. The President's plan undertakes to make this a permanent agency in violation of the Reorganization Act of Congress. The Federal Housing Administration is not a war emergency agency. It is especially intended to encourage and strengthen private enterprise in the construction and ownership of homes, while the other agency is designed to encourage Government construction, ownership, management, and control of homes.

House Concurrent Resolution 151 states that the Congress does not favor reorganization plan No. 2 of the President and the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments sets forth in detail the objections to plan No. 2. This plan is very objectionable, inasmuch as it takes away the independence and efficiency of the St. Elizabeths Hospital, and this would seriously interfere with efficient administration of this great institution that means so much to the disabled veterans of this Nation.

House Joint Resolution 154 urges that reorganization plan No. 3 of the President be rejected. It abolishes the Employees' Compensation Commission and transfers its functions to the Federal Security Agency. This, in the opinion of the committee, and in this view I join, violates section 5 (a) of the Reorganization Act in that it takes away the quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial functions of this Commission and sets up two groups where there was only one.

The objectives of the Reorganization Act of December 20, 1945, were, among other things, "to reduce expenditures and promote economy to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government." It will be observed that it was the purpose of Congress in passing the Reorganization Act to secure efficiency in Government and a reduction in the cost of Government. In fact, the act provided that every effort should be made to reduce the cost of Government at least 25 percent.

According to the overwhelming weight of testimony, both of these objectives have been ignored in all three of these reorganization plans. It is beyond question that they have increased the number of agencies and employees and the expenses. No one argues here that it has cut down the number of agencies or cut down the number of employees or has cut down the expenses of Government and I have heard no valid argument that it has increased efficiency, but on the other hand, these changes will increase inefficiency, increase the number of employees and increase the cost of Government. Each one of these plans defeat each and all the purposes sought to be attained in the Reorganization Act.

The thing that each Member of Congress, as well as all the officials of our Federal Government, should strive for is to increase efficiency and cut down the expense of Government. Everyone admits that the present set-up of our Government is inefficient, greatly overmanned and there is a tremendous waste of the taxpayers' money. No public official or administration can lay just claim for continuance in power unless he and the administration strive consistently to bring about efficiency and cut down expenses of Government and especially is this true when we have a staggering national debt and the people are burdened with the heaviest tax load in all the history of our country.

The President, having failed to submit a plan that would accomplish the purposes set forth in the Reorganization Act, there is no good reason why the House and Senate should not reject each one of these three plans and therefore, I shall vote to reject each of the plans. When the Congress rejects these plans, the President can then submit new plans, eliminating these objectionable features, subject to the approval of the House and Senate.

The President in these plans makes temporary agencies permanent and takes away the quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial functions of a commission established by Congress. In this way, the President undertakes to legislate. He has no authority under the Reorganization Act except to take the departments, bureaus, agencies, and commissions, with their functions, as created by Congress, and eliminate such as may not be necessary and coordinate the other agencies and functions to the end that we may increase efficiency and reduce expense.

Under the Russian Government, Premier Stalin and his aides formulate policies and then they call in the law-making body and have them approve these policies. Under our Constitution, Congress formulates policies and enacts them into laws and it is up to the executive branch to execute these policies and laws. The President has undertaken in some respects to follow the Russian system and ignore our system of government and in some of these plans there is a clear violation of the Constitution of the United States.

The Congress should not abdicate its powers to legislate within and under the Constitution and in rejecting these plans, the Congress is rightfully assuming its constitutional authority and powers, and is acting within the expressed provisions and reservations of the Reorganization Act of December 20, 1945.

There are many desirable provisions in these plans but the Congress must accept it in toto or reject it. We have pointed out, as provided in the Reorganization Act, the provisions the Congress does not approve. If the Senate concurs in the action of the House, the President can submit at such time as he may desire, additional new plans and eliminate the objectionable features and, of course, such reorganization plans would then be promptly approved.

We have pointed out that the Committee on Expenditures in the executive branch of the Government is made up of 13 Democrats and 8 Republicans. To show the lack of partisan consideration these plans have received, the chairman and practically all the members of that committee voted to reject the three plans of the President, and I observe in the debate today that many able speeches have been made by Democrats as well as Republicans, urging the rejection of these plans and these resolutions rejecting the three plans will be adopted, in my opinion, by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, some question has been raised about the report on reorganization plan No. 3. The gentleman who now has the floor will tell you that he understood somebody else would probably write some additions to that report. I want to say that there was a lot of opposition to certain parts of reorganization plan No. 3 and they do not appear in the report because of this oversight.

The Bureau of Marine Inspection is bitterly opposed to having jurisdiction over that agency placed permanently under the Coast Guard. I have received a lot of correspondence from shipping interests in Philadelphia, New York, New Orleans, and elsewhere to that effect. In addition to that, the men who sail our merchant marine are almost universally opposed to reorganization plan No. 3. They do not want to be put under the jurisdiction of the Coast Guard. They all want to go back as a permanent proposition to the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce, which Department had jurisdiction before the Coast Guard took over. There was a witness representing the merchant seamen, a Mr. John Hawk, of the Seafarers Union of New York City. If you have not read his testimony, you ought to do so. He gave very conclusive testimony against putting the Marine Inspection Bureau permanently under the Coast Guard. I say this without any reflection on the Coast Guard, but I agree with these people who oppose the plan on the ground that the Coast Guard is a semi-naval insitution that ought not to have this power in peacetime.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLAND. The Coast Guard is primarily charged with safety at sea, the inland waters and on the oceans, is it not, and that is the duty of Marine Inspection.

Mr. JUDD. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not fair to say that in reporting these resolutions the chairman and the other members reporting them were instructed by the committee to report the items on which objections were based, regardless of the views of those who appeared and testified before the committee?

Mr. JUDD. That is right. In voting out these resolutions the committee specified the various changes and transfers to which it objected, as a committee, and the reports indicate them. While there was a difference of opinion about the wisdom of putting the Bureau of Marine Inspection under the Coast Guard, the committee took no action on the matter.

Mr. Chairman, as has been said again and again today, the main reasons for reorganization are two: The first is reduction in governmental functions and bureaus, with resulting greater economy, and the other is greater efficiency in operations.

Mr. Lindsay Warren, the Comptroller General, when he was testifying before us last fall in our hearings on the Reorganization Act, said this:

> What we must be after is this monstrous Frankenstein created under the name of bureaucracy, or anything you please. It already in some instances is becoming bigger than Congress, its creator. Sooner or later, it will tumble of its own weight unless something is done to coordinate or check some of this.

He added:

> Now, we have an Executive who says he will do it. He says if he is given this authority he will do this job fairly and efficiently and fearlessly.

It was on the basis of testimony like that that we reported out the Reorganization Act.

My criticism of the first reorganization plans submitted under the act is not that they go too far in most of their proposals. My criticism is that they do not go far enough. Many of us feel, on the basis of our own observations as well as the testimony of men like the Comptroller General, that it is just as imperative that we demobilize the Federal Government as it was that we demobilize much of the Army and the Navy and the Marine Corps and the Air Forces. Therefore, I am disappointed that the plans do not effect any significant reduction of our Frankenstein.

I brought this question up with Mr. Smith, Director of the Budget, and he frankly admitted that we will not get a real abolition of functions except by cutting off funds in appropriation bills. He said, "I think you can get that (abolition of functions) more particularly in other ways which involve legislation." I said, "What you are saying then is, if we want to cut down the Government, the one way to do it is to cut off money in the appropriations?" Mr. Smith replied that that would be the way to reduce the functions. It is clear we cannot expect real abolition of functions and agencies unless we here cut down their money. It is a real disappointment that the President and his advisers have not been able, for whatever reasons, to do that which we believed and hoped they would be able to do.

While the plans do not cut down the governmental agencies and give us as great economy as we desire, there still remains the other question: Do they increase efficiency? If they increase efficiency and do not increase expenditures, I think we should approve them, even though they do not reduce expenditures and give greater economy. A good case on the ground of efficiency can perhaps be made out for 23 or 24 of the 28 changes proposed though I think some of them definitely will increase costs. Therefore I will raise no protest and would not myself vote against 24 of the 28 changes, if it were possible under the law to separate them from the 4 to which I do object. I am disappointed that the 24 do not go further, but at least, there is no damage done in approving those. However, the fact that we may approve 24 of the changes does not mean that we should accept the 4 that we do not approve. I personally object to legislative riders whereby a proposal that perhaps will not stand on its own feet is tacked onto a good bill. The Executive and the public frequently criticize Congress because it sometimes hooks on legislative riders. In order to get an important provision that the President wants he must accept something that he does not want. I am opposed to such legislative riders, and I am equally opposed to Executive riders which is what some of the provisions in these plans amount to.

Each of the three plans has some wholly desirable provisions in it. We want those good parts; but each of them also has at least one rider in it, which most of us on the committee believe is not proper or desirable. The only way we can prevent that is to disapprove all three plans, send them back, let the President delete the objectionable features and return the plans. I think they will then be approved by Congress without any difficulty at all.

Why do we object to these four or five provisions? Because some of them are illegal; some are not authorized in the Reorganization Act; and some are not in the public interest. Those which I believe are illegal, because they violate the law under which we authorized the President to carry out these reorganizations, have been dealt with by several Members in the debate, especially by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]. They continue agencies beyond the period authorized by law for their existence, or they continue functions beyond the period authorized by law for their existence, or they authorize agencies to exercise functions not expressly authorized by law. Every one of those three is expressly forbidden in section 5 of the Reorganization Act.

The second objection to some of them is that they are not authorized by the law, in that they do not accomplish any of the objectives laid down in the act.

On page 1 of the Reorganization Act eight major objectives are stated. Some of these proposals in the reorganization plans cannot possibly be represented as achieving a single one of those objectives. Therefore, while they are not in violation of the act, they are not authorized by anything in the act.

There is a third objection to some of these riders and that is that we believe they are not in the public interest. I wish I had time to deal adequately with the abolition of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, about which the gentleman from [Mr. HALLECK] spoke so convincingly. That is a bipartisan Commission. Because there are members of all political parties among Federal employees, it was provided by law that at least one member of the Employees' Compensation Commission should be a member of a minority party. What will be the situation under reorganization plan No. 2? Let me read it carefully.

> Section 3. The functions of the United States Employees Compensation Commission are transferred to the Federal Security Agency and shall be performed in such manner and under such rules and regulations as the Federal Security Administrator shall prescribe.

No matter what Congress prescribed when it set up the Employees' Compensation Commission, if this plan goes into effect those functions will be carried out "in such manner and under such rules and regulations as the Federal Security Administrator shall prescribe."

Obviously if he is to have such unrestricted power we should be careful to give adequate appeal rights for any persons who feel that the Federal Security Administrator has not properly acted upon their claim for compensation. Look at the next sentence:

> Such regulations shall provide for a board of three persons to be designated or appointed by the Federal Security Administrator with authority to hear and, subject to applicable law, make final decision on appeals taken from determinations and awards with respect to claims of employees of the Federal Government or of the District of Columbia.

The Federal Security Administrator is authorized by this plan to lay down such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, and if anybody wants to appeal he can appeal to a board set up by that same Federal Security Administrator. Its members do not have to be approved by the Senate. It authorizes appointees of the Federal Security Administrator, which means whatever administration is in power, to make final decisions on appeals from the decisions of its other appointees.

I asked several witnesses who testified before us, including a representative of the Attorney General, "Would it not be possible under this plan for the Federal Security Administrator's appointees in charge of the functions now vested in the Employees' Compensation Commission to grant a favorable decision if the employee agreed to vote right, say, or to take the proper position on some administration policy or program; or for them to make an opposite decision if he failed to do so?" He said it could happen, but that of course, we all believe in the integrity of Government agencies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have no right to put such power or temptation into anybody's hands, Republican or Democrat, without adequate safeguards. There are such safeguards in the present Employees' Compensation Commission, which this plan would remove. I submit that apart from the illegal characteristics of it, it is a great injustice to permit any chance of favoritism in administering what amounts to the insurance fund of several million persons, a fund built up out of their own pay rolls.

Mr. KEEFE. Would there be any opportunity for an appeal to a court from a decision of this appeal board if this reorganization plan goes into effect?

Mr. JUDD. There would be for private employees in the District of Columbia and for longshoremen and harbor workers throughout the country. Under the present law their appeals go directly to the courts rather than come down here to the Employees' Compensation Commission. But Federal employees, two or three million of them, including postal workers and employees of the District of Columbia, would have no way of going into court. The decision of the Board of Appeals set up here by the Federal Security Administrator would be final.

Now, I would like to say a word about the home-lending agencies which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] was discussing. If you have reorganization plan No. 1 before you and will look at the bottom of page 3, I think you will be astonished at what is provided:

> SEC. 505. (a) The following functions shall be administered by the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration: (1) The functions of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and its members under the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended.

There will continue to be a Home Loan Bank Administration, but the functions of its Board shall be transferred to a Commissioner and the Board itself and the offices of the members shall be abolished as provided in section 507 (2).

The functions of the Board of Trustees of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation will be transferred to a Commissioner and the Board abolished.

The functions of the Board of Directors of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation will be transferred to a Commissioner and the Board abolished.

Thus the controlling boards of various home-loan agencies, set up by acts of Congress, are abolished and their functions taken over by commissioners under the National Housing Agency, which was set up by Executive order under the First War Powers Act, and is made permanent by this reorganization plan even though the Reorganization Act specifically prohibits "authorizing any agency to exercise any function which is not expressly authorized by law at the time the plan is transmitted to Congress."

Then there is some language we could not understand clearly:

> SEC. 504 (3). The Federal Public Housing Authority which shall succeed to the corporate status of the United States Housing Authority with a Federal Public Housing Commissioner who shall be the head thereof.

We asked the lawyers from the Department of Justice just what is meant by one agency succeeding to the corporate status of another. The Government Corporation Control Act we passed last year provided that: "No corporation shall be created, organized, or acquired hereafter by any officer or agent of the Federal Government or by any Government corporation for the purpose of acting as an agency or instrumentality of the United States except by act of Congress." Under this plan the National Housing Agency acquires the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration which acquires the functions of two corporations—the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Is that an evasion of the Government Corporation Control Act provision I have just read? In addition, another constituent unit of NHA, the Federal Public Housing Authority, "shall succeed to the corporate status of the United States Housing Authority," which is a Government corporation.

The chairman of our committee asked if that would permit the new Federal Public Housing Commissioner to borrow money under the charter of the United States Housing Authority to whose corporate status his organization had succeeded. The attorney said he would like to examine that further.

He was asked if the language referred to merely meant that the name of the United States Housing Authority was changed to the Federal Public Housing Authority. If so, why did not it say so plainly instead of saying one "shall succeed to the corporate status" of the other. The reply, on page 103 of the hearings was, "For some reason, the people in the Housing Agency preferred this form of expression for their purposes." Apparently they are the ones who drew up that part of the plan. Just what are "their purposes"?

Mr. Chairman, these plans contain several such jokers which we were unable after days of testimony to decipher so that we could be sure what was meant. I believe that without any question they should be returned to the President for him to eliminate the reorganizations that are objectionable and clarify the ones that are so obscure that the Department of Justice could not tell us just what they meant.

Mr. Chairman, I want to devote the remainder of my time to reorganization plan No. 3. Our major objection is to section 201 which would transfer or abolish some of the functions now vested in St. Elizabeths Hospital. Let me give you a brief sketch of its history. St. Elizabeths Hospital was established to take care of the mentally ill of the Army and Navy and the Marine Corps. During the years more groups of patients have been added, including civilian employees of the Federal Government, and the mentally sick residents of the District of Columbia. But its primary obligation was to the armed services. Men were brought here from all over the United States and from duty all over the world. It had a greater variety of mental cases than any such institution in America, if not ir the world. That fact coupled with extraordinarily able professional leadership during the decades has enabled it to develop a high standard of research and teaching with respect to mental diseases which no institution in America, and I think in the world, can surpass or perhaps even match.

Under this plan, St. Elizabeths Hospital is to be split up. The veterans must be taken care of separately by the Veterans' Administration; Army personnel by the Army; Navy personnel by the Navy; Marines by the Navy; Coast Guard personnel must be taken care of elsewhere; psychotic Federal prisoners are to be taken care of by the Department of Justice, and other civilians by the Federal Security Agency.

What are the objections to this? First, many of these agencies are not equipped to give equally good treatment to the patients. Even more important, it will cripple the outstanding institution in America for the training of psychiatrists at the very time when the need for them is most urgent and the shortage most acute.

Perhaps 10 or 20 years from now such a disruption of St. Elizabeths would be justifiable, if by that time the new National Institute of Mental Health, for which legislation is pending, is able to take over some of the teaching functions now served so well by St. Elizabeths. But it is certain that it will take the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service at least that long to erect the Mental Health Institute out in Bethesda—instead of at St. Elizabeths where I think it ought to be because that is where the patients are—and build up a superior staff and establish a reputation and professional standing comparable to that of St. Elizabeths so that physicians desiring to specialize in psychiatry want to take their graduate training at the Mental Institute, as they now desire appointments to St. Elizabeths. Ten years from now, I say, this plan might make sense to psychiatrists, but to disorganize St. Elizabeths just now is like taking West Point and Annapolis to pieces in the midst of a war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. JUDD. I thank the gentleman. Sixty percent of all hospitalization by the Veterans' Administration is for psychiatric cases. Fifty percent of all disability pensions for veterans are for disability because of psychiatric disorders. We have only 4,000 psychiatrists in the United States when we need 15,000. The leading institution in the country for the training of psychiatrists, psychiatric nurses, psychiatric social workers, and psychiatric attendants, is St. Elizabeths Hospital. Now we come along and all but abolish it. I cannot believe that would be of service to the veterans, or to the Army and Navy, or to civilians. When we are appropriating millions for a new mental research institution because the whole field of psychiatric research and training is so important, it does not make sense to be tearing down the old institution, especially inasmuch as it is the best one of its kind in existence.

I hope, therefore, that all three of these resolutions will be voted up, that everybody will vote "aye", which means that we disapprove of the reorganization plans in their present form and send them back to the President, having made clear what features we object to. If he will delete those, and send the others back, I think they will be allowed to go into effect without any serious opposition.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HENRY. Can the gentleman from Minnesota give us any idea what would happen to St. Elizabeths Hospital in case this reorganization plan became effective?

Mr. JUDD. If this reorganization plan becomes effective, it would inevitably demoralize in considerable degree the hospital and its professional staff It is the only mental hospital in the United States which is approved for rotating internship. It has about 20 residents all the time training to become psychiatric specialists. It would demoralize the staff and teaching functions because it would make St. Elizabeths just about like an ordinary county insane asylum instead of perhaps the outstanding institution for the study of mental diseases in the world today.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McDONOUGH. The gentleman referred in a previous part of his remarks to the fact that some of the departments wanted that kind of language in the reorganization plan.

Mr. JUDD. Yes.

Mr. McDONOUGH. And in your remarks you referred to the President's plan. Whose plan is this?

Mr. JUDD. I may say that we asked that question again and again, and we asked it from the Director of the Budget among others. Who actually prepared these plans we never could find out. For instance, not a physician in the American Psychiatric Association was ever consulted, so far as I have been able to learn, on the plans regarding St. Elizabeths. It is, I fear, a perfect illustration of what would happen if we should ever get governmental control of medical care. Laymen would be able to sit down with their paper plans and rearrange some things here and some others there, and the patient's welfare would be all but lost in the shuffle.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Is that true also with reference to the National Housing Authority and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board?

Mr. JUDD. We could not get a witness to testify as to who drew up any of these plans or who was responsible for them.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Then, we should refuse to adopt the plan.

Mr. JUDD. I believe all three should be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] has again expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, it is pretty bad when we have such a short time to discuss this question with the House of Representatives, when you are supposed to vote it up or down. Is my face red? I was the only Republican who voted for putting this power into the hands of the President for reorganization. I was condemned by my colleagues on this side and I want to apologize to them now for putting this power in his hands, because I do not see that I have gotten any place, in efficiency in Government or in saving Government funds. I will say I am terribly disappointed. I wanted efficiency and economy. In the first place, we took this matter up to try to find out who sent in these plans for reorganization.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I do not have time now. I am embarrassed enough already.

Mr. TABER. Your trust was misplaced?

Mr. RICH. That is right. That is exactly so. I thought we would have a bill proposed that would give us some economy in Government and give us some more efficiency in Government, but after all the weeks of hearings I am unable to tell the House that we have that kind of legislation proposed by the President. Of course, he had these proposals made by the Budget Bureau and

I do not believe they are the ones to do the job.

Let me say, I asked the chairman to get Lindsay Warren up here and ask him what he thought of these bills, but Lindsay Warren, the Comptroller, did not wish to come. I have more confidence in him than any other man I have ever seen in Washington as being qualified to suggest efficiency and economy in Government operations. He is a Democrat. He is from North Carolina, and he is a fine fellow, able and capable of doing a good job. He would give us just what he thought were the facts. Let me show you what he said when he came before our committee some months ago about Government inefficiency. He said, "There are 29 agencies of Government lending Government funds."

Three agencies of Government deal with deposits and loans. Thirty-four agencies of Government deal with the acquisition of land; 16 agencies of Government deal with wildlife preservation; 10 agencies of Government deal with Government construction; 9 agencies of Government deal with credit and finance; 12 agencies of Government deal with home and community planning; 10 agencies of Government deal with materials and construction; 28 agencies of Government deal with welfare matters; 14 agencies of Government deal with forestry; 4 agencies of Government deal with the examination of banks; 65 agencies of Government deal with the gathering of statistics; 75 bureaus, divisions, and agencies of Government deal with transportation; 8 agencies of bureaus and departments deal with labor; and 3 agencies of Government deal with the collection of customs.

There is no man in Government as well qualified as Lindsay Warren to know about matters of Government; yet his counsel and advice were not asked for by the President. Instead of that the President went to the Budget Bureau, one of the greatest spending agencies we have had in the history of our country, and asked them to suggest some economy in Government. Ever since Louis Douglass left the Budget Bureau, we have not had any economy in Government spending.

It is time we did something about Government efficiency; it is time we voted these resolutions through, send them back to the President and let him try it over, he certainly should be able to profit if we do and the country will certainly benefit if we do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 1, HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 155—REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 2, HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 151—REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 3, HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 154

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the above resolutions were reported by the committee by a divided vote. There were votes of "present," and there were negative votes. It is fair to say that a large majority of the members of the committee voted to report the resolutions.

REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1945

The Reorganization Act of 1945 provides that the plans of reorganization submitted by the President will take effect in 60 days unless the two Houses pass a concurrent resolution stating in substance that Congress does not favor the reorganization plan. The committee conducted extensive hearings which are published and are available. Under the act the resolutions are highly privileged, and there must be a straight vote up or down. Plans submitted by the President cannot be amended.

The committee had 10 days in which to conduct hearings and submit a report.

THE THREE PLANS

I think the language in part V of plan 1 consolidating housing agencies under the National Housing Agency most unfortunate. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT] submitted the report in opposition to plan 1. The objection was based upon the National Housing Agency. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO], the chairman of the committee, submitted the report against plan 2. The objection was based upon the Employees' Compensation Commission being abolished and its functions transferred to an Administrator. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] submitted the report in opposition to plan 3, and while the report states that the opposition was based upon the disapproval of the transfer and abolition of the functions of St. Elizabeths Hospital, it is fair to state that there was some objection to the plan because it provided for the continuance of the Marine Inspection and Navigation under the Coast Guard. In each of the reports, the committee state that if the said provisions had not obtained in the three plans, the plans would not have been objectionable, thus indicating that the committee would have approved the plans if the objections named in the reports, consisting of substantially one part in each plan had been eliminated.

THE PRESIDENT ENTITLED TO BENEFIT OF DOUBT

When the President submits these plans I feel that he should have the benefit of the doubt, and if by and large these plans would provide for coordinating and grouping or for the elimination of overlapping and the reduction of agencies and the abolition of functions, they should be approved. I have advocated reorganization for years. I will support all plans submitted by the President unless there is involved in any one of the plans a policy or a program that is utterly unsound. The President has the right to name the over-all agency of all housing groups the National Housing Agency. Inasmuch as the Reorganization Act prohibits the continuance of agencies established under the War Powers Act, it is most unfortunate that the President used the phraseology of his Executive order establishing the National Housing Agency and transferred to the supervision of that agency the insuring and financing of housing. Federal housing is in the field of public welfare. Financing private housing and dealing with physical matters in housing is entirely different from Federal Housing which makes loans and grants and promotes subsidized housing and operates in the field of social welfare. This establishes a new policy, and I think that the President made a mistake in trying to establish a policy that Congress had not approved. I believe the policy to be unsound, and hence reluctantly oppose plan 1.

If I had been writing the other plans, I would have eliminated the transferring of the functions of St. Elizabeths as they relate to the Army and the Navy. I would not have included the transfer of the Employees' Compensation Commission. I would at least have pursued the policy of expediency with respect to bipartisan boards. I am more concerned, however, with the substance, and it is the substance of approving Federal housing at Federal expense in times of peace that forces me to oppose plan No. 1. I am aware that the Federal Housing Administration will revert when the War Powers Act expires, but I am also aware that Congress has discontinued appropriations for further construction. It will revert to its former status, but that status will be in supervising projects already established.

I favor administration generally by a single Administrator rather than by a board. The Employees' Compensation Commission handles thousands of cases of employees and makes adjudications aggregating millions of dollars. The Veterans' Administration with a single Administrator adjudicates millions of claims and adjudicates claims involving billions of dollars. If a single Administrator in the Veterans' Administration can function satisfactorily, it can function satisfactorily in handling the functions of Federal compensation.

CONSTITUTIONALITY

The constitutionality of the Reorganization Act has been questioned. The constitutionality of the transfer of the Employees Compensation Commission has been particularly questioned.

The question of the constitutionality of the Reorganization Act has been foreclosed. Congress has decided against the contention. Some two or three reorganization acts were passed during the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt. I repeat, that Congress has decided that the Reorganization Act is constitutional. It rejected the contentions of those who asserted that there was an abdication of legislative power. When the reorganization bill was before the House I submitted a brief in connection with my presentation of the bill in favor of the constitutionality of the act. That brief is in the congressional debates. In a word, the question of constitutionality has no place in the pending bill.

Again it is asserted that the provision of plan No. 2, abolishing the Employees Compensation Commission, is illegal and unconstitutional. It is particularly maintained that it violates section 5 (a) (6) of the Reorganization Act with respect to quasi-judicial functions. The provision prohibits any greater limitation than existed with respect to the exercise of the function by the agency in which it was vested prior to the reorganization. The provision does not prevent the transfer of the functions. It does prevent limiting the functions. The act authorizes the abolition of the Commission. The plan does not limit the quasi-judicial authority and thus does not violate section 5 of the Reorganization Act.

EXEMPTIONS

The Reorganization Act exempts the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and other quasi-judicial agencies from the terms of act. There is no effort in any of the pending plans to reorganize the exempted agencies.

There is nothing in the plans involving the Civil Aeronautics Administration or the Civil Aeronautics Board. The arguments with respect to this Board are not applicable. They are not in point. We have heard them previously, and there is no occasion to repeat them about the pending bill.

TWENTY-EIGHT AGENCIES

The three plans cover 28 individual items embracing a broad area of governmental activity. There is an average of nine agencies in each of the plans. Only one is objected to in plan 1, only one in plan 2, and not over two of the items in plan 3. Twelve of the items have the effect of consolidating related functions and programs. There are economies in the consolidations. There are economies in the abolitions. Nine of the items clean up administrative problems, but 24 or 25 of the items are generally acceptable.

REORGANIZATION

There is no more difficult problem than reorganization. Congress through the years has failed to reorganize. We were realistic. Congress gave the Executive the power to reorganize, but reserved the right to reject the reorganization plans of the President. The Reorganization Act states the needs, the purposes, provides for the plans and limits the powers of the Executive in reorganization.

The pending three plans do provide for grouping and consolidating. They do provide for abolishing both agencies and functions. They provide for eliminating overlapping and duplication of effort. They should result in some economies, but they do not involve major reorganization problems, nor will they materially reduce in and of themselves the number of Federal employees. While the act expressed the hope for an overall reduction of 25 percent, it is fair to say that there was no claim that the plans proposed would provide for a reduction of 25 percent in the administrative costs of the agencies affected.

CRITICISM

Inasmuch as Congress has not provided for reorganization, Congress is not in position to criticize the proposals of the President even though some of the proposals may not be satisfactory to Congress. The fundamental question involved is whether or not there should be reorganization. If the plans are not approved, there is a set-back in reorganization that is unfortunate.

The reports of the committee point out that the objection to each of the plans is based largely, if not wholly, on one part of each plan. The committee, therefore, leads the Congress and the country to believe that if the reorganizations are submitted with the objectionable parts eliminated, the plans would be satisfactory. In the event Congress rejects the plans, I trust that the plans will promptly be resubmitted with the parts to which there was no substantial objection.

MINORITY REPORT

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] filed a minority report to the reorganization plan No. 1, and while his minority report is attached to the report on that plan, it is a minority report covering not only plan 1 but the remaining plans 2 and 3. While I did not sign the minority report, as disclosed by the hearings, and as is known in the committee, I share very largely the views set forth in the minority report. I shall vote most reluctantly for the resolution opposed proposing plan No. 1 because it includes part 5 which attempts to make the National Housing Agency, a war agency constructing housing at Federal expense, a permanent over-all agency. There is no authorization for making a war agency permanent.

However, I am opposed to the resolutions rejecting plans 2 and 3, for while I regret that plan 2 provides for transfering the United States Employees' Compensation Commission and abolishing the commission itself in plan 2, I believe that the other provisions of plan 2 are of enough importance to warrant the approval of the plan as a whole. I am especially of the opinion that the rights of Federal employees will not be prejudiced in any way merely by abolishing the commission and establishing an administrator for the functions of the commission obtain and the rights of the Federal employees are better safeguarded.

I see no valid reason for rejecting plan 3. It was disapproved as shown by the report because of the elimination of Army and Navy patients from the St. Elizabeths Hospital. There is no testimony to show that the hospital would not still be operated to full capacity and that it would not be available for teaching and for psychiatry in the future as in the past. The hospital would probably be continued without increased enlargements that really impair its efficiency, but in all events, the rejection of plan 3 was based upon the transfer or abolition of the functions of St. Elizabeths Hospital.

REORGANIZATION OR NOT REORGANIZATION

The basic question involved is whether or not there will be a reorganization of Government or not. I regret the setback in reorganization that would be caused by the rejection of a single one of the plans. With the exception of the National Housing Agency in plan 1, I believe that the reorganizations are an improvement. There will never be any reorganization by Congress, and there will never be any reorganization that is satisfactory to Federal employees. We have had the experience of the last 40 years to profit by. It is almost as difficult for the President to reorganize as it is for Congress. The plans of President Hoover were rejected, and the plans of President Roosevelt were limited in scope.

BIPARTISAN BOARDS

It must be admitted that the Federal Employees Compensation Commission and the Social Security Board fall within the so-called category of bipartisan boards. However, there isn't as much in the argument as appears on its face. The fundamental law establishing these two boards provides that not more than two of the members should be of the same political faith. The better method, as in the case of the Veterans' Administration, is to provide for a single administrator with boards from which appeals may be taken. The plans so stipulate.

PLAN 1. NATIONAL HOUSING AGENCY

The committee bases its objection to plan 1 on part V. The report thus shows that if part V were eliminated the plan would be acceptable.

Part V provides for the consolidation of the Federal Housing Authority, the Federal Housing Administration, and the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration under an agency to be designated the National Housing Agency. The committee believes that there should be a permanent consolidation and a grouping of all related housing agencies and functions, but the committee does not believe that lending agencies such as the Federal Housing Agency which insures loans for private builders and private home owners should be placed under the administrative control of the National Housing Agency or any other Federal agency whose primary function is to build homes with Federal money and manage Federally-owned housing projects. The committee advocates private ownership of homes, and does not believe that the private construction of homes for private ownership would be encouraged or promoted by an agency whose policy favors Federal building and Federal control of homes.

The Federal Housing Agency was established by Executive Order 9070 on February 24, 1942. This Agency will expire with the expiration of the War Powers Act. It was designed to provide temporary housing for war purposes. Congress has previously discontinued appropriations for new public housing except for war purposes. While the President may designate the consolidated agency by calling it the National Housing Agency or the National Housing Administration, it is most unfortunate that the President names a temporary war agency as the consolidated agency. It is still more unfortunate that the President in transmitting the plan 1 based his recommendation largely upon S. 1592, the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill that was approved by the Senate on April 12, 1946. This bill has not passed the House. While I do not believe the President intended to force the passage of this bill on the House, the fact remains that much of the argument for the proposed part V of plan 1, with the National Housing Agency as the head of all housing agencies, is based upon the fact that the President concluded that the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill would pass the House. A mistake was made. Further subsidies for housing have not been determined by Congress. Federal Housing contemplates subsidized Federal housing under Federal control. The committee believes in private homes under private control and under private construction. Congress has provided for supplementing private construction and private ownership by insuring loans. I regretfully repeat that while I only oppose part V in plan 1 that this is the major proposal in plan 1 and more objectionable than the other six parts of the plan. I trust that the President will promptly resubmit plan 1 with a regrouping of the housing agencies under an agency that will promote the objectives of home loans and home insurance under private construction and will not undertake to force Congress to commit itself to a policy of federalized housing by approving a war agency dedicated to constructing Federal housing at Federal expense as the over-all control agency of private homes and private construction.

There were no objections to parts I, II, III, IV, VI, and VII before the committee. It is most regrettable that part V was included, and I repeat that I reluctantly favor the resolution rejecting plan 1 solely because of part V which establishes a temporary Federal wartime agency as a permanent agency supervising all housing. There is desperate need for a consolidation of housing agencies, but the consolidation should be sound and should not perpetuate an agency that is reported to have done more propaganda work for federalized housing at Federal expense than should have been done by any agency that was entrusted with temporary housing to promote the war and for housing for veterans following the war. My information is that Mr. Wilson Wyatt, the Administrator, is a most capable official, and I do not believe that he would permit the continuance of the reported propaganda that the Federal Housing Agency has indulged in if he continues to be the Administrator. The fact that Mr. Wyatt is the Administrator and a most capable one is another reason why I will reluctantly vote against plan 1 on account of the inclusion of the National Housing Agency as part V.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 2, HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 151

Mr. Chairman, under the Reorganization Act the President submitted reorganization plan No. 2. It was referred to the Committee on Expenditures, and the committee submitted a divided report. A large majority of the committee opposed the plan but a minority favored the plan. The committee conducted extensive hearings, and in its report it based its objections to section 3 of said plan 2, which abolishes the United States Employees' Compensation Commission. This Commission was established by an act of Congress. It was urged that it is bipartisan. The Commission was established about 1916. It was provided that not more than two of the three members should be of one political party. I do not agree with the report, which states that the transfer of the functions of the Commission to the Federal Security Agency violates section 5 (a) (6) of the act.

The Commission was established, as I have stated, in 1916. At that time its functions were limited. The number of employees was rather small. Since it was established, the Administrator, rather than the Board, idea in executive authority has obtained. Many Federal employees are afraid that their claims of compensation would be prejudiced. I listened carefully to all of the testimony. I would oppose the plan if I thought that the rights of any Federal employees would be jeopardized under the proposal. Instead of being jeopardized, I believe that the claims will be handled more expeditiously and more thoroughly than at present. The bipartisan character of the Board has been overemphasized. I doubt if the matter of party or politics has ever occurred to any employee or any member of the Board. The Board, as such, can examine but few of the many, many cases submitted to them. It must depend upon its examiners and employees.

The said section 5 (a) (6) of the act stipulates that no reorganization plan shall provide for, or have the effect of, imposing, in connection with the exercise of any quasi-judicial or quasi-legislative function possessed by an independent agency, any greater limitation upon the exercise of independent judgment and discretion, to the full extent authorized by law, in the carrying out of such function than existed with respect to the exercise of such function by the agency in which it was vested prior to the taking effect of such reorganization. This provision does not forbid transferring such functions from an independent agency providing the agency to which they are assigned has an equal independence of judgment and discretion.

The administration of workman's compensation, which is the only type of activity carried on by the agency, involves, of course, quasi-judicial functions. The greater part of the quasi-judicial work, however, arises under the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act and the act applying to private employees in the District of Columbia. The quasi-judicial functions under these two acts are not vested in the Commission as a body, but in Deputy Commissioners, who are given by law "full power and authority to hear and determine all questions" with respect to claims. Appeals do not go to the Commission, but directly to the courts. Plan 2 makes no change whatever in the functions of the Deputy Commissioners. The plan merely transfers the functions of the Commission to a Commission under the Federal Security Agency, and it provides for the transfer from one independent agency to another and it does not subject the functions to any greater outside control than before. The Agency will have the same degree of independence of judgment as the Commission had.

The truth is that the plan affords claimants greater protection than exists under the present arrangement. There is no provision of appeals by Government employees at present. The plan provides for an appeals board to hear and determine appeals. The decisions of this board will not be subject to review or modification by an administrative officer. This procedure is fully in accord with the Administrative Procedure Act recently passed by Congress.

The number of agencies is reduced. There is one administrator instead of three members. The work of the Federal Security Agency is similar. Increased efficiency by bringing workman's compensation under the Federal agency having knowledge of insurance administration should result.

The provision reduces the number of Government agencies, provides for better administration of workmen's programs. The Department of Justice has testified that it is legal. Congress cannot criticize the President and at the same time block his efforts to simplify the administrative structure.

BOARD OF VISITORS OF ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL

There was some objection to the abolition of the Board of Visitors of the St. Elizabeths Hospital. According to the hearings, there was no occasion for the continuance of this Board. There would be a duplication of its functions. At all events, it is an immaterial matter.

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

The Social Security Board is among the so-called bipartisan agencies. The act establishing the Board provides that not more than two of the three members shall belong to the same political faith. There were few objections to the transfer of the functions of the Board to an administrator. The bipartisan character of the Social Security Board and the Employees Compensation Commission was emphasized. I believe that the better administration can be obtained from an administrator than by a board. A single administrator is more efficient. There is no agency of the Government that handles more funds than the Veterans' Administration. There is a single Administrator. The Administrator, however, is authorized and empowered to set up boards. I repeat that the better way for administration is by an administrator rather than by a board. We have but one President, we have but one Cabinet member for each Department. The better way is to provide for a single head with assistant administrators and with boards for the adjudication of appeals, with the right of appeal.

OTHER SECTIONS OF PLAN NO. 2

There are but two sections in plan No. 2, I repeat, that the committee objected to: section 3 involving the Employees' Compensation Commission and the section against abolishing the Board of Visitors of St. Elizabeths Hospital. There was substantially no protest in the hearings against the other 10 sections of the plan. Eighty or 90 percent of the plan is sound. Personally, I would not have disturbed the Employees' Compensation Commission. I have every confidence in the members of the Board, but I do not believe that the plan should be rejected because the essential functions of the Commission and the rights of employees are preserved and promoted. I believe that plan No. 2 should be approved and that the pending House Concurrent Resolution 151 should be rejected. If we are for reorganization, we should say so. If we are against reorganization, that issue was settled by the passage of the Reorganzation Act.

Something was said as I have stated about the legality of the abolition of the Employees' Compensation Commission. Congress settled that question when it passed the Reorganization Act. I concur with the Department of Justice that that act is valid and the proposed reorganization of the Congress is legal.

I repeat, plan No. 2 should be approved and that the resolution in opposition to the plan should be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANASCO. I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 3, HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 154

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Expenditures by a divided vote disapproved section 201 of plan 3 respecting the functions of St. Elizabeths Hospital, and they recommended against plan 3 because it would transfer or abolish functions for which St. Elizabeths Hospital was established. Section 201 is part II of the plan. There are nine other parts of the plan and according to the hearings there are substantially no sound protests against the other nine parts of the plan. I have high regard for the views of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] who submitted the report to reject plan 3. I cannot concur. The plan provides for the transfer of the responsibility for the care of military and naval mental patients from St. Elizabeths Hospital to the War and Navy Departments. It is contended that this transfer would reduce the effectiveness of the institution as a teaching hospital. The answer is that the load at St. Elizabeths without the patients from the Army and Navy is equal to the capacity of the plant. Its further growth would make the plant unwieldy. The high standards maintained would be threatened. The War and Navy Departments provide extensive medical service, including the care of the insane, for Army and Navy patients. The effect of the plan is to extend on a permanent basis the organizational arrangements which have been developed at the close of the war. I repeat that there is less merit in opposition to plan 3 than the opposition to any of the proposed plans. I have already indicated that the functions of the Board of Visitors of St. Elizabeths Hospital overlap the functions of the Federal Security Administrator. The performance by the Board of statutory functions that are long outdated would mean a dual control of the institution and would seriously interfere with its administration. It might be admitted for the sake of the argument that point 2 of plan 3 might well have been omitted, but here are nine other parts without substantial objection that will promote efficient regrouping, coordination, and reorganization. There is a reduction in expenses. There will be an increase in efficiency.

BUREAU OF MARINE INSPECTION AND NAVIGATION

While there was objection to part 1 which includes sections 101, 102, 103, and 104 of plan No. 3 to the continuance of the Marine Inspection under the Coast Guard, the objections were not very impressive. The arguments of those who opposed were not convincing. I was impressed that part 1 was really one of the most constructive provisions in the reorganization plan No. 3.

The Coast Guard is an excellent institution. It has a good reputation. It has a responsibility in maritime safety. Air, sea patrol, and rescue operations are being developed. The close relationship between the Coast Guard and the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation is obvious. While it has a military form of organization, the Coast Guard in peace is not a military organization in the same sense as the Army and Navy. It was composed of men who wanted to follow the sea as a career, and not as a part of the fighting force.

The rejection of part 1 of plan No. 3 means that the Bureau of Inspection would go back under the Department of Commerce. There is certainly a lot more reason for its being under the Coast Guard. There are no reasons for its being returned to the Department of Commerce. When it was under Commerce, there was an antiquated, ineffective administration. It has been under the Coast Guard for 4 years. It has improved vastly. There is no occasion for the fears of the workmen. It has been tried for 4 years. Experience is better than fear. There are other parts of part 1 that were most meritorious. There were no objections. On the whole I believe that Marine Inspection and Navigation would be promoted by being under the Coast Guard rather than being returned to the Department of Commerce. It is rather strange that the Department of Commerce did not oppose the Marine Inspection and Navigation continuing under the Coast Guard.

THE ISSUE

The issue is clear cut. If we block the reorganization of the executive branch we thereby set back reorganization. We refuse to permit the President to do what Congress has been unable to do. We either want reorganization or we do not want reorganization. Plan 3 conforms to the purposes, and the plan is in accordance with the provisions of the Reorganization Act. Much is said about there not being a 25-percent reduction in all the agencies embraced in plan 3. The Reorganization Act expressed a hope for an over-all reduction in administrative expenses of the Government of 25 percent. It was not confined to any other plan. I believe that the pending Resolution 154 rejecting plan 3 should be defeated and that plan 3 should be approved. The defeat of the pending resolution will promote reorganization and efficiency in Government.

It will be kept in mind that after all the costs of the ordinary normal functions of the Government are a small part of the annual appropriations. Not more than one-fourth of the appropriations are involved in Government reorganization. The costs of wars, past and present, and of maintaining the Army and the Navy take substantially 80 to 85 percent of every tax dollar. I do not, however, minimize the importance of reorganization and of the reduction of the costs of Government. I believe reorganization should reduce the expenses of Government. I emphasize that, after all, expenses can be reduced where there is a will to reduce. The cost of any agency or department depends more upon the administration than upon the actual provisions of the act.

No Federal agency, no Federal employee ever asked either the Congress or the Executive for reorganization.

I now yield, to the gentleman from Minnesota, Dr. JUDD.

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman says these plans are 80 percent good, and I agree with him. Would he not prefer to have them 100 percent good, if that can be done without serious difficulty?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Of course, I would, and I have so stated. But, frankly, if that argument were followed to its conclusion, every bill voted on by Congress would be sent back to the committee, because you and I did not agree with 10 percent of it. With all due deference to the gentleman, and I like him. I like his views about St. Elizabeths, and I told him frankly that I would have left it out had I been writing reorganization plan 3, but I think there is involved a substantial reorganization and regrouping in plan 3 that, in my judgment, does not warrant the Congress constantly criticizing bureaucracy, waste, and extravagance, in rejecting a plan that is 90 percent good.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman referred to the Veterans' Administration, headed by one Administrator, and then he compared that with Federal employees.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What is the question, please?

Mr. CHURCH. They are working for the Government. The veterans are not working for the Government. Give them a fair show with their bipartisan board.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In my judgment, the man who offered his life upon the altar of his country is entitled, to say the least of it, to just as careful and just as judicial consideration as the man who works for his Government.

Mr. CHURCH. But he is not on the pay roll.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have answered the gentleman's question. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], and I trust he will not make a speech about Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Mr. HALLECK. I am glad to know the gentleman is opposed to plan No. 1. I am surprised that he is not opposed to the other two plans.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What is the question, please?

Mr. HALLECK. You have referred to the fact that the Employees' Compensation Commission, after all, has no real function. I have in my hand pages from the United States Government Manual which recites the functions of that Commission. With your permission, I will put those in the RECORD.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am thoroughly familiar with them. I will refer to them. I am familiar with the act. I want to be clear in response to your question because the gentleman means to be fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman the balance of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for six more minutes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I stated that when we passed the Reorganization Act we provided for the transfer of functions. That is exactly what would obtain in transferring it to a single administrator.

Mr. HALLECK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I think the committee is entitled to know what the Commission says its functions are.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I know what they are. I do not want to conceal anything. I want to yield to other Members and my time is limited.

Mr. HALLECK. It will take only a minute to read these into the RECORD.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Everybody in this Congress knows that it is physically impossible for three persons on a board to pass on the claims of hundreds of thousands of employees. We know in practice that they have to be handled by examiners.

Mr. HALLECK. But we know that in practice and in operation they run the affairs of the Commission.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes. I am glad to have your views, always.

I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I hope I can get along with my colleague without any controversy. I understood you to say there was very little abolition and very little saving of funds in any of the plans. When I voted to authorize the President to reorganize the executive agencies of Government, I thought I was voting for authority to abolish some of them so as to save money and eliminate bureaucracy.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Now, have we got any of that relief?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes, we have. I said there were no major abolitions and that there were no major savings or economies. We talk about reorganization as we do about the weather, but we do not do very much about it. I want to be fair. I stated it was hard for the President to reorganize. We have not done it in Congress. Let us keep in mind that substanially 80 to 85 cents out of every dollar that we appropriate has nothing to do with reorganization or administration. It goes to wars past and future and to the Army and the Navy. I wish to be fair and say there there were no savings of major amount. There were savings but they were not major.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman mentioned, in his clear-cut and helpful statement, that there are 28 items contained in the 3 plans. It is fair to say that 12 of those items actually concern consolidation of programs and agencies. Therefore, we do get economy, do we not?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I stated that, but I wanted to be fair and I stated there are no major economies, because frankly these 28 agencies are not agencies that ought to cause the Congress of the United States to take issue with the Chief Executive except in one case. I stated I came to the conclusion to oppose plan 1 reluctantly. That was with reference to National Housing.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. There are certain items in these plans that we all agree are satisfactory. The gentleman states there is 20 percent of these plans that he does not like. Why not send the plans back to the President? He could send them back here within a week's time with the objectionable features eliminated and the Congress would agree to them.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have answered the gentleman's question by saying that no plans that could be offered would be 100 percent satisfactory to all the Members of Congress. I think that when the President submits a plan that is 80 or 90 percent satisfactory that he has done a pretty good job.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. BENDER. I know the gentleman is always fair and I have always admired his fairness. I want the gentleman to point out to the committee, since he is the last speaker——

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What is the gentleman's question, please?

Mr. BENDER. Since the gentleman is the last speaker and since he is expressing his own views I would like the gentleman to answer whether or not he is expressing the views of the majority of the committee.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do not speak for the majority of the committee. As I indicated at the very inception of my argument even a majority of the committee makes mistakes. They made mistakes in reporting unfavorably all three plans. I agree on one resolution. I know the gentleman's views. I differ with him.

Mr. BENDER. But only three Members voted for any one plan.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I stated the situation in the opening of my argument. I stated, furthermore, that in my judgment, it is not a question of what the committee did but it is a question of what the committee did that can be supported, that can stand careful analysis, that can be supported in fact and in argument; and in my judgment, I have stated that the only fundamental policy that the Congress of the United States has thus far not adopted, that is proposed in these three plans, is that of continuing the wartime National Housing Agency that the Congress has not authorized, and I think reluctantly, much as I would like to vote for reorganization, that Congress is justified in voting against plan 1; but notwithstanding their defects, whether they be 10 percent, 5 percent, or 15 percent incorrect, Congress is not justified in disapproving plans 2 and 3.

Congress itself has not reorganized in 40 years. We might just as well admit that when we reject these reorganization plans we are setting back reorganization. The President of the United States, according to the testimony of all the witnesses, submitted a satisfactory plan with the exception of about five items.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield briefly.

Mr. CHURCH. Does not the gentleman feel that since the committee reported against all three plans——

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is not a question, that is just a statement in accord with the gentleman's views. I decline to yield further.

I believe that plan 1 should be rejected, but I do urge that plans 2 and 3 should be approved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan No. 1 of May 16, 1946, transmitted to Congress by the President on the 16th of May 1946.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan No. 2 of May 16, 1946, transmitted to Congress by the President on the 16th day of May 1946.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan No. 3 of May 16, 1946, transmitted to Congress by the President on the 16th day of May 1946.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEEFE. The Clerk has now read the three concurrent resolutions with respect to plans Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Do I understand the proposal is that we vote on these resolutions en bloc?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House, they will be taken up separately when we go back into the House.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman asked whether or not we would vote on these resolutions separately or en bloc in the Committee. It strikes me—and I propound this inquiry of the Chair—even though it may be in order to vote on them en bloc, could we not ask for a division of the question and they be voted on separately in Committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that the order of the House is that they be considered en bloc in the Committee.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, the wording of the three resolutions is such that if one desires to vote against the reorganization plan, should he vote "aye" or "no"?

The CHAIRMAN. In the House, if you want to disapprove the plan you would vote "aye."

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report back to the House, House Concurrent Resolutions 155, 151, and 154, with the recommendation that the several resolutions be passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMAS of Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration House Concurrent Resolutions 155, 151, and 154 had directed him to report them back to the House with the recommendation that each of the resolutions do pass.

The SPEAKER. Under order of the House each resolution must be voted on separately.

The question is on House Concurrent Resolution 155, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan No. 1 of May 16, 1946, transmitted to Congress by the President on the 16th of May 1946.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In reference to the three votes on plans Nos. 1, 2, and 3, a vote of "no" would be in support of the Presidential recommendation, a vote of "aye" to override the President, is that correct?

The SPEAKER. A vote of "aye" will adopt the resolution rejecting the President's plan.

The question is on House Concurrent Resolution 155.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANDOLPH) there were—ayes 180, noes 37.

So the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Concurrent Resolution 151.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan No. 2 of May 16, 1946, transmitted to Congress by the President on the 16th day of May 1946.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the concurrent resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANDOLPH) there were—ayes 166, noes 40.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty Members are present, a quorum.

So the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next resolution (H. Con. Res. 154).

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan No. 3 of May 16, 1946, transmitted to Congress by the President on the 16th day of May 1946.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the concurrent resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1946

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6885) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, to provide appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6885, with Mr. COOLEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF DEFENSE TRANSPORTATION

Salaries and expenses: For all necessary expenses of the Office of Defense Transportation, fiscal year 1947, including salary of the Director at not to exceed $12,000, and the Deputy Director at $10,000, traveling expenses (not to exceed $50,000), including reimbursement, at not to exceed 4 cents per mile, of employees or others rendering service to said Office for official travel performed by them in privately owned automobiles within the limits of their official stations and attendance at meetings of organizations concerned with the work of the agency; personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; contract stenographic reporting services; lawbooks, books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals; maintenance, operation and repair of passenger automobiles; acceptance and utilization of voluntary and uncompensated services; printing and binding (not to exceed $10,000); not to exceed $4,000 for deposit in the general fund of the Treasury for cost of penalty mail as required by section 2 of the Act of June 28, 1944 (Public Law 364); payment, at rates not in excess of those fixed by law for witnesses attending in United States courts (28 U. S. C. 600c), of fees, mileage, and subsistence of witnesses appearing at hearing held by the Office of Defense Transportation in connection with the performance of its functions; $525,000; Provided, That the payment of subsistence to witnesses shall be subject to certification by the Director of the Office of Defense Transportation or his designee as to the necessity therefor: Provided further, That in operating any commercial railroad or truck line the Office of Defense Transportation shall pay whatever license or inspection fees and highway use compensation taxes such lines would have been obligated to pay had they continued in operation under the control of the owners thereof.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read a letter which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND REHABILITATION ADMINISTRATION,
June 28, 1946.

DEAR CLARENCE: I have just written to Representative JOHN TABER concerning his amendment. I sincerely hope that the Taber amendment will be reconsidered, since it limits the use of funds for shipments after December 31, 1946, and March 31, 1947, to Europe and China, respectively.

You will recall that a limitation now applicable to the present appropriation is in the law. That fixes the date of shipment to June 1947, affording ample time to clear the European situation.

The amendment will not do what is contemplated. It will waste some $300,000,000 worth of food, supplies, and equipment for which deliveries to UNRRA cannot be made within that time. It will tie up food, material, and equipment paid for by other contributing nations. The operations are centrally controlled, and there is no way in which operating, administrative, communication, and transportation costs can be separated from the general fund. For instance, an order of 75 locomotives from Australia for China out of the Australian contribution, now in manufacture to be delivered about midsummer of 1947, though originally intended for early 1947, could not be shipped in time. This is but an illustration. There are several hundreds of such orders. Agricultural machinery on order in this country which should be in process of delivery now, in all likelihood we will not get until after the 1st of the year because of stoppage of production caused by strikes. The same is true of water and sewer pipes which should have been shipped weeks ago. These have been delayed and we will not get them until the end of the year because of, first, the steel strike, and then the coal strike. I could go on indefinitely and give you instance after instance.

As I testified before the committee, I estimate that it would be about March or April before European shipments will have been completed, and perhaps the fall of 1947 for China. I do not see how it would be possible to carry out the intent of the limitation on the dates fixed by the Taber amendment without simply junking some $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 worth of supplies that would be on hand and could not be shipped. The United States has enough surplus supplies on our hands now. I am sure you will agree.

I fully understand what Mr. TABER has in mind, but I can assure you that the amendment does not do it, and that there is no way of limiting such a large operation as UNRRA has had for the past 2 years on midnight of a given date. Frankly, I am not smart enough to do it. I have conferred with my staff, and there is no way that it can be done. If the amendment is passed, it is tantamount to a reduction of the appropriation to which the United States is committed of some $300,000,000. In that event, I will ask the President to relieve me and then the UNRRA Council, as it will require someone much smarter than I am who can perform miracles to take over the job. While I did not intend to remain here permanently, and took over because of an emergency, I do want to have a definite plan of operation to turn over to a successor, or to a new agency, to complete a plan which will not be wasteful and which will give 100 cents value for every dollar appropriated by mine and other countries.

You have been so understanding and helpful that I will greatly appreciate it if you will bring the situation to the attention of the House.

With kind personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

F. H. LAGUARDIA,
Director General.

P. S.—A limitation, if necessary, as to purchase of supplies, food, etc., after December 31, 1947, could be administered.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, Mayor LaGuardia called me this morning. He said he had not been advised of this amendment until he got it over the ticker. He was very much concerned about it. He said he was mindful of Mr. TABER'S interest and was in thorough agreement with his objective but when applied to the situation it was impossible of administration. He said there would be no alternative if this amendment went into the bill but to resign. He did not want that to be understood as a threat but such an amendment would leave a situation impossible of administration. He said he did not believe the House really understood the situation when the amendment was passed; if they wanted to place a limitation upon purchases, upon the expenditure of money, that was all right, but not upon delivery, because most of these supplies have already been bought or contracted for. The money has already been spent or committed and time must be afforded in which to deliver them. He said he could not be a party to the wasting of $300,000,000, and to the failure to keep our solemn agreement with 44 UNRRA nations, and the nations which had been promised relief.

We will have an opportunity to again vote on this amendment when the bill is reported back to the House. I trust all Members will consider this not from the point of view which we took when the matter originally came up, but in the light of what Mayor LaGuardia has said in the letter just read. "All the boys down there know me," he said. "They know I would not take advantage of anybody and that I would try to administer it if it were possible, but under such limitations, administration would be hopeless. When they reconsider it I hope they will decide to leave it out."

Mr. Chairman, I trust he is not amiss in that hope.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to pay attention to what Mr. LaGuardia and what Mr. Wood told us when they were before the committee on hearings. May I read from the top of page 248:

Mr. WOOD. That leaves us a carry-over for the January-to-March period in this table, which is based on finishing by the end of the year, except to China, of about $20,000,000.

What am I going to say and when am I going to be able to correctly size up a situation which is presented to the committee? I am not in the least unsympathetic with providing the needed relief which we should give to these people. On the other hand, I am forced to take the position that some time we must come to the point where these people in these other lands, as a result of their own efforts in tilling the soil and producing and mining, will be able to support themselves.

I went out of my way, beyond the picture that was formally presented to us, to ask Mr. LaGuardia several questions. The answer appears in part on page 264 and in part on the pages following.

I asked about the Polish situation. Frankly, I was unable to get a clear picture of that, and frankly I do not believe Mr. LaGuardia could then or can now give a clear picture as to Poland.

I asked about the Italian situation. I was told that if Italy could find markets for her citrus fruits she ought to be able to take care of her own wheat situation.

I asked about the Greek situation and on page 265 you will find the answer that if Greece could get her tobacco produced and exported after the 1947 crop, she should be in a greatly improved condition.

About the Chinese picture we were told by Mr. Wood. I said: "You would not anticipate that you can get $500,000,000 over there for quite a while?"

Mr. Wood's answer was:

Of course, UNRRA shipments to China are not scheduled to cease until March 1947.

There was no idea of expansion from that answer.

With reference to Yugoslavia, frankly, I do not believe we know much and I do not believe they do. That is about the picture. To be honest, I could not withdraw the amendment on the basis of the facts that were developed before our committee and what appears now to contradict it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Chairman, I feel absolutely constrained at this time to bring to the attention of the membership Discharge Petition No. 32 which is now on the Speaker's desk. The petition relates to H. R. 6384, introduced by the distinguished gentlewoman from Massachusetts, my colleague [Mrs. ROGERS]. There are also two similar bills, one by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], and the other by the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAND], to provide automobiles for amputees and paralyzed victims of actual warfare who have service-connected disabilities.

There is nothing that I could possibly say to emphasize the merits of this measure because they are very obvious. To be sure, it may lead—and properly so—to other measures broadening the privileges and benefits to our wounded and incapacitated. Objections based on the need for economy may be raised against it, but so far as I am concerned, I can conceive of many and better ways to economize than at the expense of those who have been handicapped so seriously and so grievously as a result of gallant service in the war.

Many of these young heroes to whom I have referred are in the galleries today. I hope that every Member of this House in response to their appeal, in response to the appeal which I am so honored and happy to be able to make to you today, will come forward as soon as possible and sign this petition so that we may speedily consider and pass tihs worthy bill. In my opinion, the Congress cannot act too expeditiously to take favorable action on this most vital and most important matter. There is no valid reason for further delay. The bill has the greatest merit, its objective is humane and necessary to lighten the burdens and brighten the outlook of these fine boys. We must discharge our obligation at the earliest possible moment to those who have sacrificed so much for our country.

I urge and hope that every Member will sign the petition forthwith and thereby insure the early passage of this meritorious bill.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILBIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, I want to join my colleague from Massachusetts in this petition in reference to the legislation to which he referred and to say that it takes in not only the amputees but the paralytics as well.

Mr. PHILBIN. That is true. I thank the gentleman from his contribution.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the gentleman who has just spoken was speaking out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to offer an amendment because I do not like to take time on matters which are bound to fail anyway. But, to me, it is absolutely shocking and incomprehensible that Congressmen who read the newspapers will vote for a half billion dollars for UNRRA, which is run by Russia, England, and the various countries in Europe and when it is shown on the face of it that much of the aid goes either to Russia or to countries which are dominated by Russia to such an extent that they might as well be Russia.

Out in the cloakroom practically the only argument for the British loan is this hush, hush stuff that, "Now you can say you voted for something to stop Russia."

I certainly know, and when the time comes I will demonstrate it, that handing $5,000,000,000 to the British Empire is not going to save the United States from communism. The idea of Members of this Congress going to the country and asking for reelection, going to the people of the country with blood on their hands, and the campaign argument, "I handed a half billion dollars to Russia and at the same time I voted to hand $5,000,000,000 to England to stop Russia" is pure hypocrisy. I cannot understand why there are not any votes on this floor against UNRRA.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the subject matter that was opened by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] would it be out of order for one to address himself on that particular matter?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may ask unanimous consent to do so.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I scarcely regard the matter as either in or out of order in view of the fact that it relates to a very germane subject in this bill.

Let me refresh you on the subject of the so-called Taber amendment. As the bill came on this floor it carried language that had been prepared in the Budget Bureau. That language stated in effect that all of the consolidated funds in the $465,000,000 for UNRRA plus any unobligated and unexpended sums provided in prior appropriations might be pooled and could be expended without the limitations in the original law.

The limitations referred to are the fact that we decided that December 31, 1946, would be the deadline for UNRRA for all purposes except China. In the case of China the deadline was March 31, 1947. The letter from the Director of UNRRA, Mr. LaGuardia, would indicate that within the limitations of that time he says he cannot acquire and deliver the goods that are contemplated here and finish the job.

Let me tell you what is behind the Taber amendment and why the thing is so important. Let us go to lend-lease for just a moment and see what our experience has been. I got very curious about the number of contracts that Lend-Lease Administration is still processing. Mind you, the President of the United States proclaimed on VJ-day or the day thereafter, which was away back in August, that lend-lease had come to an end. So, when they came before the Deficiency Subcommittee recently I raised the question as to how many contracts under lend-lease were still being processed. You will find it on page 662 of the hearings, and I will give it to you. There are over 1,464 lend-lease contracts that have not yet been completed. But that is not the most impressive thing about it.

On the same page you will find the number of unscheduled contracts. Listen to this: Notwithstanding the fact that on the 15th of August lend-lease was brought to an end by Presidential proclamation there are over 414 lend-lease contracts on which they have not even started. They have not even started to produce the goods. When will the shipments be made? Why, possibly in 1947, but if it involves a lot of mechanical equipment that is precise in quality and requires fine machining, it is conceivable that we will be under commitments of sending lend-lease goods abroad perhaps 2 years from now, notwithstanding the fact that the American people generally have felt that it came to an end.

So now, let us come to UNRRA. We set December 31 for all countries except China. We set March 31, 1947, for China. If the Taber amendment is voted out it means that there is no limitation. It means that they can process the contracts and commitments from hereon out well into 1947 and, for all I know, to 1948. There is no limit.

How far do you want to go with this thing? I want to be just as gracious as I can to Mayor LaGuardia. I recognize that he has a difficult job, but, after all, are you going to delegate a very sovereign power involving hundreds of millions of dollars for an almost interminable period? That is the question that is involved here. It certainly richly deserves to be made clear. So out of the experience that we have had with lend-lease, when there are 414 contracts on which production has not even started, what will be the situation with UNRRA if they cannot get the goods, or if, for some reason, there is delay in production? How long will it run and how long will this entity continue to provide relief and rehabilitation when we made it so abundantly clear that there was a terminal date, namely, December 31, for all countries, except China, and March 31, 1947, for China? Let us have it fully understood what is involved here. That is the nub of the issue.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to take the full 5 minutes, but I still believe the matter is not clearly understood, and I am taking this time in the hope that I can make it perfectly simple and clear. I think all the arguments that have been made about processing and collateral matters are really not germane to the subject matter of the amendment.

In the first place, UNRRA's authorization dies on June 30, 1947, by law. There was a proviso in Public Law 259, and this proviso was waived by the bill which we presented. That waiver was stricken by the Taber amendment. That should be very clear. That proviso in the law was waived by the bill we brought in, and that waiver was stricken by the Taber amendment. Let me read you the original provision in the bill as it came to the House for action. It has to do with just one thing:

> That no relief or rehabilitation supplies procured out of funds heretofore or herein appropriated shall be shipped to any country except in the Far East after December 31, 1946, and in the case of any country in the Far East after March 31, 1947.

The only thing the Taber amendment did was take out of this bill the exception as to the time limit dealing with shipping alone. It merely meant that the bill which we brought out attempted to make it possible to ship after those dates, not to carry on the work. It simply provided that those things which we bought or had processed or manufactured for UNRRA, if they were in some warehouse in this country or on the docks, and had not been able to be delivered quite as promptly as we thought they would be, might still be shipped abroad for the purposes of UNRRA after the fixed date in Public Law 259. That is all that is involved, the shipping, not the manufacturing, nor the processing. It did seem very reasonable to me that if we had bought the goods and processed them, or whatever we had put into them, and because of shortages of labor or because of strikes we were not able to get them on board the ships to go abroad, we certainly should remove the restrictions which made it impossible to ship them after those dates. The question of the continuation of UNRRA and all the things brought up by the gentleman from Illinois seemed to me to be out of line, because all this amendment speaks of is shipping the goods after those dates.

I did not think a slight extension of time would be out of line. I offered an amendment which would have extended the time 90 days. But that amendment went out on a point or order. This whole tempest in a teapot is because the committee attempted to allow articles to be shipped after those dates. It seems to me that it did not warrant opposition from Congress. It is highly important to UNRRA, in order that the goods they bought and paid for with American dollars could be delivered to the unfortunate people of the world. There is nothing else involved.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I certainly did not so read that language. It seems to me that the minute a commitment was made, whether it was financial or not, and once we were obligated, irrespective of whether or not the goods were on the docks, we could go right ahead with the business just as we did before.

Mr. O'NEAL. No one in the House has any higher regard for the gentleman from Illinois than I, but if the gentleman will read this one paragraph in the law which I have just read he will find that it has to do only with shipping, and nothing else.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, we have here the unprecedented situation of the head of an international body lobbying Congress by means of a letter to a Member which is read from the Clerk's desk.

Last December when this termination date was put into the law it was not an original date determined upon by the action of this Congress, as Mayor La Guardia would have you believe; it was fixed pursuant to a resolution adopted by the UNRRA Council at their London meeting last summer, when the International Council of UNRRA, our own representative being their and voting, decided to wind up UNRRA on December 31, 1946. In our legislation we went the Council one better and, because of the lamentable and pitiable showing UNRRA had made in delivering any relief goods to the Far East, gave UNRRA 90 days more to deliver goods to the Far East.

I have been attempting to find out whether the UNRRA council has reversed its formal action of last summer. Unless there has been more recent UNRRA legislation which I have been unable to find, we have the spectacle of Mayor LaGuardia, the International Director General of UNRRA, making a proposal that his powers be extended beyond the date that has been formally fixed for the termination of the work of UNRRA by the international council of that very body.

Here is the practical point involved. Relief requires a degree of speed. You cannot delay 90 days or 6 months in feeding starving people or they will be dead when you get the food there. Relief delayed is relief denied. When we are talking about next year, 2 years after the war is over, we are not talking about postwar relief but are talking about something else. When we are furnishing industrial machinery to a country a couple of years after the war is over, it is not for the purpose of relief but it is merely giving the country free material for its reconstruction. In the original UNRRA resolutions adopted at Atlantic City and in our original legislation it was made clear that UNRRA was to be for relief and not for reconstruction. But Mayor LaGuardia and his predecessor, Governor Lehman, have twisted the purposes of UNRRA to make it a great free reconstruction agency. For instance, out of this $465,000,000 involved here, only $40,100,000 is going for food and $66,000,000 is going for industrial reconstruction. I am one of those who felt at the outset that money spent for seed, for farm machinery, and for repair of railways and bridges to get relief supplies into destitute areas of countries were proper relief items, but we have found in the past year that this matter of relief has been stretched into a vast reconstruction project. The element of time is important, because after a certain amount of time passes you cannot furnish relief because the people who needed it are dead. When you are furnishing supplies 2 years after a war, then it is for free reconstruction, or permanent support, but not for relief of suffering caused by the war.

This House should not reverse itself on winding up UNRRA.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, a question arose here yesterday and today as to what becomes of a great deal of the material which is sent abroad under UNRRA. I think I owe it to the House to refer to a statement given to me in my office about a month ago by a young man, a neighbor of mine who is a farmer. He was selected by his church—he is a member of the plain people—to take over a lot of livestock to Europe. He is now on the Atlantic or over in Poland with the third shipment. He told me they take about 800 bred heifers and about 1,000 horses in a load. He said the horses were purchased by UNRRA in St. Louis and were so poor and in such bad shape that 129 of them died in transit on the last trip. Now there is no sense in shipping half-starved horses to a country that has no feed. Then most of them were unbroken and half wild and no good when they get them there. It would be interesting to know what they cost landed in Poland. I said, "What evidence do you have that your brethren get these horses and these heifers when you get them there?" He said, "None whatever." I said, "Have you talked with people over there and have you any evidence?"

He said, "Yes. I have talked with members of our church over there as to what becomes of these bred heifers when they get them there." He said, "The Russians take them all." He says, "They have to surrender them to the Russians, and if they get any back they steal them. If they are caught stealing them they are shot on sight." I have every reason to believe what my neighbor told me. I grew up with him and I know him. He is a Christian man. When I get these reports I believe them.

In the light of that I think we ought to be a little more careful with the money we spend for these things if we are going to try to aid our people over there. If you cannot get food and supplies to the needy through the church circles to their brethren, then I am sure you cannot get it there through the Government. The governments over there have never had any compassion on their poor, or they would not have so many poor.

There has always been starvation in a lot of these countries because the governments pay no attention to the poor.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. It has been explained in the papers by Constantine Brown about Yugoslavia. The Government takes the material and sells it to some rich man and uses the money for war supplies, as in Yugoslavia, Poland, and no doubt in other Russian-controlled countries.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSS. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Did your friend say anything to you about what policy they have established for the distribution of the food that we are sending?

Mr. GROSS. No. We did not discuss that. He is not working in the transporting of food. He is working for his church in the delivery of livestock. These heifers are a contribution of the Plain People in several counties in southeastern Pennsylvania.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this subject, which is not in order, of course, but I think we have had enough of it—I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this particular subject close in 5 minutes

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION

Salaries and expenses: There is hereby appropriated from the special fund account in the Treasury as provided for in the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1946, not to exceed $435,000,000 for the fiscal year 1947 for all necessary expenses of the War Assets Administration established by Executive Order 9689; for allocation or reimbursement by the War Assets Administrator to Government agencies designated by the Administrator as disposal agencies by or pursuant to the Surplus Property Act of 1944; for payment to Government agencies designated by the Administrator for rendering special services in connection with the disposal of surplus property in such amounts as shall be approved by the Bureau of the Budget; and for allocation or reimbursement to owning agencies in such amounts and upon such basis as shall be approved by the Bureau of the Budget, for the care and handling (including pay and allowances and subsistence of military and naval personnel) of surplus property subsequent to the filing of a declaration of surplus covering such property with a disposal agency designated by the Administrator, or, if the Administrator prescribes procedures whereby declarations of surplus are made at approximately the time of disposal or removal, subsequent to notice by the owning agency to the disposal agency that property has been determined to be surplus and is subject to such procedures, such funds to be available for personal services in the District of Columbia; fees and mileage of witnesses at rates provided by law for witnesses attending in the United States courts (28 U. S. C. 600c); temporary (not in excess of 1 year) or intermittent services of experts or consultants or organizations thereof, including stenographic reporting services, by contract or otherwise, without regard to the civil-service and classification laws; lawbooks, books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals; acceptance and utilization of voluntary and uncompensated services; printing and binding; travel expenses, including reimbursement, at not to exceed 4 cents per mile, to employees for expenses incurred by them in performance of official travel in privately owned automobiles within the limits of their official stations; expenses of attendance at meetings of organizations concerned with the work of the Administration; procurement of supplies, equipment, reports, and services in connection with the care, handling, and disposition of surplus property without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5) upon determination by the Administrator or by any official designated by him for this purpose that such method of procurement is necessary; purchase and procurement of reports of experts or consultants or organizations thereof; advertising, including radio time; purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of passenger automobiles; maintenance, operation, and repair of aircraft in the Territories and possessions in connection with disposal activities and, in the continental limits of the United States in connection with the disposition of aircraft and airports; acquisition of buildings, lands, lease-holds, and other interests therein, and temporary use thereof for the care, handling, and disposition of surplus property; payments to States or political subdivisions thereof of sums in lieu of and equivalent to taxes accruing against real property declared surplus to the Administration by Government corporations; authority to advance money to Administration cashiers and collection officials upon furnishing bond, for the purpose of handling cash transactions and making change at surplus property sales: Provided, That the Administrator may delegate to any official in the War Assets Administration the authority to make appointments of personne and he may also delegate to any subordinate official the authority to make other determinations necessary for the conduct of the administrative management within said Administration: Provided further, That any employee of the War Assets Administration is authorized, when designated for the purpose by the Administrator, to administer to or take from any person an oath, affirmation, or affidavit, when such instrument is required in connection with the performance of the functions or activities of the War Assets Administration: Provided further, That the Administration may procure by contract or otherwise and furnish to governmental employees and employees of Government contractors at the reasonable value thereof food, meals, subsistence, and medical supplies, emergency medical services, quarters, heat, light, household equipment, laundry service, and sanitation facilities; and erect temporary structures and make alterations in existing structures necessary for these purposes, when such employees are engaged in the disposal of surplus property, or in the preparation for such disposal, at locations where such supplies, services, equipment, or facilities are otherwise unavailable, the proceeds derived therefrom to be credited to this appropriation: Provided further, That the provisions of subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1) of section 14 (a) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (Public Law 390) shall not apply with respect to officers and employees of the War Assets Administration.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WIGGLESWORTH: On page 11, line 14, after the word "exceed", strike out "$435,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$335,000,000."

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to save $100,000,000.

As pointed out yesterday under general debate, the War Assets Administration requested for administrative expenditure the enormous sum of $545,100,000.

In the bill now before us the committee has included the figure $435,000,000, but in its report has indicated that the balance of $110,000,000 is in effect to be held in abeyance. In other words, the agency is to go ahead and dispose of property and come back later to be reimbursed on the basis of actual expenditure.

So, Mr. Chairman, there is no real cut made by your committee in this request for over half a billion dollars.

What is $545,000,000 in terms of $2,900,000,000 which with good luck the War Assets Administration hopes to realize in the course of the fiscal year 1947?

It is about 20 percent of the figure $2,900,000,000; it is about 25 percent of the figure $2,100,000,000 which appears elsewhere in the justifications as the net proceeds hoped to be realized. In other words, the agency plans to spend from 20 to 25 cents in administrative expenditure for every dollar which it recovers.

That to my mind, Mr. Chairman, is out of all reason. I have talked with businessmen of experience and competency, who state that in their judgment, 10 percent should be adequate; that 12½ percent should cover all contingencies.

If we allow 10 percent, on $2,900,000,000, which WAA hopes to recover on property costing $15,400,000,000, that amounts to $290,000,000. If we allow 15 percent on the same figure that amounts to $435,000,000.

I propose to allow 15 percent and to allow $435,000,000, but to allow it as a maximum, and not as a minimum. I propose to carry in this bill the sum of $335,000,000, holding in abeyance the balance of $100,000,000 just as the committee proposes to do on the larger basis.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that no one can read this testimony in this connection without feeling that WAA's estimate is in large measure guess work. One thing is clear, and that is that the agency does not need this great sum of money at the present time. It seems to me far better to go slow and let the agency come back, if necessary. It must come back anyway, even under the committee proposal, in respect to the $110,000,000 that is held in abeyance.

My amendment cuts less than 20 percent from the enormous request made by this agency. It provides 15 cents in administrative expenditure for every dollar which it is hoped to collect. It allows $435,000,000 for the fiscal year 1947 as compared with $199,000,000 provided for the present fiscal year—more than twice the amount allowed for the current year. It saves $100,000,000 for the taxpayers.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the committee will see fit to adopt this amendment and save $100,000,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 15 minutes, the last 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. DOUGLAS].

Mrs. DOUGLAS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, after all this Roman holiday in denouncing UNRRA, may I say a word as one who has watched the activities of UNRRA on the spot in certain countries. In the first place, it should be pointed out that UNRRA was given a dual name. It is United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation. Very often relief alone would be an endless drain without rehabilitation. UNRRA was created to help nations to help themselves.

It might be interesting to state that in many of the countries the heads of the missions are Americans. In the two Russian republics it is worth mentioning that they are prominent Americans who head these two missions. They are New York lawyers, Marshall McDuffy, for the Ukraine, and Richard Scandrett, for the Byelo mission. Mr. Sandrett is a nephew of Dwight Morrow and a prominent Republican, some of you may be relieved to recall. He has served on the National Republican Committee, has been treasurer of the New York County Republican Committee, and was a candidate for Congressman-at-Large in 1938.

In Greece, Buel Maben, also an American, heads the mission. There we find a country in which a thousand towns have been destroyed, 25 percent of the homes burned down, about 50 percent of the livestock either killed or taken away, practically all farm machinery stolen or ruined, factories destroyed, every bridge in the country blown up, and transportation disrupted.

The thin and mountainous soil of that country has been tilled for thousands of years and desperately needs fertilizers. But in Europe, outside of Germany, there has been no commercial fertilizer available since the war.

We in America may gripe about our hardships, but in fact we are the only major land not bombed, invaded, nor starved. We can begrudge those other lands the help which they so greatly need, for unless you have seen a bombed-out region you cannot imagine the utter blight that has come to those countries in the war.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. DOUGLAS of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The gentlewoman has seen firsthand the great need for relief Would not the gentlewoman agree that this is a case where relief delayed is relief denied, and it is our interest and should be to the interest of UNRRA to speed relief supplies there before the need for relief is over because the people are all dead?

Mrs. DOUGLAS of Illinois. Definitely On the other hand, it is a dual program, relief and rehabilitation in these countries. I for one would not presume to shackle Mr. LaGuardia by a program which he says he cannot and will not try to administer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the expenditures on account of surplus property agencies so far this year have been $87,461,000. Those have largely come in the last 2 months. I am reading this from the Treasury statement, so I assume it is right. The expenditures in the month of June have stepped up to $34,000,000. The receipts for the month of June, so far, are $9,622,000. The receipts have gone up $5,000,000 since yesterday. I do not know whether that is because some of us criticized the way that they were doing business, or not. I hope that what we have said has produced some results.

The total receipts in the Treasury so far are $345,000,000 for this fiscal year, and the expenditures are at the rate of 25 percent of the receipts.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Is that broken down to show foreign countries?

Mr. TABER. No.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. As to foreign countries, some of those purchases are made with American money through American loans from the Export-Import Bank, and history shows that loans made to foreign governments are not paid back. So it is really American money that is being paid out.

Mr. TABER. I want to read a little bit about the way they do business. In their official publication of the War Assets Administration for February, accumulated sales totaled $862,843,000. That is through February 28.

Now, listen to this: In the March issue there were reported cash receipts of $583,000,000 and accounts receivable of $89,000,000, totaling $672,000,000. That leaves more than $190,000,000 unaccounted for. That is the way they are doing business. They have 28,000 employees. The figure that they were ask-for would give them 14,000 more. It seems to me perfectly ridiculous when a veteran asks a priority for something that he is entitled to that they should not give it to him instead of holding out and holding back and turning it over to some speculator, like Gimbel Bros. in New York, or some of these other outfits around the country. If they did, they would get along a lot better and a lot cheaper. They could do this job on the basis of 10 percent of the amount they receive if they would only go at it in a businesslike way. The trouble is that they do not. If they would run it in a businesslike way and keep up to date on their collections and get the money in before the account gets cold, they could cut down on this appropriation very readily to what the gentleman from Massachusetts has suggested. That is, we could save $100,000,000 and they could do a better job, and the whole thing would be cleaned up. I have no desire to prevent them from having the money they need to operate, but I want to see them operate efficiently and honestly and have their books in shape so they will jibe. I do not like to have to call attention to this sort of thing in governmental operation—I am disturbed by it—but I think the only salvation is to go along through with what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] has proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL].

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, this is a very difficult subject to do justice to in a matter of 5 minutes. In passing, I would like to comment on the figures given by the distinguished minority member on the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York. The gentleman is talking about cash receipts when he speaks of what appears on the Treasury statement. It takes some time to record sales as cash receipts.

There never was such a merchandising job in the history of the world, I presume, as that which the War Assets Administration has to perform now. Not only is the amount tremendous beyond the contemplation of man but the distribution is from one end of the earth to the other, from the smallest isles in the Pacific to New York City, all over the world. The war assets are spread everywhere and the total volume runs into so many billions that I do not believe we can contemplate it. I understand that there are reasons to criticize, because in a job of that sort there is not such ability in the mind of any one man to do a perfect job on such a proposition. But we do have honest, honorable, capable men working to handle this proposition, even though mistakes are made.

I think if you will look at the cut proposed in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts you will see that it is taking a tremendous chance as to the sale of this vast hoard of material. The gentleman's amendment, if it is considered carefully, shows that it would provide for the War Assets Administration a net total of about $230,000,000 for 1947. I will say frankly that neither he nor anyone else in the United States can know the amount required with any real accuracy. His amendment proposes approximately $230 000,000 for the operation of the War Assets Administration for the next year.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. My proposal is $335,000,000 for the War Assets Administration plus the $100,000,000 that would be held in abeyance.

Mr. O'NEAL. The net figure, with what has been taken off of the $435,000,000, would be $387,000,000, less what the gentleman has, and another figure of $48,000,000, which would be approximately $230,000,000, as well as I can figure.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky if it is not true that when we gave the veterans first preference we added to the responsibility of the War Assets Corporation in making disposal of this property, because we forced individual sales rather than bulk sales?

Mr. O'NEAL. There is no question about that.

They used $227,000,000 to handle $9,000,000,000 worth of material up to February, and the disposals there amounted to $1,900,000,000. Yet by this amendment it would give them only $230,000,000 in 1947 to handle $25,000,000,000 worth of property, of which War Assets hopes to dispose of $15,400,000,000 worth. In other words, if this amendment is adopted the War Assets Administration will have appropriated the same amount of money to handle $25,000,000,000 of paper as against $9,000,000,000 handled to February of this year, and to dispose of eight times the amount they hope to dispose of as compared with last year. It is an impossible task to do this job satisfactorily with that cut in the bill, in my opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON of Missouri) there were—ayes 80, noes 59.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. O'NEAL and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported there were—ayes 91, noes 77.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Salaries and expenses: For all necessary expenses of the Office of Price Administration in carrying out the provisions of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended by the act of October 2, 1942 (50 U. S. C. App. 901), and the provisions of the act of May 31, 1941 (55 Stat. 236), as amended by the Second War Powers Act, 1942 (50 U. S. C. App. 622), and acts amending or supplementing such acts, and all other powers, duties, and functions which may be lawfully delegated to the Office of Price Administration, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; lawbooks, books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals; expenses of in-service training of employees, including salaries and traveling expenses of instructors; not to exceed $55,000 for the employment of aliens; not to exceed $30,000 for the temporary employment of persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, without regard to section 3709, Revised Statutes, or the civil-service and classification laws; contract stenographic reporting services without regard to said section 3709; witness fees; printing and binding (not to exceed $790,290, which limitation shall not apply to the printing of forms prescribed for use of trade or public; instructions, regulations, coupon books, price lists, and printing required for the conduct of litigation); not to exceed $300,000 for test purchases of commodities, services, or ration currency for enforcement purposes, authorization in each case to have approval prior to purchase of the Administrator, regional administrator, or the district director in the region or district in which the purchase is contemplated; traveling expenses (not to exceed $7,674,330), including reimbursement, at not to exceed 4 cents per mile, of employees for expenses incurred by them on official travel in privately owned automobiles within the limits of their official stations, expenses of appointees from point of induction in continental United States to their first post of duty in the Territories and return and expenses of attendance at meetings of organizations concerned with the work of the Office of Price Administration; hire, maintenance, operation, and repair of passenger automobiles; not to exceed $2,509,000 for deposit in the general fund of the Treasury for cost of penalty mail as required by section 2 of the act of June 28, 1944 (Public Law 364); fiscal year 1947, $106,650,000: Provided, That the aggregate of expenditures of any kind directly incident to informational functions shall not exceed for the period of the fiscal year $1,750,000: Provided further, That within 30 days after the enactment of legislation extending the termination date of the Office of Price Administration beyond June 30, 1946, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget shall reconsider the estimate of appropriation contained in House Document No. 653, Seventy-ninth Congress, and within such period of 30 days make such revision (in no case upward) of the component parts and within the total amount thereof as would, in his judgment, enable compliance with the provisions of such legislation, and such revision shall be published promptly in the Federal Register and shall be binding upon the Office of Price Administration: Provided further, That obligations in pursuance of such revision, if justified thereby, may be incurred at quarterly rates not exceeding (except for liquidation expenses and the added cost of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946) those that would have been permissible under an appropriation made in accordance with the estimate of appropriation contained in the afore-mentioned House Document No. 653: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the compensation of any officer, agent, clerk, or other employee of the United States who shall divulge or make known in any manner whatever to any person the operations, style of work, or apparatus of any manufacturer or producer visited by him in the discharge of his official duties, or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particular thereof, set forth or disclosed in any questionnaire, report, return, or document, required or requested to be filed by order or regulation of the Administrator or to permit any questionnaire, report, return, or document or copy thereof or any book containing any abstract or particulars thereof to be seen or examined by any person except as provided by law; nor for any person who shall print or publish in any manner whatever, except as hereinafter provided, any questionnaire, report, return, or document or any part thereof or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or methods of doing business, appearing in any questionnaire, report, return, or document: Provided further, That the foregoing provisions shall not be construed to prevent or prohibit the publication or disclosure of studies, graphs, charts, or other documents of like general character wherein individual statistics or the source thereof is not disclosd or identified directly or indirectly nor to prevent the furnishing in confidence to the War Department, the Navy Department, or the United States Maritime Commission, such data and information as may be requested by them for use in the performance of their official duties: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for making any subsidy payments: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to enforce any maximum price or prices on any agricultural commodity or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity, including milk and its products and livestock, unless and until (1) the Secretary of Agriculture has determined and published for such agricultural commodity the prices specified in section 3 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended by Public Law 729, approved October 2, 1942, as amended; (2) in case of a comparable price for such agricultural commodity, the Secretary of Agriculture has held public hearings and determined and published such comparable price in the manner prescribed by section 3 (b) of said act as amended; and (3) the Secretary of Agriculture has determined after investigation and proclaimed that the maximum price or prices so established on any such agricultural commodity, including milk and its product and livestock, will reflect to the producer of such agricultural commodity a price in conformity with section 3 (c) of said act as amended: Provided further, That such maximum price or prices shall conform in all respects to the provisions of section 3 of Public Law 729, approved October 2, 1942, as amended: Provided further, That any employee of the Office of Price Administration is authorized and empowered, when designated for the purpose by the head of the agency, to administer to or take from any person an oath, affirmation, or affidavit when such instrument is required in connection with the performance of the functions or activities of said Office: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be directly or indirectly used for the payment of the salary or expenses of any person who directs the formulation of any price policy, maximum price, or price ceiling with respect to any article or commodity unless, in the judgment of the Administrator, such person shall be qualified by experience in business, industry, or commerce; but this limitation shall not apply to the Administrator or Acting Administrator as the case may be, in considering, adopting, signing, and promulgating price policies, maximum prices, or price ceilings formulated and prepared in compliance herewith: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used to pay the salary or expenses of any person fixing maximum prices for different kinds, classes, or types of processed fruits and vegetables which are described in terms of specifications or standards, unless such specifications or standards were, prior to such order, in general use.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 17, lines 20 and 21, after "1947" strike out "$106,650,000" and insert "$80,000,000."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to save $25,000,000. Some people may want to know why I offer that amendment. I offer it because I believe it will improve the administration of the Office of Price Administration.

Now, how have they operated, and why do they need to have their appropriation curtailed? Instead of having a few people involved who are competent in connection with any operation with reference to pricing or regulation, they have had an enormous number. If you had occasion to go over there with reference to the pricing of any commodity, you would be ushered into a room, as I have been on many occasions. Sometimes there might be a dozen, sometimes there might be 30 people involved in an operation where there should never be over 2 or 3. The thing has had to go through innumerable agencies in the OPA, to such an extent that they have delayed their procedure so long that it has been impossible to get anything through. The result of that has been a curtailment of production and the promotion of inflation and higher prices and black markets. That is one of the principal reasons why they have made a failure of their job. If you make them cut down on that operation and get down to earth and be honest with the people of the United States, instead of having such a cumbersome operation that it will be impossible to function you will be improving the efficiency of the Price Administration set-up.

On top of that, including printing and binding, they are spending approximately $2,500,000 on publicity and propaganda, a very large percentage of which is in violation of the law and is designed deliberately to misrepresent the picture in that Office.

I hope this amendment will be adopted, and that we will be able not only to save to the Treasury a very large volume of money but that also we will be able to promote efficiency in the Office of Price Administration by making them simplify their procedure, that we will put it on a businesslike basis instead of having it so involved and cumbersome and going through so many hands that there is no efficiency about it whatever. It takes so long that production is thwarted and the OPA is deliberately promoting inflation and higher prices.

I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, of all the blows that have been leveled at our inflation control program, this attack on the appropriations for OPA seems to me to be the strangest and the worst.

By congressional mandate, after both Houses of the Congress have long and carefully considered the OPA bill, the Congress has approved the act extending OPA for 12 months.

Mr. Chairman, by a vote of the Congress we passed a bill that told OPA that they must administer the bill within the dozens of new price-raising changes that Congress laid down. I do not need to remind the Members that I did not support any of those changes. But the gentlemen on the Republican side of the aisle from which this amendment comes, sponsored and approved practically every single one of those changes. The adjustments of prices to those legislative changes are not automatic.

We do not believe in self-pricing. The new bill does not provide for self-pricing. It provides for careful administration and adjustment upward, according to congressional formulas, a big percentage of the 8,000,000 prices in the OPA maximum-price books.

Yet the gentleman from New York comes before the Congress at this late date and seeks to reduce this appropriation by about twenty-five million to $80,000,000 for the coming year. He does this in spite of the most terrific and stupendous workload of price adjustments upward that has been dumped on the Office of Price Administration.

The Members on the other side of the aisle legislated that these modifications in prices be made according to their formulas, and in many instances these price increases by legislative mandate must be made within 30 days after the passage of the act.

Now you cripple the organization by reducing their funds to $80,000,000, cutting the Budget estimate from one hundred and forty-two million even before the changes in the price bill were carried out by the OPA and prices adjusted on millions of items as required by the new law.

Scarcely a day has passed but Members of the Republican side of the aisle have risen and condemned the black markets that are going on in this country. Yet such shortsighted economy as we see here in crippling enforcement funds is largely responsible for the growing condition of black markets throughout this country.

You cannot stop a black market without enforcement agencies. The honest, legitimate dealer who is on one side of the street competing with a black marketer, or a man who is evading price ceilings on the other side is powerless when you take away the OPA enforcement agency. When you do that you are driving a knife into the heart of the honest, decent merchant who is trying to live within the rules of the game.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I voted against the OPA originally and I have taken the floor day after day against the OPA. In my opinion, it is nothing but a cancer on the body politic of this country and we will have black markets, we will have a shortage of everything, as long as this crew of 60,000 snoopers are on the Federal pay roll.

Mr. MONRONEY. That is the gentleman's opinion and, may I say, he has taken a consistent position in that respect. But I believe the House by a large majority has stated that we want to continue inflation-control, even if in greatly weakened form.

If you believe in continuing it, then give that agency enough money to carry on the job that they have to do, and particularly to carry out the amendments that you put in the bill that forced these price adjustments. You are not going to get good administration or enforcement by denying them the money to do this work.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. All I want to say is "Amen" to what the gentleman has stated. It seems to me that in all probability the new Price Control Act is going to be a much more difficult instrument to enforce than the old one, therefore it is more incumbent on the Congress to provide sufficient funds for the staff now than it was before.

Mr. MONRONEY. The gentleman is correct. I have heard it informally estimated that the changes the Congress has written into the act will require 9,000,000 man-hours to make the price adjustments. Now, here comes an amendment from the Republican side seeking to cut the Budget estimate of $142,000,000 down to $80,000,000, almost one-half of the amount required to do this job.

I can't understand the illogical line of reasoning of the gentleman from New York or the members of his party. I ask that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, Mr. TABER.

The question was taken and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 51, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Ohio: On page 21, after line 18, insert the following: "Provided, That none of the funds herein appropriated shall be spent for publicity or propaganda."

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not need much explanation. You understand it. It simply prohibits the OPA from using any of the funds herein appropriated for publicity or propaganda purposes. If there is one thing needed more than any other it is to stop the bureaucrats from using the funds that are appropriated to them to propagandize the country to keep themselves in power.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. O'NEAL. Would the gentleman define exactly what he means by publicity and propaganda? Of course, the OPA has a function to inform the people about the work of OPA, which is absolutely essential to do the work. I know the gentleman does not have that in mind. It seems to me that the words "publicity" and "propaganda" should be better defined in order to determine what the gentleman is trying to arrive at.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. When Chester Bowles said the country was going to be wrecked if OPA were discontinued, that is plain propaganda. I think everybody understands the meaning of the term "propaganda."

I hope the amendment is adopted.

Mr. THOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOM. Would the gentleman eliminate the practice of OPA in issuing public statements on price changes and price regulations by his amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. No; I would not eliminate that practice; I would eliminate the OPA.

Mr. THOM. But that is part of publicity.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment, but I do believe that it directs attention to the full question of publicity, information, and propaganda. Obviously, there is something that the Congress is going to have to do about it. It occurs to me that somewhere along the line we are going to have to set up a certain pattern, a certain guide line that shall not be exceeded by administrators with respect to what they call publicity and information. I frankly confess that I do not know exactly what the dividing line is. I tried, in fact, to prepare some amendment to develop mandatory language within the limitations, but in an appropriation bill it is simply too difficult. However, I think everybody who has had any experience with this matter of publicity and information and propaganda recognizes the fact that there ought to be a limitation. I recognize also that in an agency of this kind, and for that matter most every Federal agency, obviously it has to tell its story, but it seems to me that the story ought to be confined, with certain limitations, to facts rather than propaganda, and rather than naked opinion, which is certainly not informational.

Here is one of the radio speeches that Mr. Bowles made, and I will quote you a line:

The forces of organized greed must seem to you oblivious to the public interest, determined to get theirs while the getting is good, and that is not a pleasant picture for you to look upon.

By what virtue does he assail men of integrity who are engaged in business and who generate a little profit to pay taxes for the purpose of defraying the expenses of government? There is a wholesale indictment by a Federal administrator, and I submit to you that notwithstanding what the private citizen may say, that is not within the province or within the functions of an administrator of government. His business is not to render an unsupported opinion and indict people within this country but rather to stay within the limit of facts.

He says another thing in that speech. These are from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, because the speech was inserted over on the Senate side by Senator HICKENLOOPER. I quote further:

So as might be expected the greatest organized lobbying program in the history of our country was launched.

Is that a fair thing for a Federal administrator to say? It is our business to make the law, it is our business to determine the policy, not Mr. Bowles'. It is his business to administer, and to remain scrupulously within the limitations of fact. So it occurs to me that sooner or later Congress is going to have to deal with this matter and delimit or demark the place beyond which the Administrator cannot go.

Here is something that was inserted in the RECORD by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] on the twenty-eighth of March. This is where they made a determined effort to get out these questionnaires to school children. This is addressed from the Office of Price Administration in northern California to high school principals and teachers. It says,

In an attempt to determine the average student's knowledge of price control and its effect, we are asking the cooperation of the principals and teachers in making a survey.

There is a list of six questions. First it says "Students interviewed" and then "Name of school" and then follows question No. 1:

Was there price control after World War I?

The high school student would be about 16 or 17 years old. World War I concluded about 28 years ago, and this precious youngster was not yet on God's footstool, so they are asking his opinion about World War I, whether there was price control.

Then they say:

Did you know that there were more than 100,000 stores (wholesale and retail) forced out of business by the depression that followed World War I?

But Mr. Bowles did not draw the distinction between those that retired from business and those that went into bankruptcy, and that is an altogether different matter. If they are going to get out this kind of material, they ought to stay by the facts, but who can defend that sort of thing on the ground that that is informational, to quiz the high school youngsters of the country as to whether there was price control after World War I, and all that sort of thing. It directs attention to the fact that sooner or later there must be some legislation of some kind that will deal with this whole matter of information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to use the remainder of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is very kind of the gentleman.

I have submitted to the House before, the informational cost for the fiscal year 1946 as estimated by the Budget Bureau, and if you are interested I suggest that you call up the Senate Committee on Appropriations and ask them to send you a copy of the hearings on the Second Urgent Deficiency Appropriation bill. In that hearing, as requested by Senator FERGUSON and also Senator MCKELLAR, is a complete list of all the agencies of Government and the estimate of informational cost as determined by the Bureau of the Budget, which is in the executive branch of the Government. And how much is it? It is nearly $75,000,000, of which about $2,500,000 was estimated for OPA; $2,500,000 for one agency is a lot of money with which to tell the story. I am quite in sympathy with the fact that they are entitled to keep informed those people who have an interest in the rules and regulations, the ukases, decrees, and directives, and all those things that emanate in a continuous flow from Washington, but I do say it is not in good taste, it is not proper, and it is not within the proper domain of an administrator of the Government to rush to the radio like Paul Revere of old and to attack lobbies and organized greed, when that is merely naked opinion as distinguished from fact. So I submit to you that this is worthy of your best attention, in the hope that perhaps we can contrive a bill to meet this question of information, publicity, and propaganda.

If you want the rest of the details about the millions of things that have been issued by OPA, I think you will find them on page 801 of the hearings. At the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], all the statistical information was set out, and it does make pretty interesting reading.

As for the pending amendment, I am opposed to it, and I hope it will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, my purpose in rising is to convey to the Members of the House the problem that confronts us today and tomorrow, and to take the Members into my confidence, as I always like to do when I have information to give to the House. We are now on page 21 of this bill and I note there are 67 pages. We must complete this bill in the House today. Conference reports on the following bills are due for consideration before tomorrow night by the House:

Treasury appropriations; State, Justice and Commerce appropriations; Coast Guard appropriation; Navy appropriations; Labor Department appropriations; Government Corporations appropriations; War Department appropriations; District of Columbia appropriations. Then there is the conference report on the Second War Powers Act.

All of these must be disposed of by tomorrow night. In addition, of course, there is the pending bill which could go over until later, but if it can be disposed of I know it would be advisable to do so. There are two other conference reports available for consideration which, of course, are not urgent as far as the June 30 deadline is concerned, and those are the conference reports on the Public Health Service Act, the bill relating to the Public Health Service, and the naval assistance to China.

I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How many of these conference reports are going to be ready tomorrow? I understand some of these conferences have not been held yet.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is true. But I am just presenting to the House the problem that confronts us. If they are ready, of course, we naturally want to act on them if it is possible. Even though they are not all taken up, which they should be, there is quite a program for tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would think the problem is in getting the conferees to work. As I understand, only one conference report is ready for action on the part of the House, and that is the conference report on the naval appropriations bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The conference report on the State, Justice, and Commerce appropriations bill will be ready for tomorrow, and we hope to get the District of Columbia appropriation bill conference out of the way tomorrow, and perhaps one other report. It just depends on the cooperation we get from the other body. We are ready to confer at any time, and we hope that we will be able to get most of them out of the way by the end of the week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What I am trying to bring out is that the House is not to blame if they are not ready to confer with us. We are ready to act.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman is correct. The House is well along with its program. The conference report on the naval appropriations bill was filed last night, and we could have taken it up any time today. The conference report on the State, Justice, and Commerce appropriation bill can be taken up any time tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. They can be taken up at any time?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes; at any time. There are no major controversies involved, and I do not think they will take more than a few minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would like to observe that my remarks were not at all along the line of placing any blame on the House, because the House has been very cooperative. I just wanted to give the House the information as to the problem which confronts us, knowing that the House and the leadership on the other side always cooperate. I wanted to present to the Members of the House the problem that confronts us as to the work we have to do between now and tomorrow night.

I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. The Government corporations appropriation bill has not even been considered in the Senate up to this time.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is true.

Mr. JENSEN. The conferees have not met, so, of course, the conference report could not be ready.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As I understand it, we have already passed a continuing resolution, so if these conference reports are not ready by the deadline tomorrow no harm will be done.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, if we can get them through, it will be much better.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In view of what the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says about getting through with this bill, is it intended when we go into the House to have a roll-call vote on the Dirksen or Taber amendment?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. There may be one or two roll calls when we go into the House. I might say also there is every indication that the War Department appropriation bill, Government corporations bill, and the Coast Guard bill will be passed by the Senate today. In that event, we can go to conference on all of them tomorrow.

The Clerk read as follows:

Printing and binding: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1947, for "Printing and binding," $5,000.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, of course all of us are interested in seeing that our contribution to the great relief and rehabilitation program is spent properly. None of us wants to see any part of our contribution used for political purposes.

In taking final action on the amendment that was adopted yesterday, I think it is important for us to consider a statement made by Mr. Marshall MacDuffie, New York attorney, who was associated with one of the leading law firms in New York City, Sullivan & Cromwell. He made a statement yesterday contradicting the basic contention of the Congressman advocating curtailment of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration's allocations to Russia on the ground that press restrictions made it impossible to check on the disposition and utilization of these funds.

Mr. MacDuffie said he had as full an opportunity as it was possible to have to inspect every section of Russia. He, together with nine other men working as a team, moved from Kiev to eight or nine different provinces and cities ranging in population from 100 to 800,000 people; that he visited all of the rural areas in those republics; that they were in nowise molested, and they were given full and complete information by Russians from cabinet rank to the humblest ration store manager; that no attempt was made to keep from this team any of the information they sought.

To quote Mr. MacDuffie, he states:

There is nothing that we have not been able to see and no place that we have not been able to visit. In fact, it should be mentioned that some of this territory was opened in May to a party of foreign correspondents, including Drew Middleton, and aside from the escorting officers, which were necessary on account of the shattered transportation and road systems, they experienced no handicaps that I could discover in gathering whatever material they desired. I myself accompanied them to one free market and talked with many natives exclusive of official supervision, through my own interpreter. Therefore I feel that real injustice will be done if these crucially needed funds are withheld on this basis.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe every member of the committee had an opportunity on yesterday to examine a very interesting statement that appeared in the Washington News. It was prepared by Parker La Moore, who is one of the Scripps-Howard staff. He comments upon the dismissal of the information officer at Belgrade in Yugoslavia, who was attached to the UNRRA Commission. I shall insert all of the article in connection with my remarks, but I think there are a few items that ought to be mentioned as a comment upon the observations just made by my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

In this statement of yesterday is this language, which refers to Mr. Hochstetter, the UNRRA information officer:

Mr. Hochstetter charged in a statement at Belgrade that the Yugoslav public was not being fully informed as to the nature of UNRRA aid.

Subsequently the author remarks as follows:

Hochstetter charges than even news releases prepared by UNRRA headquarters in Washington are censored before they are given to the Yugoslav press.

Freedom is after all an indispensable fabric and you take it or leave it as a whole; you cannot impair it and say there is any principle of freedom in the world. So I think it is time there was a reannouncement and reassertion of free press everywhere.

And in that connection you remember the treatment that was experienced by Reuben H. Markham, for 20 years Balkan correspondent for the Christian Science Monitor, in Rumania. I am not insensible of the fact that Rumania is not an UNRRA country, but Rumania is dominated by Soviet representatives and the thing that happened to Markham could happen elsewhere. Mr. Markham is no novice in the newspaper field. He has been in the Balkans for the Monitor for 20 years. Anybody who reads the Monitor knows that it is a paper of the highest character that seeks to render a careful public service.

In that connection Mr. Markham is quoted in an Associated Press dispatch from Athens as saying:

The worst that any tyrant ever did in the way of violence, personal humiliation, the breaking up of meetings, censoring the press, and preventing the expression of public opinion is now being matched by the Communist-dominated governments in Bulgaria and Rumania as I personally saw it.

That is his language. Then finally in the last part of this rather long dispatch, and I shall also include it in my remarks, Mr. Markham said:

In the latter part of March a particularly vicious attack was made on him by a Communist paper "speaking in the name of the Red Army and only with the approval of Moscow," and he subsequently was called to appear before Russian General Vinogradov, the second most important official in Rumania.

Finally, he was forbidden to file any dispatches out of that country. You talk about freedom of the press. Well, there you have it.

I recall, Mr. Chairman, that when the book of William Allen White's son, young Bill White, hit the press and was condensed in the Reader's Digest, a story came out of Moscow that condemned that book and everything that was connected with it. I encountered a correspondent, and a very good one, in Cairo who when he was asked to sign a condemnatory article and would not do it was told to get out. There was a case of pressure on a member of the press to betray his own convictions or forfeit his press card and when a press card is your meal ticket if you have been in that game for most of a lifetime it is very serious. We must have honest reporting.

Make no mistake about it, the best thing this Congress can do is by a ringing vote to reassert the freedom of the press. Join in upholding this amendment. Otherwise we are simply following the course of appeasement.

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MATHEWS. If the things said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania are true and there is no censorship how can it be said that the amendment offered by the gentleman yesterday would keep food from these people?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Precisely so, and no one can take offense who studies the purport of the amendment.

I am including the two articles referred to in their entirety.

[From Washington Daily News of June 27, 1946]

UNITED STATES UNRRA AIDE OUSTED BY RUSSIAN, COULD LIFT CURTAIN

(By Parker La Moore)

Colonel Sergeichik, Russian Army officer who heads the UNRRA mission in Yugoslavia, has ousted his American director of public information in a disagreement over censorship of news relating to UNRRA activities.

The American, Leo Hochstetter, has been ordered to return to Washington. On his arrival here he may be able to lift the curtain from one of the blacked-out areas of the UNRRA question.

Yugoslavia was second on the list of UNRRA beneficiaries last year, having received, as of December 31, 976,000 long tons of supplies of various kinds. But even though the country has been up near the front on the breadline, Yugoslavia has been able to finance the most ambitious military program in central Europe.

LINKED TO TRIESTE

It has been charged that Marshal Tito has used part of the proceeds from the sale of UNRRA goods to build the big army currently threatening Italy in the Trieste controversy. UNRRA officials here deny this, insisting that proceeds from the sale of UNRRA goods must be used to finance further relief and rehabilitation activities.

This denial, however, must be taken with salt. The facts are that the goods are sold and that the money passes into the hands of the local governments. It is charged, and generally believed in central Europe, that most of it is used to finance the local governments. And there is reason to believe that in Yugoslavia it is used to finance military activities.

If this is not true, a documented report showing just how the money has been spent would clarify the situation.

BUYING ILL WILL

Mr. Hochstetter charged in a statement in Belgrade that the Yugoslav public was not being fully informed as to the nature of UNRRA aid. A similar report concerning the distribution in Czechoslovakia was heard some time ago.

It is to the interest of the United States that the full facts concerning the UNRRA operation be made known to the receiving countries, because we are buying ill will due to the prevailing misunderstanding. Consumers are paying what they regard as excessive prices for food and clothing we are giving to their governments, and the people think we are profiting by their misfortune, when the facts are we aren't even getting our initial donation back.

Mr. Hochstetter charges that even news releases prepared by the UNRRA headquarters in Washington are censored before being given to the Yugoslav press. If this is true, it is easy to understand why so much misunderstanding exists with respect to the world relief program.

RED BALKAN REPRESSIONS WORST IN HISTORY, OUSTED WRITER SAYS—COMMUNIST-DOMINATED BULGARIA AND RUMANIA MATCH GREATEST TYRANTS, MARKHAM CHARGES

ATHENS, June 27.—Reuben H. Markham, for 20 years Balkan correspondent for the Christian Science Monitor, today said history's worst repressions of freedom were "being matched by the Communist-dominated governments in Bulgaria and Rumania."

Mr. Markham arrived in Athens Monday from Bucharest after his expulsion from Rumania despite vigorous protests by the United States Government. Acting Secretary of State Dean Acheson announced the expulsion and failure of the Government's efforts on Mr. Markham's behalf Tuesday.

Mr. Markham said in an interview today that "the worst that any tyrant ever did in the way of violence, personal humiliation, the breaking up of meetings, censoring the press, and preventing the expression of public opinion is now being matched by the Communist-dominated governments in Bulgaria and Rumania as I personally saw it."

The correspondent, whose most recent Balkan assignment started last August, said he had been under constant attack by the Communist-controlled press because of his dispatches.

(The newspaper Graiul Nou, organ of the Soviet Red Army, published in Rumanian in Bucharest, said yesterday that Mr. Markham had been expelled for "repeated violations of the usages of foreign correspondents, such as misrepresenting the situation in Rumania and spreading provocative rumors prejudicial to the cause of unity among the great powers." During the last 3 months Graiul Nou has published a series of attacks accusing the United States of expansionist and reactionary tendencies.)

Mr. Markham said his dispatches reported Russian-imposed dictatorial methods of Communist-dominated governments, including concentration camps and executions in the form of legal massacres, the victims of which are placed in unmarked graves in Bulgaria. Bulgarian courts, he said, are "a travesty of justice and people are killed by the thousands."

Mr. Markham said he talked to hundreds of peasants and delegations in both countries and witnessed a number of terroristic acts.

Around the end of March, Mr. Markham said he was covering a series of opposition party meetings when he was invited to spend the night with the local leader of the Peasant Party in Bucovina, Rumania, after the meeting had been broken up by a band of ruffians.

Later the band of ruffians wearing masks came into the house at midnight and killed the political leader with bursts of machine-gun fire, Mr. Markham said.

On another occasion he was having dinner in Bacau, Rumania, and Ion Mihalache, vice president of the Peasant Party and one of the three strongest opposition leaders in Rumania, when Mihalache was attacked by a band of armed Communists. He and the Rumanian fled across the roof tops, where they were besieged, but finally managed to slip through the cordon during the early morning.

Mr. Markham said a car bearing the number of the Prime Minister's office, carrying a group of Rumanians, kidnaped a young Rumanian working for American military authorities; he had not been released yet.

One meeting Mr. Markham said was actually broken up by Red Army soldiers.

In the latter part of March, Mr. Markham said, a particularly vicious attack was made on him by the Communist paper speaking in the name of the Red Army and only with the approval of Moscow, and he subsequently was called to appear before Russian General Vinogradov, the second most important official in Rumania.

Mr. Markham said General Vinogradov gave him 5 days in which to leave the country without consulting Brig. Gen. Courtland Schuyler, American member of the Allied Control Commission. General Schuyler and Burton Berry, chief of the American political mission, filed protests and the State Department followed with a vigorous note to Moscow and Bucharest.

The Russian General Susaikov, who Mr. Markham said "runs Rumania," advised the American officials only a few hours before Mr. Markham was ready to board a vessel at Constanta for Istanbul that suspension had been temporarily lifted until it was considered on a higher level.

For 3 weeks Mr. Markham was forbidden to file any dispatches. At 7 p. m., June 22, he was advised by General Susaikov that he must leave Bucharest by June 25.

He departed the following morning in the American military attaché's plane for Athens.

Mr. Markham said "in view of the coming election in Rumania, the Communist-dominated government is determined to eliminate or restrict to the narrowest possible limits the work of American reporters and as a part of that action expelled me."

Mr. Markham said that only one American correspondent was now left in Bucharest, Frank O'Brien of the Associated Press.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC WORKS

No appropriation in this or any other act shall be used for the operation of a testing laboratory of the Highway Department for making tests of materials in connection with any activity of the District government, and the equipment of the existing laboratory, not adaptable to other uses, shall be declared surplus to the War Assets Administration, and such Administration shall undertake the disposal thereof in accordance with surplus property disposal procedures established by or in pursuance of law, the net proceeds of sale to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the general fund of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. HORAN: On page 31, line 11, strike out lines 11 to 22, inclusive.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment on behalf of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN]. At the time that we held full hearings on the District appropriation bill at that time this language was in the committee print. We went into this testing laboratory matter and eliminated this language from the bill. This, then, went to the full committee where the language was restored. The bill was brought to the floor of the House and on April 5 we eliminated this language by a majority vote.

The bill then went to the Senate where the language was left out, and we assumed that the matter was finished.

I merely call your attention at this time to what has happened. This was the action of a committee of this House, the Subcommittee on District Appropriations. We were somewhat surprised to see this language that had been eliminated by action of the House reappear in the present deficiency bill.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. As a member of the subcommittee, may I make the observation that the gentleman speaks the exact truth. I am inclined to think that this has been put in the bill through error.

Mr. HORAN. I hope so.

Mr. CANFIELD. The amendment offered by the gentleman should prevail.

Mr. HORAN. I am inclined to believe it is an error and I hope the Committee will sustain the action of your subcommittee of some 6 weeks ago.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this provision is a simple effort to reduce the vast number of people who, somehow or other, get on public pay rolls and, once there, it is very difficult to remove them.

This testing laboratory has not been operated by the District of Columbia, according to my information, since 1933. This provision in the bill sought to be stricken by the amendment as I understand it has been in the bill since 1933.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HORAN. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that the hearings disclose that if this testing laboratory had been in operation in the dozen years since it was built and has stood idle that the District through the years would have saved over $100,000? That should be mentioned at this time because yesterday we delved quite deeply into the operations of the District of Columbia. I want the people of the District and Members of this House to realize that the action of the subcommittee was in the direction of saving fiscal dollars and not adding to the public pay roll either because the work is being carried on by the Bureau of Standards. There might be a saving of personnel, but not a great deal.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, it was thought fit in 1933 to drop this. I do not know all the figures, but I do know that no city in the United States is so fortunate as Washington in having such an organization as the Bureau of Standards to examine all its material, such as cement, which goes into road and other construction. No other city could get such expert advice so easily, and it seems to the committee, and apparently seemed to every committee since 1933, that it would be very well since the Bureau of Standards has all those facilities, not to start the operation of a building for testing purposes. Washington now has these facilities and can get the job done without putting people on the pay roll, by paying the price to the Bureau of Standards for doing the very work which they seek to do with a permanent force.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. Not having had the evidence with reference to this particular subject matter, I, as I think many other Members of the House, would be inclined to rely upon the judgment of the gentleman from Kentucky. But I want to ask him whether or not in his considered opinion the elimination of this language would result in a saving to the District of Columbia or an additional expense?

Mr. O'NEAL. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN] has stated that their studies indicated that. I hardly believe that putting people on the permanent pay roll and opening a building and operating it through 12 months of the year would be a less expensive way of having their raw materials examined than by having it done by the Bureau of Standards here in Washington where the material is to be used.

Mr. TARVER. Then the gentleman is of the opinion that it would be to the interest of the District of Columbia not to eliminate the provision?

Mr. O'NEAL. It is in the interest of the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, in my opinion, from the information I now have, to let the provision stay in the bill and to defeat the amendment.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. Is it not true that since this provision was stricken out by the House on April 5th last, no further hearings have been held on the subject by the Subcommittee on Appropriations?

Mr. O'NEAL. There were hearings held, if I recall, this spring, by the Deficiency Subcommittee, or within the last few months. I know that I have attended hearings when the matter has been discussed and possibly testimony taken on it. I do not recall exactly when it was, but there has been testimony long before this committee went into the matter, for 10 years or more. This is an old, old subject that has been discussed many times by the Committee on Appropriations and not approved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Is it the gentleman's understanding that if the Bureau of Standards does the testing for the District of Columbia that they will have available to them a very much larger range of scientists and people of that sort to look after these things than if they operated a set-up of their own?

Mr. O'NEAL. The finest testing laboratory in America, I think it is generally conceded, is the Bureau of Standards here in Washington.

Mr. TABER. Would that not give them more opportunity to protect themselves in connection with their contract if they had the Bureau of Standards do the work than if they had such a separate set-up?

Mr. O'NEAL. I would think if the Bureau of Standards, an independent agency, not a part of the District of Columbia, stated that the material was faulty, and they had to go to court about it, that the testimony of the Bureau of Standards would be worth more as impartial testimony than that of the District of Columbia employees?

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HORAN. That is the important part of this whole thing. The Bureau of Standards exists for the purpose of checking testing laboratories and not to operate them. The idea of this costing the taxpayers of the District of Columbia money, when the record shows that they would have saved over $100,000 during the years, just does not hold water. This is the routine testing of materials. If you want research, go to the Bureau of Standards, but if you want routine work carried on chiefly, it means that you have to set up a testing laboratory.

Mr. O'NEAL. Has the District of Columbia ever offered to reduce their appropriation by $100,000 because of the saving made?

Mr. HORAN. This would do it automatically.

Mr. O'NEAL. They have never offered to do that.

Mr. HORAN. This would do it in a saving to the taxpayers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the question of the maintenance of the testing laboratory in the District of Columbia has been a highly controversial subject ever since I can remember, both in the Committee on Appropriations and in the legislative committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HORAN. Has the testing laboratory ever been operated?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I cannot remember just when it operated.

Mr. HORAN. I cannot see how you can pass judgment on an institution that has never been operated.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me get to that point. The last real exploration of this matter was made in June 1941. That is exactly 5 years ago this month. That is when the Director and a great many of the staff of the Bureau of Standards appeared before the Appropriations Committee on the Commerce bill, which contains estimates for the Bureau of Standards. Here is the substance of the testimony. It is probably the most extended testimony that we had on the subject.

They said first of all they had the authority to test for the District of Columbia. Secondly, they said they could test without charge, but where the work was monumental in proportions, they felt in the very nature of things they had to be reimbursed for the testing that was done. They go way beyond research, and it became a testing laboratory for the District of Columbia. They did work for the District for a period of about 7 years. At that time the averages ran from $14,500 to $27,000 a year. Two-thirds of the inspection fees are for cement.

The Bureau of Standards has traveling inspectors. They go to the cement areas like those in Pennsylvania and elsewhere and test right at the mill. The minute the cement goes into a bin it is sealed whether it is for Government account or for the account of the District of Columbia. That is a service you cannot match with equal adequacy and efficiency for less money than what the Bureau of Standards has been doing it for, notwithstanding the fact that there seems to be an apparent saving if the District operates its own laboratory. The reason the saving would be apparent rather than real is that you would get so much less real inspection if they had to do it for themselves, and you would have two different overheads, one for the District laboratory and one for the Bureau of Standards.

I say they have inspectors going about, and two-thirds of all this inspection relates to cement. They do inspection work today for the Navy Department. The Bureau of Standards has its roving inspectors who inspect for the War Department. They inspect the cement that is bought by the Bureau of Reclamation. They make inspections of all kinds, including inspections for the various States, either with or without charge.

If the fees are too high, then the answer is that some effort ought to be made between the District of Columbia and the Bureau of Standards to iron the thing out and determine a pattern of fees that is fair, but they will get infinitely more for their money through the Bureau of Standards by virtue of the staff and the expertness and the efficiency of the staff that they now have on hand. That is the reason I think this thing ought to be stricken, and particularly so since the Bureau of Standards is right here in the District of Columbia and the testing laboratory is also here. If they were several hundred miles apart and you had additional travel and difficulty of communication, it might be quite a different thing, but I am of the opinion, since they inspect for so many other agencies of the Government and for the States, that it is the part of wisdom to resist the amendment and let the action taken by the Deficiency Subcommittee stand.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. The gentleman will be good enough to agree that this rider is a contradiction of the prior action taken by the House on April 5?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is quite true. The only explanation for it is that with so many things going through and with so many supply bills, my good friend, being a member of the Appropriations Committee, knows the endless and monumental amount of detail with which we have to contend. Probably that is the reason we did not deal with it at the time.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HORAN. Did it get into this deficiency bill by mistake?

Mr. DIRKSEN. As the gentleman knows, the language was sent up here by the Budget Bureau. Usually they draw the language that obtained the year before. But I should want to recheck that observation of mine to be sure.

Mr. HORAN. It was sent up by the Budget?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; it was in the language in which it arrived. That is my impression.

The minute we encountered it, I think every member of the Deficiency Committee got in on the discussion, and we were unanimous that it ought to be taken care of by this rider.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HORAN) there were—ayes 14, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6885) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, to provide appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the Taber amendment limiting the time for UNRRA administration, and on the Wigglesworth amendment with reference to the War Assets Corporation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Dirksen amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 4, line 14, after the colon, strike all of the balance of the line and all of lines 15 to 18.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, on a division there were—ayes, 65, noes 84.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 4, at the end of line 18, add the following proviso:

"Provided, That none of the funds herein appropriated shall be used for the acquisition, transportation, delivery, or distribution of any supplies, commodities, or equipment to or for any recipient country which fails or refuses to permit the properly accredited representatives of the American press to enter, observe, and report without censorship on the distribution and utilization of relief and rehabilitation supplies and services furnished to such countries."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 228, nays 85, not voting, 119, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct typographical errors and section numbers in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORTS ON GENERAL APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on tomorrow to consider various reports on general appropriations bills, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2, rule XXVIII.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all who have spoken on the bill be permitted to extend their remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Gathing, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5716) entitled "An act to amend the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6042) entitled "An act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes."

STATE, COMMERCE, AND JUSTICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight in which to file a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 6056) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Commerce, Justice, and the Judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday next week may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object, I simply take this opportunity to state why I am not going to object. I am not going to object, so as to give an opportunity for the consideration of the Crosser bill on Wednesday and also because it is agreed that the contempt proceedings from the Wood committee will not be called up on Wednesday or next week.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I do not quite understand what the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] means by giving up Calendar Wednesday. Is the gentleman yielding in his effort and the effort of some of the rest of us?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Now, since the gentleman has taken that position——

Mr. BENDER. I am not taking any position. I am simply asking a question.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I can understand what is behind the gentleman's question and I want to answer it. I yield no effort nor any advantage. We want this railroad retirement bill considered. Calendar Wednesday is not being given up except for just one Wednesday, and that is done solely for the purpose of granting the railroad workers a chance to have their pension bill passed.

Mr. BENDER. Of course we do.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. It has been held up. I am not going to permit that bill to be held up any further.

Mr. BENDER. Who has been holding it up?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Just a minute. I am not going to have it held up by insisting on Calendar Wednesday and thus block completion of that bill.

Mr. BENDER. By what process of thinking or by what right does the gentleman assume to make such a statement? Has the gentleman any right to speak for the leadership?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am speaking for myself and for nobody else. I feel it is my responsibility as an individual Member of this House to do nothing that would obstruct further consideration of the Crosser bill. I intend no criticism of the majority leader. He has given full cooperation to bring about passage of the railroad pension bill.

Mr. BENDER. I would like the gentleman to inform me as to what has been done to obstruct consideration of that bill. I am not aware of any obstruction. We have been waiting for that bill just as anxiously as the gentleman has, but other business has come up here. Incidentally, those three resolutions in connection with the reorganization of the Government have been waiting. Those things come in order. I believe the leadership of the House is sincere, is genuine in trying to do this job in a regular and honorable way. I disagree with the gentleman from New York. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] is doing the best job he can in order to expedite matters and bring things up here in order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL MENTAL HEALTH ACT

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R.

4512) to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4512) to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 4, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", but only to the extent necessary for the purposes of such training and instruction"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4512) to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: In the provisions of the bill relating to the National Advisory Mental Health Council it is provided that six appointed members shall be selected from leading medical or scientific authorities who are outstanding in the study, diagnosis, or treatment of psychiatric disorders. The bill as it passed the House contained a sentence providing that three of the appointed members shall be selected from a panel of six such authorities to be submitted to the Surgeon General by the deans of the approved medical colleges and schools in the United States. This amendment of the Senate struck out this sentence. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 2: The bill in the proposed new section 303 of the Public Health Service Act authorizes the Surgeon General, in carrying out the purposes of section 301 with respect to mental health, to admit and treat, at the National Institute of Mental Health, patients of St. Elizabeths Hospital transferred from the hospital pursuant to the arrangements made by the Surgeon General and the Superintendent of the hospital with the approval of the Federal Security Administrator. In the bill as it passed the House this provision contained a proviso that the consent of a legal guardian shall be obtained before the transfer of any patient from St. Elizabeths Hospital for such treatment. This Senate amendment struck out the proviso contained in the bill as it passed the House. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 3: In the new section 303 of the Public Health Service Act, in the bill as it passed the House, the Surgeon General is authorized by clause (1) of subsection (b) to provide training and instruction, in matters relating to psychiatric disorders, to persons found by him to have proper qualifications, and, by clause (2), to provide such training and instruction, and demonstrations, through grants, upon recommendation of the National Advisory Mental Health Council, to public and other nonprofit institutions. By this amendment the Senate added a provision to clause (2) providing that such grants could include grants to such institutions "for the construction, acquisition, and leasing of hospital, clinic, laboratory, and related facilities, but only to the extent necessary for the purposes of such training and instruction." The House recedes with an amendment which eliminates that part of the Senate language which would authorize grants to such institutions for the construction, acquisition, and leasing of hospital, clinic, laboratory, and related facilities, but retains the other language of the Senate amendment so that clause (2) will read as follows: "(2) to provide such training and instruction, and demonstrations, through grants, upon recommendation of the National Advisory Mental Health Council, to public and other nonprofit institutions, but only to the extent necessary for the purposes of such training and instruction."

Amendment No. 4: Section 11 of the bill as it passed the House authorized the appropriation of not to exceed $4,500,000 for the erection and equipment, for the use of the Public Health Service in the carrying out of the provisions of this legislation, of suitable and adequate hospital buildings and facilities, including necessary living quarters for personnel, and of suitable and adequate laboratory buildings and facilities, such buildings and facilities to be known as the National Institute of Mental Health. This Senate amendment struck out "$4,500,000" and inserted "$7,500,000." The House recedes.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the committee on conference.

There were four amendments to the bill as it passed the House. The Senate receded on two, the House receded on one, and an agreement with an amendment was worked out on the other. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Tennessee has said, this is a unanimous report of the conference committee. The House yielded, in fact, on only one amendment, and that was a slight increase in the amount set up in the bill for the construction of the research center at Bethesda and was necessary because of the fact that the original estimated cost had been made in 1939 or early 1940 before the present increase in construction costs had come about. The increase allowed is simply enough to cover the increased costs of construction.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I should like to know what the gentleman considers a slight increase these days.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. This increase happens to be from $4,500,000 to $7,500,000—a $3,000,000 increase. It does not accurately reflect the cost which has come about under the hold-the-line order of the administration of the gentleman from Tennessee, but we held it down to as close a percentage as we could. If we had provided for the actual increase, we should probably have had to double the amount. In fact, they figure that the total increase would bring the cost to something like $11,500,000, but the House committee as usual stood for economy and was able to hold it to $7,500,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECOND WAR POWERS ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5716) to amend the Second War Powers Act of 1942 as amended and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5716) to amend the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Title XV of such Act, as amended, is amended by inserting at the end thereof a new section as follows:

"'SEC. 1503. Nothing contained in this Act or any other Federal Act (except the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, or the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, approved December 2, 1941, as amended), shall be construed to authorize the establishment by any officer or agency of the Government of maximum prices for any commodity or maximum rents for any housing accommodations.'"

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5716) to amend the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The Senate passed the bill after amending it to provide that nothing contained therein or any other act (except the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended), shall be construed to authorize the establishment by any officer or agency of the Government of maximum prices for any commodity or maximum rents for any housing accommodations. The House disagreed to the Senate amendment and requested the conference, to which the Senate agreed.

The House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate after it was modified to make clear the reference was to any Federal act, and to exempt also the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, approved December 2, 1941, as amended.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
SAM HOBBS,
C. E. HANCOCK,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO].

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may include at this point in the RECORD correspondence from the War Assets Administration in reply to a protest of mine of the action of the Civilian Production Administration in violating the veterans' preference law for surplus property which became law on May 3 of this year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., June 25, 1946.

Hon. CARTER MANASCO,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MANASCO: In accordance with your request to Mr. Robert J. Hayes, we enclose a copy of a teletype dated June 13, 1946, sent to all regional offices giving the substance of a directive issued by Civilian Production Administration with regard to the sale of rails to Treasury Procurement Division, acting as agent for UNRRA.

Also enclosed is a copy of War Assets Administration Daily Bulletin No. 12, which incorporates the teletype to the regions.

There is further enclosed a copy of the directive from Civilian Production Administration dated June 5, 1946.

As you have been advised, the Civilian Production Administration has issued Priorities Regulation No. 13, which is applicable to the disposal of surplus property, and the CPA from time to time issues specific directions under this regulation. We understand that CPA derives its authority to issue these directions from section 301 of the Second War Powers Act. Section 34 (b) of the Surplus Property Act states that "nothing in this act shall impair or affect the provisions of * * * section 301 of the Second War Powers Act, 1942."

Sincerely yours,

E. A. STANSFIELD,
Acting General Counsel.

JUNE 13, 1946.

To All Regional Offices:

Under date of June 5 the Civilian Production Administration filed with this office a directive pursuant to Priorities Regulation 13 covering 75- and 90-pound rails and accessories. In accordance with this directive, you are to freeze all 75- and 90-pound rails and accessories in your present inventory and all of these items which may be declared surplus to your office in the future. This directive covers the disposal up to 50,000 tons of the items as stated to the Treasury Procurement Division, acting as agent for UNRRA, subject to satisfactory financial arrangements. In accordance with this directive, you are to enter into sales negotiations with UNRRA, notifying this office when sales are consummated so that tonnage sold can be charged against 50,000 tons covered by directive. Acknowledgment this wire requested.

H. W. CORNELL,
For FRANK R. CREEDON,
Deputy Administrator for General Disposal.

JUNE 5, 1946.

WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C.

(Attention: Mr. R. A. Stephens, Steel Division.)

GENTLEMEN: The fulfillment of requirements for the defense of the United States has created a shortage in the supply of rails and accessories for defense, for private account and for export.

In view of the urgent need of 75- and 90-pound rails and accessories for the rehabilitation of transportation facilities in China, the following action is taken:

Pursuant to priorities regulation No. 13 you are hereby directed to dispose up to 50,000 tons of 75- and 90-pound rails and accessories to the Treasury Procurement Division, acting as agents for UNRRA, subject to financial arrangements satisfactory to you.

This directive will expire September 30 or as soon as War Assets Administration has made available to the Treasury Procurement Division the 50,000 tons disclosed in this directive if that occurs before September 30, 1946.

Very truly yours,

J. JOSEPH WHELAN,
Recording Secretary.

SECTION V. PRIORITIES REGULATIONS COVERING 75- AND 90-POUND RAILS AND ACCESSORIES

1. Under date of June 5, the Civilian Production Administration filed with this office a directive pursuant to priorities regulation No. 13 covering 75- and 90-pound rails and accessories. In accordance with this directive you are to freeze all 75- and 90-pound rails and accessories in your present inventory and all of these items which may be declared surplus to your office in the future. This directive covers the disposal up to 50,000 tons of the items as stated, to the Treasury Procurement Division acting as agent for UNRRA, subject to satisfactory financial arrangements. In accordance with this directive you are to enter into sales negotiations with UNRRA notifying this office when sales are consummated so that tonnage sold can be charged against 50,000 tons covered by directive. Acknowledgment this wire requested.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL FOREIGN-SERVICE OFFICERS IN THE CLASSIFIED GRADES

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 5244) to authorize the appointment of additional foreign-service officers in the classified grades, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5244) to authorize the appointment of additional foreign-service officers in the classified grades, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 to 20, inclusive, and 22, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21 and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

On page 3 of the House bill strike out lines 16 and 17 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 6. The second paragraph of section 32 of the Act entitled 'An Act for the reorganization and improvement of the Foreign Service of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved May 24, 1924 (46 Stat. 1214), as amended, is amended to read as follows: ; and in lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following: or representatives duly authorized by such committees,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5244) to authorize the appointment of additional foreign-service officers in the classified grades, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendments Nos. 1 to 10, inclusive: These amendments are clarifying and clerical changes, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 11: This amendment permits personnel of the United States merchant marine to take the examinations for appointment as a Foreign Service officer under the terms of the bill, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 12: This amendment insures that Government employees, including legislative employees, will be eligible for appointment as Foreign Service officers under the provisions of the bill, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 13 to 18, inclusive: These amendments are clarifying and clerical changes, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 19: This amendment eliminated for appointment as Foreign Service officers vice consuls, not of career. The State Department informed the committee that these officials would be considered in subsequent proposed legislation which is now in process of formulation in the State Department. The House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 20 and 22: These amendments are clarifying and clerical changes, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 21: The amendment to the act for the reorganization and improvement of the Foreign Service of the United States permits the Legislative and Appropriations Committees of the Congress charged with legislating for and appropriating for the Department of State to have access to the correspondence and records of the Division of Foreign Service Personnel. As the bill passed the House, duly authorized representatives of such committees were also authorized to have access to such correspondence and records. The Senate amendment eliminated representatives of committees. The Department of State advised the conferees that they would have no objection to representatives of such committees having access to such correspondence and records if such representatives were so authorized by a majority of each such committee. The House recedes with an amendment permitting such representatives to have such access if authorized by a majority of their committee. The House amendment also contains a technical amendment amending the proper paragraph and section in the Statutes at Large rather than the United States Code which is only prima facie evidence of the law and was inserted in the House bill by an oversight. The House recedes.

The Senate amended the title to capitalize the words "Foreign Service" and the House recedes.

SOL BLOOM,
LUTHER A. JOHNSON,
CHARLES A. EATON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the conference report?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, the conferees agreed to the Senate amendments which are merely perfecting amendments. The only difference was that we agreed to all of theirs and they agreed to only one of ours. They receded and concurred with reference to the investigations involved in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] to the bill that was presented on the floor.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the amendment?

Mr. BLOOM. The amendment as it passed the House was that the Appropriations Committee, the Foreign Affairs Committee, and like committees of the Senate would have the right to investigate and look into all secret papers. The way the Senate had it it looked as if all employees, as well as Members and the committee could do this; so it was amended by the conferees so that any employee who was recommended by a majority of either of the committees of the House or Senate could investigate all of these secret papers. That is all there is to it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The bill went through the House rather quickly before the gentleman had a chance to discuss it thoroughly, including the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. That was discussed fully in conference?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes. That has all been agreed to by the conferees.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is satisfactory to everybody?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is a unanimous agreement?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

House Resolution 675 was laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEBTOR RAILROAD CORPORATIONS

Mr. SMITH of Virginia, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 687, Rept. No. 2405), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5924) to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose porperties during a period of 7 years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structure without further proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final pasasge without intervening motion except one motion to recommit. After the passage of the bill H. R. 5924, it shall be in order in the House to take from the Speaker's Table the bill S. 1253 and to move to strike out all after the enacting clause of said Senate bill and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions contained in H. R. 5924.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order granted the gentleman from California [Mr. OUTLAND] for today be vacated and that he be given a special order to address the House on Tuesday next for the same length of time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

WAR PARENTS ORGANIZATION

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of those Members of the House who are members of the Congressional War Parents Organization, that on Wednesday last, June 26, there was placed in the Senate proceedings of the RECORD by Senator BRIDGES a list of parents and service-connected children with the request that any omissions or correction of the list be sent either to me or to him so that the final report on this may be accurate. We are desirous also of having the names and records of all Members who were in the service themselves.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RABAUT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the introduction by Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the FBI, of his Eminence, Francis Cardinal Spellman, at the occasion of the graduation exercises of the FBI National Academy in the Interdepartmental Auditorium in Washington, this morning.

Mr. WHITE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a communication.

Mr. FLOOD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois (at the request of Mr. FLOOD) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a poem by James Patrick McGovern.

Mr. THOM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the Christian Science Monitor on Farm Production.

Mr. JOHNSON of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances; to include in one a speech by Mr. Raymond W. Miller, and in the other, two letters written by him to the State Department.

Mr. WEICHEL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include newspaper items.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST CORLISS G. LAMONT

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that pursuant to House Resolution 678, Seventy-ninth Congress, he did, today, June 28, 1946, certify to the United States attorney, District of Columbia, the willful and deliberate refusal of Corliss G. Lamont to produce before the Committee on Un-American Activities for its inspection certain books, papers, and records which had been duly subpenaed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 6042. An act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2341. An act to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2543. An act to require weekly newspapers enjoying mailing privileges to make sworn statements with respect to their circulation.

H. R. 6064. An act to extend the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6084. An act to amend the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, so as to provide an increase in pay for personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until tomorrow, Saturday, June 29, 1946, at 10 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

1429. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to section 16 of the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands of the United States, approved June 22, 1936, one copy each of various legislation passed by the Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John and the Legislative Assembly of the Virgin Islands, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

SENATE

SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1946

(Legislative day of Tuesday, March 5, 1946)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Father of mankind, to whom all souls are dear and whose tender mercies are over all Thy works, as we come our grateful hearts are singing, "This is the day the Lord has made; therefore we will rejoice and be glad in it." Turning to this morning garden of silence from a world so full of tumult and passion, setting our faces toward waiting tasks, we pray for guidance and for strength. Save us, we beseech Thee, from all error, pride, and prejudice. Grant us that candor which is the high courage of the soul. Help us to find in each problem and perplexity but the prelude to those larger understandings which in a desert of denials and betrayals of truth and freedom shall be as trees planted for the healing of the nations. In the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. HILL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, June 28, 1946, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

FULL AND COMPLETE CITIZENSHIP FOR THE AMERICAN INDIAN

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference and to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the American Legion, Department of South Dakota, in convention assembled on June 18, 1946, favoring full and complete citizenship for the American Indian.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

From the time of the discovery of this country the American Indian has been subject to abuse and unjust discrimination, the nature of which is common knowledge to all.

Whereas by his courage and loyalty to his country, the American Indian has demonstrated in both World Wars by actual combat that he is deserving of the admiration of his fellow countrymen; and

Whereas according to official records, more Indians volunteered their services in their country's behalf on a proportionate basis, population considered, than any other group of our citizens; and

Whereas there remains in evidence in this State as well as in other States, unjust discrimination tending to bar returning veterans of the last war from attending social functions and similar privileges accorded their white comrades with whom they served in the fox holes and beachheads of Europe and in the southwest Pacific; to rectify this gross injustice: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the Department of South Dakota, the American Legion, in convention assembled on this 18th day of June A. D. 1946, do petition our Government to grant the American Indian full and complete citizenship, including the right of voting, conducting his personal affairs in a manner now exercised by persons of other races; be it further

Resolved, That a copy thereof be sent to each of the four Members of the South Dakota delegation in Congress, and that the national committeeman of the South Dakota Department of the American Legion be instructed to contact the National committeemen of the American Legion representing States having considerable Indian population to the end that proper and suitable legislation be enacted by Congress which will provide the rights and privileges sought herein.

INDIAN RIGHTS

Recommend that funds and loans ordinarily made available to veterans under the GI bill be made more surely available to Indian veterans through the Indian administration or any other governmental agency existing or created for that purpose. This followed discussion revealing that GI loans to Indians on reservations are tossed back and forth between loaning agencies and the Indian Office with neither willing to push them through.

Further recommend that Indian veterans be accorded full rights of citizenship and the social privileges accorded other veterans.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McCARRAN (for himself and Mr. MURDOCK):

S. 2394. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases," approved June 25, 1910, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

ACQUISITION OF NON-FEDERAL PROPERTY WITHIN GLACIER NATIONAL PARK—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 230)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Chief Clerk, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith without my approval the bill (S. 1273) to provide for the acquisition by exchange of non-Federal property within the Glacier National Park.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to accept title to any non-Federal property within the boundaries of the Glacier National Park when the acquisition by exchange of such property would in his judgment be in the best interest of the United States. In exchange for the non-Federal property so to be acquired the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to convey to the grantors of such property, or to their nominees, any federally owned property within the Glacier National Park which is of approximate equal value to the property being acquired.

I am in accord with the general purposes and objectives of the measure. Section 2 of the bill, however, provides that title to all lands, interests in lands, buildings or other property acquired pursuant to the act shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior. This provision is highly objectionable and represents a material change in existing law involving an unwarranted deviation from the long-established and manifestly sound practice under which the Attorney General is charged with the duty of examining the validity of titles to lands acquired by the Government. This duty has for more than a century been vested in the Attorney General with respect to the vast majority of acquisitions and I perceive no reason to change this general practice which has proven so satisfactory through the years.

An advantage of this long-standing policy has been that the agency of the Government acquiring the land has the independent checking of the title by a disinterested agency. Moreover, there can be no question that the maintenance in the different departments of the Government of large staffs of attorneys for the purpose of examining title to land will result in duplication, additional expense, as well as less efficient administration. It is to avoid duplication of this character that the Congress passed and I approved the Reorganization Act of 1945.

For these reasons, I am constrained to withhold my approval from the bill.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 28, 1946.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS AND INDEPENDENT AGENCIES, 1947

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 6777) making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, yesterday, at the direction of the committee, I offered an amendment, which is section 306, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] felt that the amendment should be amended. If they have reached an agreement in that respect I wish they would suggest it.

Mr. TAFT. I had said I felt compelled to make a point of order against the amendment, and insisted upon the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order has been sustained.

Mr. TAFT. In lieu of the committee amendment, I therefore offer two amendments dealing with the whole subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 20, line 16, after the colon, it is proposed to insert:

The types of programs set forth in the 1947 budget of the Commodity Credit Corporation, within the funds available to it are approved but the subsidy program shall be subject to the provisions of H. R. 6042.

On page 8, line 14, at the end of the paragraph, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the subsidy program shall be subject to the provisions of H. R. 6042.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I shall explain the first amendment. The amendment is on page 20, after the colon in line 16, to insert:

The types of programs set forth in the 1947 budget of the Commodity Credit Corporation, within the funds available to it are approved but the subsidy program shall be subject to the provisions of H. R. 6042.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. House bill 6042 has become a law, has it not?

Mr. TAFT. House bill 6042 has just been vetoed by the President. However, I know of no way to frame the amendment except to refer to House bill 6042 as such for the present. Whether it will become law or not I do not know. If it does not become law, it will be necessary, I think, to pass some other general subsidy legislation. So that for the present I think all we can do is to refer to that bill. It is still in a state of suspended animation.

Mr. FERGUSON. The RECORD will at least show what we are talking about.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will not do any harm to make reference to the bill.

Mr. TAFT. I may explain, Mr. President, that the Byrd-Butler law provides that every corporation must submit a budget, but "the budget program shall be a business-type budget, or plan of operations, with due allowance given to the need for flexibility, including provision for emergencies and contingencies, in order that the corporation may properly carry out its activities as authorized by law. The budget program shall contain estimates of the financial condition and operations of the corporation for the current and ensuing fiscal years and the actual condition and results of operation for the last completed fiscal year."

The budget program shall then be submitted by the President to Congress, and it is provided that "the budget programs transmitted by the President to the Congress shall be considered, and if necessary, legislation shall be enacted making available such funds or other financial resources as the Congress may determine."

The idea was that the Government corporations should set out the general scope of their activities, realizing that we could not hold them down, that we did not know exactly how they may operate.

The Commodity Credit Corporation, in the Budget for the year 1947, has submitted a budget which provides for its major activities, including the supply program, the foreign purchase program, the price support program, the commodity export program, and the subsidy program.

Those items are set out in fairly general terms, and the language which we here propose to adopt provides the general program which they have set forth. That was the only purpose of the Byrd-Butler Act. It was that they could not suddenly develop a brand new program with funds which conceivably might be authorized by some law, or that some law might be stretched to authorize, without having given any notice to Congress. So what we do in this amendment is simply to use the language suggested by the Commodity Credit Corporation itself in the Budget message, that the types of program set forth in the 1947 budget of the Commodity Credit Corporation, within the funds available to it, are approved.

I think that carries out the purpose of the act and gives leeway for every activity of the Commodity Credit Corporation, except something brand new that no one ever heard of. Such an activity could not be engaged in without the approval of Congress.

The last proviso, that the subsidy program shall be subject to the provisions of House bill 6402, I think is necessary, because that bill contains rather specific figures on subsidies. Those figures and the RFC figures total about $2,000,000,000. We have just passed a bill which limits subsidies to $1,000,000,000. I presume that the amount will be still lower than that if the bill does not become a law. I think we should make it clear, in order to resolve the conflict, that this program should be subject to the provisions of the subsidy program which was worked out so carefully. So, Mr. President, I offer the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I offer the second amendment, which deals with the RFC, on page 8, line 14, adding at the end of the paragraph the words: "Provided further, That the subsidy program shall be subject to the provisions of H. R. 6402."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the second amendment is agreed to.

The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I was not present when this bill was taken up. There is an item in the bill of $3,000,000 to build a fertilizer factory. With as many defunct fertilizer factories as there are in the United States, as poor an industry as it is from the standpoint of earning capacity, I wish to place in the RECORD, at least for conference purposes, a brief statement. It had been my purpose to move to reconsider this amendment. I read the following telegram:

> Reported Senate Appropriations Committee has inserted in the corporations appropriations bill an item of $3,000,000 for TVA to build fertilizer plant at Mobile. This item has been rejected several times by the House and is reportedly not approved by the Budget. Mobile geographically not in TVA territory. Even if it were it would be outrageous for the Government to go into direct competition with fertilizer industry who are doing business and paying all forms of taxes both to the State and the Government for their support. * * * The Government can not run without taxes from private business and individuals. If they continue to go into competition from day to day with industry they deprive the Government of taxes and they will ultimately be without sufficient revenue with which to run.

Why it is necessary for the Government to build a fertilizer factory within TVA territory, or without TVA territory, passes my understanding. Anyone familiar with the fertilizer industry knows that it has been a low-earning industry for many years. Anyone knows that most of the fertilizer factories in this country have either got into great difficulty or have gone broke; and yet there is an effort to put the Government into an industry of this kind in competition with the enterprises which are trying to operate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I should like to state why the committee put the item in the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask the Senator if it was approved by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. McKELLAR. No.

Mr. GEORGE. It was not recommended by the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it was not. The reason why it was put in is that the evidence produced by Mr. O'Neal and others representing the American Farm Bureau Federation showed that there was a shortage of fertilizers, and had been a shortage for quite a while. This does not put the Government into the fertilizer business. It extends the Government's fertilizer business. As we all know, the Government has a large fertilizer plant at Muscle Shoals. This item simply adds a plant at Mobile, which is very close to the largest supply of phosphates that we now have, in Florida. The supply is even larger than the supply of phosphates in Tennessee. For that reason it was proposed to place the plant at Mobile, Ala. Mr. O'Neal, of the Farm Bureau Federation, appeared before the committee. He was greatly interested in the project. As we all know, this is one of the things in which the late Senator Bankhead took a very active interest. He succeeded in having the Senate approve the project on three occasions. The House has refused it each time, but the Senate has already approved it three times, and we felt that it should be recommended and approved this time. That is why the committee reported it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I dislike to take issue with the Appropriations Committee, but I should like to make this statement in all kindness: The Appropriations Committee is exercising a very wide jurisdiction in the field of general legislation. It is not fair to the Senate. It is not fair to the Congress. It is not fair to the country to have this kind of thing going on. This is legislation, and if it were approved by the House an appropriation might be made for the project.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is true that during the war many items of legislation have been added to appropriation bills. I think that practice reached the limit during the war. It has been very materially decreased lately. I think it ought to be further decreased. I do not believe that we ought to legislate on appropriation bills if it is possible to avoid it. Whenever it has been done, it has been by unanimous consent, because any legislation on an appropriation bill is subject to a point of order. That has never been better illustrated than in connection with this bill. Yesterday, by direction of the committee, I offered an amendment which was subject to a point of order, and two Senators made the point of order. The amendment went out. On the other hand, the substance of what was proposed by that amendment, which was subject to a point of order, was offered a few moments ago by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and unanimously accepted. That is the way it has been done. It has been done by unanimous consent. I think there is too much legislation on appropriation bills. However, the practice is very carefully guarded. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am not quarreling with my distinguished friend from Tennessee; but what happens is that the Appropriations Committee reports all sorts of legislative proposals. We must do something about them, so we get together, and in lieu of what has been brought in we adopt something by unanimous consent, when nothing ought to have been brought in in the first instance.

I am advised—and I wish to make this statement before the bill is reported—that in the Labor Department appropriation bill, which will shortly be before us, the highly controversial bill to return the employment services to the States is virtually incorporated as it passed the Senate. It has not been agreed to by the House. The House has a different version of that bill. That bill is now, or should be, in conference. If such a provision is incorporated in the Labor Department appropriation bill I shall not hesitate to oppose it to the limit.

I merely want to emphasize what I am trying to point out as to one of the greatest evils into which we have fallen. Of course when there is placed in an appropriation bill and tied up with a great many other things in which all Members are interested, an item which ought not to be in it, then it becomes necessary to crawl around and by unanimous consent get it out by some means. We are almost powerless to vote it out; we are almost powerless to eliminate it in any other way.

The Appropriations Committee has its proper important function, but its function is not to legislate; and yet I unhesitatingly say that almost every appropriation bill is filled with legislative provisions. That ought not to be, and nobody but the Senate can protect itself.

I know about the fertilizer business, coming back to that. There is a shortage of fertilizer now, and let me tell the Senator from Tennessee why there is a shortage. There is a shortage of sulfuric acid which must be used in order to make a balanced fertilizer. There is a plant at Tuscaloosa, Ala., which was used by the Government to manufacture power and which is now in a stand-by condition and fully equipped to make sulfuric acid. The only people who can operate that plant said they were willing to do it provided they would get a price on sulfuric acid that would enable them to pay the cost. They had to go to OPA to get a price. The Civilian Production Administration said, "O. K.; we are anxious to do it." They were cooperating 100 percent. The persons seeking to operate the plant went to OPA. OPA gave an even better price than they asked, but said that everything must be based f. o. b. on Copperhill, Tenn. That meant that at the other plants where the same company was producing, which plants would be nearer the consuming centers, the freight would be less, but they would have to charge the same freight to the farmers as was charged from Copperhill. Of course, no other governmental agency save the OPA would have been so indifferent to the facts and so blind to the realities as to have attached that sort of condition.

There is a shortage of fertilizer because the present factories and plants cannot be utilized, and therefore the Government must build another plant, take another taxpayer off the tax list, strip the Government more and more year by year of tax revenues, and strip the counties and the States also. If the Federal Government continues to move at the rate it is going, if the Federal Government pursues the course it is now pursuing, the time is near at hand when the great industries of this country will of necessity be federalized, because independent industries cannot compete with the Government, and we will have a system of national socialism.

OPA was appealed to. An effort was made to make plain to them what the facts were, but they still have the problem there. They have had it for some time, and in the meantime the period in which fertilizers should be used is fast elapsing. It will do no good to get fertilizer in the wintertime when the crops that ought to have the fertilizer in the southeastern section have not been able to get it. Every time a Government factory is constructed to do what private enterprise can do, and is doing, it becomes more and more necessary for the Government to do the whole job. We are simply crippling private enterprise and at the same time professing that we are believers in private enterprise. I undertake to say there is no necessity for the building by the Government of a fertilizer plant at any point in Alabama or my State.

There was some reason for the fertilizer plant which was constructed in connection with Muscle Shoals because that plant was equipped to make nitrogen; it was equipped to make certain elements of fertilizer, and it was desired that experimentation should take place and that something be done through the Government that would illustrate whether it would be possible to make fertilizer by new methods and at cheaper prices. But now in this appropriation bill there is a $3,000,000 appropriation which is not recommended by the Budget Bureau, but which the committee has simply reached out and put into it.

I suppose it would be useless to make a motion to reconsider it; but I am making these remarks so that the House committee will know that whatever they do with this item will certainly have some support in the Senate. Furthermore, I am making this statement for the purpose of letting our own Senate conferees know that when the bill comes back here, even in the form of a conference report, I may steadfastly object to it and oppose it, if it has this item in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I am not going to offer an amendment but this bill carries a large appropriation for administrative expenses of RFC. To the RFC has been transferred the Rubber Reserve Corporation. I desire to point out to the Senate what our situation is in regard to rubber at the present moment.

During the war when the British, French, and Dutch could not defend their Pacific possessions and had great difficulty in sustaining themselves in their homelands, the American people, in their great anxiety, expended a large sum of money to create synthetic rubber plants where there could be produced more than 1,000,000 tons of synthetic rubber a year. When we, at great sacrifice of money and bloodshed, recaptured the possesions in the Pacific of the Dutch, the French, and the British, after we had given them tremendous amounts by way of lend-lease to sustain them, we had a contract with those countries to buy their raw rubber at 18½ cents a pound, but since the recapture of their possessions for them they are now asking us to pay 23½ cents a pound f. o. b. the far eastern ports. The OPA at the present moment—showing another ridiculous situation so far as that agency is concerned—will not allow a price of more than 22½ cents a pound for raw rubber in this country. This means that the American taxpayer has to absorb the difference. Under the 18½ cents purchasing price we can lay it down here at 22½ cents a pound, but under the 23½ cents a pound f. o. b. the Pacific, we will continue to lose money and let these foreign countries that we saved through lend-lease and through our sacrifice of blood and lives and through the recapture of their empire, gouge us further to the extent of over $32,000,000 a year. In that connection, I may say the British are taking the lead.

The other day there appeared in the Times-Herald an article by Mr. Frank C. Waldrop outlining and stating that:

A person who was a member of then Secretary of the Treasury Vinson's original staff for handling the British proposal for a $4,400,000,000 loan discloses that Britain's claims of poverty are false, and recommends the loan be cut back accordingly.

I ask that the entire article be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A BUM DEAL

(By Frank C. Waldrop)

From within the United States Treasury comes news of official discovery that the British have kidded us again, and about big money.

A person who was a member of then Secretary of the Treasury Vinson's original staff for handling the British proposal for a $4,400,000,000 "loan" discloses that Britain's claims of poverty are false, and recommends the loan be cut back, accordingly.

This analysis has been furnished to top governmental authorities. It is so important that we reprint it here in full without attempting to translate. It's plain enough, anyhow. Here it is, dated June 19:

"The British loan should be re-examined and cut down to size.

"Actual trade developments since VE-day—as distinguished from the guesstimates made by those responsible for negotiating the loan—now demonstrate that the British do not need anything like the sum agreed on by the negotiators.

"As of last August, the British claimed that in the first year following VE-day they would incur a balance of payments deficit of three billions and in the next 2 years a further deficit of two billions.

"The British estimate for the balance of payments in the crucial first year of transition was as follows (Mr. Clayton's testimony, Senate hearings, S. J. Res. 138P118):

[In billions of dollars]

	Imports	Exports
Minimum imports, austerity level	5.2
Commercial exports		2.6
Net balance on war expenditures	1.3
Net balance on invisible items		.6
Total	6.5	3.2

Deficit: 3.3 billions of dollars.

"Ten months have now elapsed since VE-day and actual export and import figures are available against which to check the estimates made last August.

"British imports are actually running at a rate $1,000,000,000 less than they estimated. On the other hand, British exports are running at a rate $1,000,000,000 more than they estimated, thus reducing their estimated balance of payments deficit by $2,000,000,000.

"No information is currently available as to the actual developments with respect to the net war expenditures or the net balance on invisible items, but both these are very probably more favorable than was estimated last August.

"Taking into account the actual flow of commodities it is perfectly clear that the balance of payments deficit in the first year after VE-day will amount not to the three and three-tenths billions assumed in August of last year, but to no more than and probably much less than one and three-tenths billions.

"This conclusion is confirmed by the British holdings of gold-and-dollar balances. During the last 10 months when the British expected a deficit in their balance of payments to cut sharply into their holdings of gold-and-dollar balances, nothing of that sort has occurred.

"According to British figures, their net holdings of gold-and-dollar balances at the end of the war amounted to $1,840,000,000. The latest figures supplied by the British show that 9 months later their net holdings were still $1,750,000,000.

"The decrease is accounted for by settlement of a Canadian account.

"It may be noted that as of April 1941 the British reported a net balance of gold-and-dollar exchange of zero.

"During the war and by reason of lend-lease and troop payments made to Americans throughout the empire their net balance of gold-and-dollar exchange increased to a level of approximately one and nine-tenths billions.

"There can be no doubt that during the war this country made a very powerful contribution to the improvement in the British gold-and-dollar-balance position.

"The loan should be referred back to committee and cut down in size.

"The figures cited above demonstrate the British balance of payments is actually very much more favorable than assumed by the administration when it negotiated the loan. If the loan was proper on the basis of the estimates made in August, it is obviously too large in the light of actual developments.

"The administration has failed to supply the committees of Congress with information showing the actual course of trade developments. This was not the only item on which they have failed to tell the whole story.

"They did not point out that Empire countries during the war enormously increased their holdings of gold and dollar balances. South Africa alone holds nine hundred millions—three times her prewar holdings. Nor did the administration indicate what it knew to be true, that the British liabilities to Empire countries would be substantially reduced.

"The British owe India four and five-tenths billion; Egypt, one and five-tenths billion; and Palestine, five hundred and fifty million. These sums, the administration has been informed, will be settled just as lend-lease was settled, at a small fraction of the nominal indebtedness.

"In the light of these considerations a cut in the British loan is clearly indicated. Indeed, there is reason to believe that quite apart from any loan or gift the British can receive all the assistance they may need in their balance of payment problem through the international fund.

"Through that fund, it may be recalled, the British can get, without any struggle at all, three hundred and fifty million every year to total one and three-tenths billion. If necessary they can, of course, receive much more than that."

There it is. Nobody in his right mind can misunderstand that memorandum. Nobody with the best interests of the United States at heart will ignore it.

The House of Representatives this week begins final consideration of that so-called loan to Britain. The memorandum quoted in full above shows as plain as day why that loan is a bum deal for the United States of America.

Instead of merely cutting it down, Congress will throw the loan out entirely if it wants to serve America first. At any rate, just remember what you read here. If the loan goes through, there will be big trouble to follow—and never let it be said that we didn't know.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I wish to say that either we should not continue to let the British gouge us on the price of rubber, or we should deny the loan. They do not need both. I believe the figures to which I refer are authentic, and indicate that the British do not need $3,750,000,000 at this time, and at the very most they would not need more than $1,300,000,000, which was the figure we discussed during the debate.

In all fairness to the American people, the Treasury, having these figures at the present time, owes it to the American people to disclose them before it succeeds in getting the other House to approve, on the basis of a completely erroneous set of facts and circumstances, a loan to a foreign country, of the size which has been approved by the Senate.

I wish to protect further the closing of the synthetic-rubber plants of this country. We need to keep those plants in running order, so that the American people may be protected for all time to come, or at least until we see some signs of honest-to-God cooperation throughout the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 6777) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. BRIDGES, and Mr. GURNEY, conferees on the part of the Senate.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1850) to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, to secure the national defense, to advance the national health and welfare, and for other purposes.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, this is a bill which was introduced by the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] and the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON]. It has been referred to as the science bill. I should like to suggest that immediately after disposal of the bill the Senate take up Senate bill 1248, which is the so-called Fulbright bill. I believe that it would be well to have an understanding that both these bills be considered, because the consideration of them would point out the fact that they are two different and separate proposals.

When Senate bill 1248 was discussed by the Senate once before, there was some confusion and misunderstanding on the part of some of the Members because it was assumed at that time that the bills were interrelated, that there was much in common between them, and that the enactment of one or the other might interfere with the progress of the remaining measure. It was suggested that the enactment of both bills would result in a duplication of effort. Therefore, it occurs to me that, in view of the fact that both bills are on the calendar, and that each represents widely separated objectives and has little in common with the other, we should have the Fulbright bill taken up after we have considered and disposed of the pending measure, provided, of course, that there is sufficient time within which to do that without interfering with consideration of the appropriation bills and other important legislative matters.

Mr. President, with reference to the Fulbright bill, which differs from the Kilgore-Magnuson bill in that it relates to applied science rather than to pure basic science, which is the objective of the Kilgore-Magnuson bill, I should like to make a few observations.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Am I to understand that the Senator was asking for unanimous consent that the Fulbright bill be now considered?

Mr. MEAD. No; I was not. I was merely suggesting the possibility of the consideration of both these measures, one as quickly after the other as practicable, in order to point out the fact that they are two different and entirely separate measures. Moreover, the discussion of one might be helpful in connection with the consideration of the other in the event that the Fulbright bill is brought up not too long after the Kilgore-Magnuson bill has been disposed of.

Mr. TAFT. I want to suggest that there are many important bills on the calendar.

Mr. MEAD. When the Fulbright bill was discussed in the Senate on a prior occasion it was pointed out by a number of Senators that there was no other bill which covered the same situation. If it is understood that there are two bills on the calendar, and that they are not related one with the other, but deal with separate objectives and that we should take them up as soon as we can possibly do so, one after another, it will have a tendency to clear up the misunderstanding.

Mr. President, with reference to the Fulbright bill, Senate bill 1248, I wish to leave with the Senate the following observations:

During the war, when we needed the full strength of small business to help win the war, the Congress provided for the creation of a Smaller War Plants Corporation. I believe that the Senate is familiar with the creation, operation, and administration of that Corporation.

Prior to that time the Senate authorized the appointment of a Special Committee to Study and Survey Problems of Small Business Enterprises. That committee has, in my judgment, served the Senate and country well. It has been of great service to small business in bringing it into the war effort and in keeping small business in a good wholesome, healthy, and economic condition insofar as it was possible to do so.

Small business came through during the war, and now in these difficult days of reconversion we should help small business get back to peacetime production.

That is one reason for my great interest in the Fulbright bill. This bill would make the fruits of modern science available to American business; it would go far toward insuring the continued vigor of our entire national economy.

This bill is founded on the recognition that is an age of science, American business, particularly small business, will starve at the roots if it cannot make use of the fruits of science. This bill would tap, for the benefit of business, the vast store of technological information now in the possession of the Government. It would put existing Government research facilities to work in the interest of business. It would help business to make use of new inventions, new products, and new processes.

Mr. President, as the result of the strain and stress of the Nation's war effort, there are a great many new processes in a great many fields. In various fields, by reason of the shortage of materials, new provisions were made. New devices were utilized, and new practices and new procedures were inaugurated. All those new developments can be made available to the little businessman and small manufacturer, no matter where he is located, if he has available to him a central headquarters where he can secure the necessary information and service.

Mr. President, as I said, it will help business make use of these new inventions, new products, and new processes.

Under the strain of the war, many new methods and processes came into being all over the world, and many of those processes which came into being in the occupied nations are now being brought into this country. They would be available to small business if we had the particular set-up which is proposed in the Fulbright bill. Many of them would improve small business in this country and make it more efficient.

The Fulbright bill, S. 1248, presents the first real attempt at this session of Congress to help the small businessman, and also the large businessman and the medium-sized businessman, through the maze of new scientific developments which can be applied to their business. The Fulbright bill is practical; it is sound and workable. It presents no conflict with the pending bill or with any other bill, and it has developed no real opposition.

The Fulbright bill recognizes that in this age of scientific complexity only a few of the largest corporations have the research facilities necessary for national and international leadership. Dr. Condon, the new Director of the Bureau of Standards, who previously was associate director of Westinghouse laboratories, has testified that even in an organization as large as Westinghouse "the problem of adequately marshaling and bringing to bear all the available scientific and technical knowledge is extremely difficult."

If corporations as great in size as Westinghouse cannot marshal and bring to bear all the available scientific information, imagine the difficulties of the small businessman, the man without such laboratory facilities. I think it is an understatement, Mr. President, to say that the small businessman is confused and that the small businessman is handicapped. Even large corporations simply cannot afford to maintain the large laboratories and corps of technicians necessary to keep up with the pace of modern science; they often contract out their work. But work so handled is mostly inadequate and incomplete.

The Fulbright bill creates in the Department of Commerce an office of Scientific and Technical Services which will meet this problem and will be the agency of government which will collect and furnish technical information for the use of the businessman. It will not concern itself with pure science and its development. That will be taken care of by the pending bill, the so-called Kilgore-Magnuson bill. I wish to repeat that the Fulbright bill will not concern itself with pure science and its development. It will not concern itself with creative science and its activities. That is the function of the National Science Foundation which is created by the Kilgore-Magnuson bill, S. 1850, a bill which I favor, but which deals with an entirely different subject.

I wish to state definitely and categorically, Mr. President, that the Kilgore-Magnuson bill, S. 1850, is entirely different and apart from the Fulbright bill. The Fulbright bill has twice been brought up on the unanimous consent calendar in the Senate but both times it was sidetracked, due to misunderstanding and belief that it duplicated the Kilgore-Magnuson bill or dealt with the same subjects. The Kilgore-Magnuson bill, now being called up, establishes a National Science Foundation to coordinate and stimulate basic scientific research—and I stress the word basic—to be carried on by a number of Government agencies, by universities, and by private research laboratories. It will also provide scholarships and fellowships for training a larger number of young scientists. It will not concern itself in any way, in any shape, or in any form with the technical, applied, scientific problems of American businessmen.

Mr. President, during the war we developed a great deal of the lighter metals techniques. Aluminum and magnesium and lighter steel products were developed. All these techniques will be made available to the small manufacturers all over the United States if the Fulbright bill is enacted and if this agency to disseminate the information is created.

The National Science Foundation, Mr. President, which is provided for in the other bill, the Kilgore-Magnuson bill, will do no research of its own. It will operate entirely by means of research contracts. It will delegate to the Army the job of working on such new weapons as guided missiles and rocket ships. It will encourage the Navy to improve its ships and ordnance. It will foster basic research on the causes of cancer and other diseases. It will encourage and facilitate basic research which will contribute to scientific agriculture. In brief, the Kilgore-Magnuson bill will stimulate the progress of pure science and creative science in this country by research contracts and by training more young scientists.

The Fulbright bill, on the other hand, provides an entirely different program which stands on its own. It provides a program which is dependent on no other bill. It provides a program to give business the kind of practical assistance it wants and needs. It creates in the Department of Commerce an office which will be a businessman's office—an office to which the businessman can go with his technical questions. He will be able to go to the present field offices of the Department with his technical problems and he will be able to get some practical help. He will not be referred to a half dozen different agencies, as he now is. He will not be told that if he goes to Washington he may or may not find an answer.

The relation of the Fulbright bill to the National Science Foundation bill was very carefully considered by the Senate Commerce Committee, and the committee found no duplication or overlapping. This point is clearly and specifically covered in the Commerce Committee report on Senate bill 1248. It is report No. 908, and it has been available since January 29 of this year.

Mr. President, the Office of Technical and Scientific Services set up by the Fulbright bill will collect, analyze, compile, and maintain complete records and information regarding the latest scientific developments which are useful to business. Through publications and personal contacts that Office will make this information available to businessmen all over the country. For example, a small businessman in North Carolina, New York, or Nevada who needs a good metal corrosive will need only write or call on the Office or at the local Department of Commerce office and ask for the information. By return mail he will receive the information, together with all the information that is known to the Government about corrosive agents. With light metals now being used extensively in manufacturing, more and more of this information will be required, and it will be available.

The Office will also be the place where independent inventors can bring their inventions for evaluation, and at the Office, which will have adequate safeguards, they will be able to get assistance for the development of worthy inventions. One hears too many stories of inventors who have ideas who have been held up from 10 to 20 years because they had no one to whom to go who would evaluate their inventions and furnish suggestions as to where to go to get assistance in their development.

Finally, Mr. President, the Office will promote wide use in private business of the very great number of publicly owned patents which have resulted from Government research and development. The Commissioner of Patents, Casper Ooms, has testified that the bill does not involve any changes in the patent laws. It is not patent legislation, but it would make our patent system more effective. No objection to the bill has been made by the Association of Patent Attorneys.

Thus we see that the Kilgore-Magnuson bill and the Fulbright bill are entirely different bills—entirely different in purpose—entirely different in provisions—entirely different in function. Both bills are needed, but each bill stands entirely on its own merits. Neither bill depends on the passage of the other.

One thing I want specifically to mention is the fact that the Fulbright bill—to help the small businessman, and all businessmen, in their applied scientific problems—is not a revolutionary program, and is not a new program. Many of the functions under the bill are already being carried on by the Office of Declassification and Technical Services of the Department of Commerce. This office, which includes the National Inventors Council, was created by Executive order of the President under wartime powers. The President has also transferred to this office the functions of the Office of Production Research and Development of the old War Production Board and the Technical Advisory Service of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. In short, this present office in the Department of Commerce is doing much of the job of giving technical services to business and industry which the Fulbright bill provides, but most of these powers spring from wartime authority. It is our responsibility to make these functions a peacetime basis, so as to insure that the businessman, particularly the small businessman, gets a break. If we do not, we will be telling small business that we were willing to help them to get war production, but we are not interested in the welfare of small business in time of peace.

The services called for under the bill are not new ideas in American economy. Farmers for years have been receiving the benefits of the latest information in scientific agriculture through similar facilities in the Department of Agriculture.

Another important point to which I wish to invite attention is the cost of operations under this bill. Simply stated, the enactment of S. 1248, the Fulbright bill, would only cost this Government some $2,750,000 more than is now being expended for this work. The reason for this low figure is that many existing facilities and personnel of the Department of Commerce, particularly the National Bureau of Standards and the field offices, as well as the present Office of Declassification and Technical Services, will be fully utilized to provide this service to the American businessman.

I think it is clear, therefore, that this bill does not provide a hastily drawn, untried plan; instead, it provides a carefully drawn, tried, practical, and realistic plan, which will be of tremendous assistance to all businessmen in the United States, and is a "must" as far as the smaller businessman is concerned. It authorizes a continuance in peacetime of the tested and proven technical service which was provided during the war.

It is clear to me that every type of small and large businessman will benefit by the work of the Office of Technical and Scientific Services. It will cover most of the different fields of interest to business. A recent survey which I requested the Department of Commerce to make shows the range these projects might cover. Proposed projects include the assembly and publication of existing technical data on new metals and alloys for electrical equipment, weights and measures used in foreign trade, materials used in air conditioning, fire-retardant treatments for textiles, new paints and finishes, structural adhesives, waterproofing of concrete, cleaning of masonry, welding fluxes, and plastics molding. These are only a few examples of hundreds of fields where information of value to small business is waiting to be published and disseminated. This type of research into the scientific applied problems of businessmen can only aid and assist them. For this reason we should, we must, consider the Fulbright bill at a very early date.

I am confident that two facts will stand out during consideration of this bill. In the first place, there is no sound opposition to the bill, because it does not prejudice the interests of any group. In the second place, the bill is one of the most useful and practical small business measures yet proposed.

Mr. President, it occurs to me that it is high time the Congress seriously considered the plight of small business. The number of casualties resulting from the reconversion effort in the field of small business is alarming, and unless we maintain small business in this country in a strong, healthy, wholesome condition, I fear that our failure will have an effect upon our democracy itself.

All over the world new scientific developments have taken place and have been applied. Those scientific developments, the new processes, the new procedures, would improve the lot of the businessmen of this country. They would help keep our economy ahead of the developments in other countries. Encouraging them is one of the measures vitally necessary to our security. Therefore it occurs to me that after we consider and make our decision with reference to the Kilgore-Magnuson bill, which applies to pure and basic creative science, we should follow that by taking up the Fulbright bill as quickly thereafter as is practicable, because that bill pertains to another field, the field of applied science in the developing and in the spreading of information to the businessmen of our country with regard to the new techniques and new procedures which have resulted from the Nation's war effort.

I wish to make clear the point that the so-called Fulbright bill was under consideration heretofore on two different occasions, and it was set aside, in my judgment, through a misunderstanding. That misunderstanding rooted from the fact that there was another bill, the Magnuson-Kilgore bill, and if both bills could be considered within a reasonably short time of each other misunderstanding would not develop, because the bills are separate measures, their objectives are entirely different, they are not related, and we can be for one without being against the other. There is no duplication of effort, and in my judgment both the bills will prove very helpful.

Mr. President, I wanted to make clear that the Fulbright bill, reported by the unanimous vote of the Committee on Commerce, is separate and distinct from the Magnuson-Kilgore bill, and pertains to a different field, the field of applied science, and that it will be of great benefit to the business interests of the United States, particularly the small businessmen.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I wish first to endorse what the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] has said about the objectives of the bills. While the bills do not duplicate each other, I think they are complementary in the sense that if we are to get full advantage out of the scientific progress which has been made in pure science, it is necessary to have some medium through which to bring the new knowledge to businessmen, especially the small and medium-sized businessmen, or to large business, for that matter, because there is no practical process or machinery by which such information is made available to the business people of the country. If Congress should pass the Kilgore-Magnuson bill and fail to pass a bill similar to the bill referred to by the Senator from New York, we would have gone only half way. We would not have brought down to the levels where it could be used the knowledge developed under the Magnuson bill.

Mr. MEAD. My colleague is quite correct. If, as a result of the passage of the Kilgore-Magnuson bill new scientific developments result, then the agency proposed to be set up by the Senator's bill would more quickly bring such developments to the attention of the businessmen of the country. So there is a relationship, in that one complements the other. But the point I wanted to make was that the bill which the Senator is sponsoring does not duplicate the work provided for in the Kilgore-Magnuson bill; on the other hand, the Kilgore-Magnuson bill does not duplicate the work provided for in the Senator's bill.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is quite true. They have different functions, but they both contribute to the same end to a great extent.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. And I think both are necessary to an effective, well-rounded program.

Mr. MEAD. As I pointed out, I favor both bills. One will prove invaluable in the field of basic science. The other will prove very helpful to the business interests of the country in the field of applied science.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, one other matter. I came in, unfortunately, after the Senator had begun his remarks. Did the Senator state that he was going to move to take up my bill after completion of the Kilgore-Magnuson bill?

Mr. MEAD. No. It was suggested that we act on the Kilgore-Magnuson bill, and then I took the floor to point out the possibility of considering the Fulbright bill as quickly after the disposition of the Kilgore-Magnuson bill as practical for us to do, having in mind the appropriation bills and such other matters as might take precedence over it.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Since several Members have previously stated that they did not want the so-called Fulbright bill considered until the other bill has been considered, I think notice should be given now that it is our intention to bring up the so-called Fulbright bill as soon as possible after the disposition of the Kilgore-Magnuson bill.

Mr. MEAD. So there will be no possibility of misunderstanding the situation, I leave the thought with the Senate that so soon as possible after the disposition of the Kilgore-Magnuson bill I shall move consideration of the Fulbright bill.

THE SHORTAGE OF MATERIAL TO CARRY ON THE VETERANS' HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the veterans of the country, along with a great many other homeless citizens, are vitally concerned with the progress of the housing program. Some time ago the Senate and the House of Representatives passed certain legislation to expedite the construction of homes which would be within the means of the veterans. The other day there appeared in the Washington Post a full page advertisement describing a new business center which had been recently constructed, including a new theater and various other commercial establishments I think that no fair-minded person doubts that in building homes for veterans it is, of course, necessary to have certain other buildings which go to make up a community, including, of course, schools and churches and certain essential commercial activities. But it seemed to the veterans of this city, and particularly one of their national organizations, that a great many of these buildings did not fall within that essential classification, particularly so at a time when they have been unable to secure the necessary building materials in order to construct the homes which, after years of service to their country overseas or in the United States, they so sorely need.

The situation, Mr. President, was so serious, that the president of one of the new national veterans organizations, the Amvets, addressed a letter to Mr. John D. Small, Civilian Production Administrator, and, because I believe the situation is of such importance and the problem facing the veteran is so serious, I am going to take a few moments of the Senate's time to read the letter written by Mr. Jack Hardy to Mr. Small. The letter follows:

JUNE 27, 1946.

Mr. JOHN D. SMALL,
Civilian Production Administrator,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMALL: The veterans of World War II and the Members of Congress must have been as startled and shocked as I, to see in today's issue of the Washington Post a full-page advertisement by the Shirlington Corp., of Washington, D. C., stating that there had been constructed and were currently in operation, 23 stores at Shirlington on the Shirley Highway, 2½ miles from the Pentagon Building, and that the most beautiful unit of a large restaurant chain was under construction there, as were 5 clothing stores, a shoe store, a jewelry store, and a picture frame shop.

This full-page ad further states that a woman's specialty shop of 18,000 square feet and a large department store will be "soon under construction" and that "other stores to come" include an auto agency and accessory store, a bowling alley and furniture, candy, hardware, optical, and ice cream stores.

Within 2 miles of Shirlington are vacant lots where builders who already have permits to build veterans' homes have put in foundations and are unable to continue because not a brick nor foot of lumber is available for residential construction. At the same time a mountain of brick and other critically needed building materials continue day after day to go into commercial construction for private profit, while millions of veterans and their families are virtually homeless.

The veterans of World War II and the many other deserving homeless Americans are full to the teeth and sick to death with excuses, double talk, evasion, softsoap, and delay. Official explanations to date are entirely unsatisfactory. They add nothing, and make not one foot of lumber or one brick available where it is most critically and urgently needed—in residential construction for the veterans of this war and their families and the many other needy Americans.

As national commander of the Amvets and on behalf of all veterans we demand immediate action to stop all nonessential commercial construction and that the material now going into construction of the type be made available immediately for veterans and other essential housing construction.

Mr. Administrator, the "chickens are coming home to roost" on the doorstep of those charged with responsibility for the national home building program for the particular benefit of the veterans of this war as determined by the President and the Congress of the United States.

The commercial building situation in Washington is not different than those which can be observed in dozens of other cities and smaller communities throughout the Nation. This situation borders on a national scandal. We are faced—and there are none who can outface us in our position—by a situation to which the will of Congress is being thwarted by local groups of selfish individuals, who are taking advantage of the loopholes in the laws and regulations to push construction which is for their selfish gain.

One of the big loopholes is the present composition of the CPA construction committees in the 71 CPA districts throughout the country which advise the district construction managers of CPA on the "essentiality" and nondeferability of nonhousing building, alteration, and repair projects.

These committees, set up for the most part while the members of this and other veterans' organizations were serving their Nation actively in the armed forces, do not include those most directly concerned with and interested in residence construction—veterans of World War II. It is urged that such committees be reorganized at once and that World War II veterans be placed thereon so that the interests of the veterans may be protected and the will and intent of the Congress followed to the letter.

In a national press release on Tuesday of this week the Civilian Production Administration points with pride to the fact that CPA "was able to turn back approximately 450,000 projects before they reached the formal application stage by persuading the applicants either that their projects were not essential or that they could be deferred." That is an imposing figure. The fact remains, however, that the approach was negative rather than positive, as shown by the figures for the remaining 10 percent. "From the remaining 10 percent nearly 50,000 who were convinced that their projects were essential and nondeferable or where stoppage would have resulted in extreme hardship, CPA sifted out 31,457 for approval and denied 14,971, Mr. Small said," the press release continued.

There we have in your words the fact that 31,457 applications for nonhousing construction were approved during the first 11 weeks of CPA control. Construction cost of these projects totals $1,370,751,048.

"A good part of the approved construction will not begin to draw on the building materials market until 4 to 6 months after the projects were approved, and hence it is not having immediate effect on housing," you are quoted, says the press release of CPA. That weak and vacillating administration of commonly established rules, even though they were written with firm determination, can result in equivocation and frustration is evidence in the building field today. We have agency pitted against agency and legal opinion buffetted against legal opinion. This situation cannot long continue without detrimental effect on the morale of the people, the faith of whom in orderly government must be maintained."

A Government agency must not only follow the letter of the law, but also must be guided by the full spirit of the law. There are none who can truthfully say that it was not the will of the people through the Congress that the green light be given fully to the home-construction program and that it be given first priority. In our opinion, now is the time to get back to fundamentals and to put the building materials where they belong—for the construction of homes for veterans and other homeless people. The chickens have truly "come home to roost" on the doorstep of official Washington. It is time to act. We ask that you fulfill your duties under the law now.

Sincerely,

JACK W. HARDY,
National Commander.

Mr. President, I think the national commander of that organization has put his finger on a very critical situation facing the country. I hope that the Administration, Mr. Wyatt, and Mr. Small will take immediate steps to investigate the charges made by Commander Hardy and his organization, and will do whatever is necessary to expedite the channeling of building materials into homes for veterans, until that problem can be met and solved.

AMENDMENT OF EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT AND FEDERAL FARM MORTGAGE CORPORATION ACT

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to report favorably, with the amendment, House bill 6477, to amend section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and section 3 of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act, as amended, and for other purposes; and I submit a report (No. 1634) thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be received.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have talked with the majority leader [Mr. BARKLEY] and the minority leader, the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], and they have agreed to the consideration of the bill at this time unless there is objection on the part of some other Senator. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, may I ask what the bill is? I do not recognize it by the number.

Mr. MURDOCK. The purpose of the bill is to extend the authority for 1 year to make Land Bank Commissioner loans. We have been making such loans for a number of years, and it is thought by those who are administering the law that the authority should be extended for an additional year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, with amendments, in section 3, on page 2, line 19, after the name "Federal", to insert "Farm"; and on page 3, line 1, after the word "on", to strike out "Agriculture and Forestry" and insert in lieu thereof "Banking and Currency."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXTENSION OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency reported Senate Joint Resolution 156, Calendar No. 1545, to extend the succession, lending powers, and the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is necessary to obtain action upon this measure. There is no opposition in the committee. I may say that another appropriation bill will soon be reported, but the report has not yet arrived. It is expected soon. While we are waiting for it, I thought we might dispose of this measure.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, did I correctly understand the Senator to say that the joint resolution has the approval of the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. BARKLEY. It has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 156) to extend the succession, lending powers, and the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, after the numerals "1952" and the semicolon, to insert "and"; and in the same line, after the word "section", to strike out "5 (d)" and insert in lieu thereof "5d", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That, (a) the first sentence of section 4 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, is hereby further amended by striking out "for a period of 15 years from the date of the enactment hereof" and inserting in lieu thereof "through June 30, 1952"; and the first sentence of section 14 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, is hereby further amended by striking out "at the expiration of the 15 years for which the Corporation has succession hereunder" and inserting in lieu thereof "prior to July 1, 1952"; and (b) section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, the act approved January 26, 1937 (50 Stat. ch. 6, p. 5), as amended, and the act approved February 11, 1937 (50 Stat., ch. 10, p. 19), as amended, are hereby further amended by striking out "January 22, 1947" wherever appearing and in each instance inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1949."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, is this a measure extending the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. For the purpose of the RECORD, I should like to state that unfortunately I was absent attending a conference in Bermuda on the day this measure was considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency. I realize that the RFC will be extended in spite of my views, but I wish to express my own opinion that it is time to consider the liquidation of this agency. I feel that in view of its history and the reasons for its organization in the midst of a depression, it would be entirely proper for us to provide for its liquidation under present conditions. As I have said I was not present when the committee met, and did not register any opposition at that time. However, I feel that it would be a very reassuring gesture to the country if the activities of this agency which should be continued were returned to the Treasury Department and to the Department of Agriculture, and the agency itself discontinued. This would go far to disprove the often repeated statement, that we can never rid ourselves of a bureau or agency, even when the conditions which called it forth have passed. If we should need the RFC again in the future it would be easy to recreate it. In view of the enormous growth of bureaus and the necessity for some curtailment in Government expenditures, it does seem to me that it would be a good thing to liquidate this agency, not only because of its psychological effect but also because it would return to the Treasury substantial assets which are no longer needed for the purposes of the original RFC. This would demonstrate to all that our democratic system is sufficiently flexible to meet emergencies and at the same time is able to avoid the dead hand of an ever-expanding bureaucracy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 156) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess for an hour.

There being no objection, the Senate (at 12 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) took a recess for 1 hour.

On the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled and was called to order by the President pro tempore.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6496) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 59 to the bill, and concurred therein, and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 12, 19, and 62 to the bill and concurred therein, severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hayden	Overton
Andrews	Hill	Pepper
Ball	Hoey	Radcliffe
Barkley	Huffman	Reed

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

LABOR-FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6739, making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6739) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6739), which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the amount of the bill as passed by the House was $1,136,500,238. The amount of the net increase by the Senate committee was $14,928,127. The amount carried by the bill as reported to the Senate is $1,151,428,365. The amount of the appropriations for 1946 was $1,202,631,586. The amount of the regular and supplemental estimates for 1947, is $1,178,075,900. The bill as reported to the Senate is under the estimates for 1947 by $26,647,535, and is under the appropriations for 1946 by $51,203,221.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The first amendment of the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—Department of Labor—Office of the Secretary," on page 2, line 4, after "District of Columbia", to strike out "$862,000" and insert "$937,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 8, after the word "services", to strike out "$925,000" and insert "$979,645."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 3, after "$2,000)", to strike out "$695,528" and insert "$727,104."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 5, after "Department of Labor", to strike out "$3,137,033" and insert "$3,170,981."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 15, after "Department of Labor", to strike out "$652,410" and insert "$65,782."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Labor Statistics", on page 5, line 19, after the word "laws", to strike out "$4,772,000" and insert "$5,043,587"; in line 20, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$3,050,000" and insert "$3,113,654"; and in line 22, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$685,913" and insert "$857,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Children's Bureau," on page 7, line 17, after the word "periodicals", to strike out "$438,535" and insert "$501,664."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United States Employment Service," on page 13, line 8, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$10,417" and insert "$62,500"; in line 9, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$149,200" and insert "$895,220"; and in line 11, after "District of Columbia", to strike out "$17,129,250" and insert "$34,258,500, and, without limitation upon the availability of other funds for the same purposes, $11,000,000 for the liquidation of unrecorded and contingent obligations, including the payment of accrued annual leave, arising in connection with the transfer of employment office facilities and services to State operation; in all, $45,258,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 8, to strike out:

GRANTS TO STATES FOR PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT OFFICES

For payment to the several States, beginning October 1, 1946, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 6, 1933, as amended to January 1, 1942 (29 U. S. C. 49–491), and for carrying into effect section 602 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, the sum of $51,387,750: Provided, That no State shall be required to make any appropriation as provided in section 5 (a) of said act of June 6, 1933, as amended to January 1, 1942, prior to July 1, 1948.

And insert in lieu thereof:

For grants to States (including Alaska and Hawaii) beginning January 1, 1947, to finance the proper and efficient administration of State-wide systems of public employment offices, in accordance with standards and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor as necessary to carry out this act, title IV of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 and the purposes of the act of Congress approved June 6, 1933, as amended (excluding section 5 thereof), and, upon the request of any State, for the payment of rental for space made available to such State in lieu of grants for such purpose, $34,258,500, of which $288,500 shall be available to the United States Employment Service for all necessary expenses, including personal services, in connection with the operation of employment office facilities and services in the District of Columbia.

On December 31, 1946, the Secretary of Labor shall transfer, to the State agency in each State designated under section 4 of the act of Congress approved June 6, 1933, as amended, as the agency to administer the State-wide system of public employment offices in cooperation with the United States Employment Service under said act, the operation of State and local public employment office facilities and properties which were transferred by such State to the Federal Government in 1942 to promote the national war effort. The Secretary of Labor may also provide for the transfer and assignment to such State, without reimbursement therefor, of any other public employment office facilities and properties, including records, files, and office equipment: Provided, That as a condition to such transfer and assignment of Federal properties, the Secretary may require the recipient State to waive any claim which may then exist or thereafter arise out of the use made by the Federal Government of, or for the loss of or damage to, property and facilities transferred to the Federal Government as hereinabove described.

The Secretary of Labor shall withhold or deny certifications of funds for a State system of public employment offices unless he finds that the State—

(1) (a) has made provision for the transfer to and retention in the State-wide system of public employment offices of employees of the Federal Government who (on the day preceding the effective date of the transfer of the employment offices to the State under this act) have been employed in State or local employment service functions in such State, in the positions occupied by them under the Federal service or in reasonably comparable positions, except that individuals so transferred may be separated or terminated for good cause as determined in individual cases under the applicable State merit system, or separated or terminated under the applicable State merit system by reason of reductions in force found necessary in the interests of efficient operations, and may be separated (A) if they have failed to acquire eligibility for continued employment in the State-wide system of public employment offices under the State merit system in the positions occupied by them under the Federal service or in reasonably comparable positions, after having been given a reasonable opportunity to acquire such eligibility, or (B) if the Secretary has determined that it is impracticable for them to be given an opportunity to acquire such eligibility; and (b) has made provision for the extension to employees of the Federal Government who left employment-service positions in such State in order to perform training and service in the land or naval forces of the United States or service in the merchant marine as defined in Public Law No. 87, Seventy-eighth Congress, of the same employment rights and privileges as those provided for Federal employees transferring to State employment in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph; or

(2) has requested the detail of the employees referred to in clause (1) (a) of this paragraph to the State agency under the following provisions: So much of the funds appropriated for State-wide systems of public employment offices as may be necessary shall be available to the Secretary of Labor, in lieu of any portion of the grant to the State, for the payment of compensation (under the salary scales applicable to such employees prior to the effective date of the transfer of the employment offices to the State under this act) to employees of the United States Employment Service in the Department of Labor, who, upon the request of the State, and for the purpose of permitting continuity in their employment pending an opportunity to acquire eligibility for State employment in accordance with clause (1) (a) of this paragraph, may be detailed by the Secretary of Labor to the State agency for service in the State-wide system of public employment offices.

Notwithstanding any other provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended, any person who was appointed to a position in the Social Security Board under Executive Order 8990, of December 23, 1941, and who shall have returned to employment with the State at any time prior to the end of 1 year after the return to State operation of the employment offices in such State, shall, if he so elects, be paid a refund of the total amount of his deductions and deposits under this act, together with interest to the date of termination of his service with the Federal Government; and such person shall not receive any annuity benefits under said act based on the service covered by the refund unless he is subsequently reinstated, retransferred, or reappointed to a position coming within the purview of said act and redeposits all moneys, except voluntary contributions, so refunded to him, together with interest at 4 percent compounded on December 31 of each year, except that interest shall not be required covering any period of separation from the service.

In carrying out the provisions under this heading, the Secretary shall assure that each State agency operates under such methods of administration relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, as are found by the Secretary to be necessary to carry out the purposes of this heading (except that the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office, and compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods), and has made reasonable provision for facilitating the free movement of workers seeking employment and employers seeking workers, and for the replacement of any funds appropriated by the Congress for State systems of public employment offices which, because of any action or contingency, have been lost or have been expended for purposes other than or in amounts in excess of those found necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient administration of the State system of public employment offices.

The Secretary of Labor is authorized to expend in any State, after January 1, 1947, so much of the funds appropriated for State systems of public employment offices as may be necessary to operate a State-wide system of public employment offices under the control of the Secretary if no State system of public employment offices exists in such State or if, and for so long as, the State is not eligible for Federal funds for such purposes. Except to the extent that a system of employment offices under the control of the Secretary is operated within a State either (1) pursuant to the specific request of the governor of such State, or (2) with funds specifically appropriated by the Congress for the operation of such system under the control of the Secretary, the Secretary shall not expend more than $1,000,000 in any fiscal year for the purposes of this paragraph or operate a system of employment offices in any State pursuant to this paragraph for more than 3 months in any fiscal year.

Whenever funds are paid to the same State agency for the purposes of this act and of title III of the Social Security Act, as amended, (1) such State agency may, if it so elects, submit to the Secretary and the Social Security Board a joint budget covering both the function for which grants are made under this act and the functions for which grants are made under such title III; in such case, the Secretary of Labor shall, if the State agency so elects, certify to the Social Security Board the amounts to be paid to the State for the purposes of this act and upon receipt of such certification, the Social Security Board shall certify such amounts to the Secretary of the Treasury, in addition to the amount, if any, payable by said Board under the provisions of section 302 (a) of the Social Security Act, as amended. Any additional amounts so certified by the Social Security Board shall be paid to the State by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the appropriation herein made available; and (2) the State agency may commingle such funds and account therefor by such accounting, statistical, sampling, or other methods as may be found by the Secretary of Labor and the Social Security Board, respectively, to afford reasonable assurance that the funds paid to the State agency for the purposes of this act and the funds paid to the State agency under title III of the Social Security Act, as amended, are expended for the respective purposes of this act and such title III.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I draw the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment just stated.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to be heard on this amendment. I have been in conference with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] who I understand has been interested in the insertion in the bill of substantially the bill recently passed by the Senate, and on which I understand also from the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, the House has declined a conference, and has therefore stopped action upon the bill as it left the Senate.

My objection to this particular phase of the new language inserted in the bill is that it goes a shade beyond the original power of the Secretary to make rules and regulations and to prescribe standards which the States must meet in setting up their employment services.

I think the Senator from Minnesota is willing to accept an amendment which I have discussed with him which will obviate this difficulty so far as I am concerned.

When the United States Employment Service Act was before the Senate, it was repeatedly stated that the Federal Government was paying all the cost and the State governments none of it, and that, therefore, the Secretary of Labor, who now has jurisdiction in the premises, should fix the standards and the regulations. That is a misconception of the facts. Actually when we provided for the State employment system it was on a basis of joint State and Federal action. The Congress levied a tax, but the Congress gave to the States the right to recapture all but three-tenths of 1 percent of the tax, provided the States would come in with their own plans for a joint State and Federal employment service. When the States came in with their plans, they had to sit down with the Secretary and had to square the plans with certain minimum standards fixed by the Secretary. But to talk about the Federal Government furnishing all the money is not a realistic approach to the problem at all. The Federal Government has no money except what it gets out of the taxpayers of the States, and we were desirous of setting up a joint State and Federal employment service. So we levied a tax, and said to the States, "If you will pass your act setting up this service, you may recapture or have a credit for all but three-tenths of 1 percent of the tax levied by the Federal Government. Then the three-tenths is to be repaid for the purpose of bearing the administrative costs of the joint State and Federal program."

Therefore, Mr. President, it is not a case of the Federal Government furnishing the money. It is a case of the Federal Government having levied a tax, but saying in the same breath, "We are levying this for a joint State and Federal purpose. Now we ask the States to cooperate, to pass acts, to take back 2.7 percent of the money which we are taking out of the taxpayers of the States and passing it back in this way."

Under that system the State and Federal Government sat down together and established a joint plan. We did say that the Secretary would have the authority to fix certain minimum standards which the State must meet. But in this language, and in the bill which the Senate passed a few days ago, the Secretary is given the absolute right to make of every State official administering the employment service nothing but a mere clerk to carry out the dictates of the Department of Labor here in Washington. Every day he would have to get a directive, every night he would have to change his course if he got another directive. That is what I do not want to have happen.

If these employment services are to go back to the States at all, they should as a matter of good faith go back to them just as we took them away from the States, or as they voluntarily turned them over to us. If they are not to go back, and we wish a completely federalized system, that is a totally different question, but it is now proposed that we turn them back.

I have no objection to the provision giving the Secretary of Labor the power to fix standards and regulations to carry out title IV of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, which he must have anyway, since that service has been transferred to him, and to issue rules and regulations and to prescribe standards for the purposes of the act of Congress approved June 6, 1933. But the two are altogether different, when we consider that, in the first instance, we were setting up a joint system, and now it is proposed that we give to the Secretary of Labor this broad, general authority to fix the standards and regulations as the condition on which the State shall get back its service, with the further provision that if the State does not comply with such standards, if it fails to meet the standards and regulations, then the Secretary of Labor may recapture the State system and bring it back into the Federal system.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BALL. I discussed this provision with the distinguished Senator from Georgia, and I am in accord with him that we do not need in this bill to expand greatly the power of the Secretary of Labor. I agree with the Senator that it is not wise normally to put this much legislation, such lengthy provisions, in an appropriation bill. But the substantive legislation which the Senate passed earlier this week has been bottled up in the Rules Committee of the House, with no indication that it will ever even get to conference, and in order that the transfer back to the States of the services may be made in an orderly manner, and that the Federal employees may at least be given a chance to qualify for State employment, it is necessary to include some provisions, particularly from title III of the bill which we passed earlier last week, in the pending appropriation bill.

I agree with the Senator from Georgia about the language on page 15 in the committee amendment, and I move to amend by striking out on lines 21, 22, and 23, the language "in accordance with standards and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor as necessary to carry out this act," and to insert in lieu thereof the words, "to carry out," so that it will read, "to carry out title IV of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield for the offering of the amendment?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Minnesota from what page he has been reading?

Mr. BALL. From page 15 of the bill, lines 21, 22, and 23.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that amendment at that point in the bill is satisfactory to me. Of course, I am not speaking for anyone else, but it does meet the objection which I had in mind, and which seems to me to be entirely valid if we are to have a joint State and Federal system.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, before accepting the amendment, I should like to know whether there are other amendments to the italicized language.

Mr. GEORGE. There is one other amendment.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wonder if we may not have the other amendment discussed, then accept both of them together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one on page 20, as the Chair recalls.

Mr. BALL. The other amendment is on page 17, in line 21, after the word "employment", to insert the following language: "superior to that of any war veteran competing for appointment." The effect of that, Mr. President, is simply to make sure that if the Federal employees transfer, and if they are not war veterans, they take a competitive examination, but if a war veteran gets a higher eligibility rating the war veteran gets the appointment. That was our objective all along.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have no objection to the amendment. I accept the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the amendment I wanted to have incorporated in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment on page 15 has not been agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. I accept that amendment.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I desire to speak to this matter before the amendment is acted on, because I want to be sure that I know what it does.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I yielded to the Senator from Georgia, who in turn yielded to the Senator from Minnesota. Does the Senator from Georgia have any amendment to propose?

Mr. GEORGE. No. Those are the two amendments which I said are necessary and proper. In view of the fact that the bill which was passed earlier in the week has not been sent to conference, and therefore there is no opportunity in connection with that bill to iron out the differences between the two Houses, I readily accede to the proposal made by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota and the distinguished Senator from Nevada that it is necessary to have something in the bill so that the conferees may be able to act intelligently.

Mr. McCARRAN. I thank the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Minnesota for the amendments which I have accepted.

I now yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I want to go along with the proposal made by the Senator from Minnesota, if the amendment means what he says it means; but for the record I desire to make perfectly clear that it does protect the standards which were fought for on the floor of the Senate last Tuesday. If this is a way of reopening the controversy that took place on the floor of the Senate last Tuesday, on which we had a series of record votes, and which I think settled the issues by rather a preponderant majority of the Senate, I want to know it before I vote on the question. Therefore I wish to read a brief statement, and to ask the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Nevada, when I get through, if the situation is as presented by this statement is a correct statement of fact:

As I understand, these provisions were included in the Labor appropriation bill as a substitute for substantive legislation inserted as a rider in the Labor bill by the House. These are the significant factors: (1) The House is attempting to effectuate the return of the Employment Services to the States by substantive legislation attached as a rider to the Labor appropriation bill. This substantive legislation is the provision which would modify the Wagner-Peyser Act requiring the States to match Federal funds granted and instead provide for 100 percent Federal financing. (2) The Senate passed substantive legislation (H. R. 4437) on June 25, 1946, which would have returned the Employment Services to the States in an orderly manner, but the House has refused to appoint conferees to consider the bill. Thus, the Senate has been balked by House action in its efforts to return the Employment Services to State operation under H. R. 4437. (3) The Senate must either accept the House rider in the Labor appropriation bill, which constitutes substantive legislation wholly inadequate to accomplish the return of the USES in an orderly manner, or must substitute the necessary provisions to effectuate an orderly return.

The following provisions from H. R. 4437, as passed by the Senate, are contained in the Labor appropriation bill:

1. Return of the Employment Services to the States and authority to transfer property and records needed to operate the Employment offices.

2. Transfer of personnel to State employment until they can be given an opportunity to take an examination for permanent employment.

3. Authority to return to such employees the deductions to their credit in the Federal Civil Service Retirement fund.

4. Requirement for States to maintain a merit system governing the employment in the States of these personnel.

5. Requirement that States refund misspent moneys.

6. Guarantee of operations of local offices clause.

7. Requirement for Secretary to certify funds through the Social Security Board where States submit a single budget unemployment compensation and employment service.

I should like one of the pages to take the memorandum to the Senator from Nevada so that he may have it before him as we carry on this discussion.

I may say to the chairman of the subcommittee that if this so-called rider language in the Labor appropriation bill accomplishes the purposes set forth in the memorandum which I have sent to the Senator from Nevada, in that event I do not find myself in disagreement at least with the objectives of the language in this bill, but I should like to have an answer to this question: Am I correct in my understanding, after listening to the Senator from Minnesota, that if this language is adopted, along with the amendment to which he has agreed with the Senator from Georgia, the Secretary of Labor will have the continued authority in a specific State case to insist that the State meet the decent minimum standards which he will prescribe for the operation of the State's employment service? In other words will the failure on the part of a State to set up minimum standards result in no Federal money going to the State until minimum standards are set up? Further I ask does the Secretary of Labor under the rider have the authority to function under the so-called guaranty-of-operations clause?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Minnesota, as the question is addressed to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I will say in reply to the Senator from Oregon that a great many of the substantive changes—in fact, most of the substantive changes which we made in the Wagner-Peyser Act in H. R. 4437, are not in this language.

We confined ourselves in this language primarily to provisions which we felt were absolutely necessary for an orderly transfer of the services back to the States. It is my contention that the amendments suggested do not at all affect those provisions which relate primarily to the right of the employees at least to be given an opportunity to acquire eligibility in the State service. The Secretary still has, of course, his basic authority to issue regulations and fix standards under the Wagner-Peyser Act. We do not change that at all. He has the authority delegated to him by General Bradley of the Veterans' Administration, under title IV of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, to require that there be maintained an employment service for veterans. I do not think the language which we would strike out by this amendment was necessary, and it could be interpreted as perhaps broadening the authority which the Secretary has under the existing law.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota two or three further questions on this subject, because, as we pass upon this bill, I think it of great importance, so far as the intent of the Senate is concerned. Let us suppose that the State of Minnesota sets up an employment service, which in the opinion of the Secretary of Labor, under the rules and regulations as they have been administered heretofore, does not meet the minimum standards the Secretary of Labor believes ought to be met in order to justify the expenditure of Federal money for an employment service by the State of Minnesota, and he so notifies the authorities of the State of Minnesota. Assuming that this rider is the legislation which will be passed, will the Secretary have the authority then to withhold from the State of Minnesota Federal funds, and, under the guaranty-of-operations clause of the bill which was passed by the Senate last Tuesday operate, for example, a Federal service for at least 90 days?

Mr. BALL. For 90 days only.

Mr. MORSE. For 90 days only. And within that 90-day period until such time as Minnesota and the Federal Government can iron out their differences?

Mr. BALL. Yes; he would have that authority. He has that authority under the basic Wagner-Peyser Act. He has to give the State opportunity for a hearing. As a matter of fact, I do not know of any case in the history of that act of funds having been withheld. They have a hearing and they eventually get together on operations. The recapture clause for the 90-day period is in this bill. Frankly I do not think it would ever go into effect, because in this Federal-State relationship, what happens is that they iron out their differences and get together on a mode of operation. It does assure continuity of service, as the Senator from Oregon says.

Mr. MORSE. In order that I may be perfectly clear about it, I further understand from the Senator from Minnesota that this so-called rider language will in no way destroy the rights of present Federal employees in the Employment Service if they meet the requirements of the examination on merit which would have to be given by the States under their own State civil-service regulations. Or, to put it this way: If a present Federal employee in Minnesota takes the merit examination in Minnesota on the return of the service to the State and is within the top three, would he have his so-called preference rights under the language of this rider?

Mr. BALL. Yes. In further reply I will say he would have a preference right unless he was not a war veteran and a war veteran was higher than he was on the eligible list.

Mr. MORSE. That was our agreement the other day, too.

Mr. BALL. Yes. And the language simply makes that clear.

Mr. MORSE. That is protected by the pending amendment. My next question is this: The Senator says that what is sought by this rider language is to return the service to the States in an orderly manner, but it does not contain all the substantive provisions of the bill which we agreed upon by majority vote last Tuesday.

Mr. BALL. That is correct.

Mr. MORSE. Will the Senator from Minnesota tell the Senator from Oregon in what major aspects this rider language differs from the bill which the Senate passed the other day and which is now resting in the House of Representatives with a refusal on their part to appoint conferees?

Let me express a fear which is entertained by the Senator from Oregon. I assume that there must be some major differences between the language of the rider and the bill which the Senate passed, or that bill would be going through the House, and would not be blocked by a refusal to appoint conferees. I wish to know if what I am voting for involves a major difference as compared with the bill for which I voted the other day, and which I took an active part in trying to get through this body.

Mr. BALL. In House bill 4437 we rewrote the Wagner-Peyser Act completely. We somewhat broadened the purposes of that act. We eliminated the requirement for a plan, and gave the Secretary somewhat broader authority—although not as broad as some of the opponents of the bill contended—to set the standards and issue regulations by which the States would have to abide; and we included in it referral standards. None of those things are in this amendment.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TUNNELL] who had charge of the other bill on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware, who had the floor leadership in connection with the employment service bill last Tuesday, whether he is satisfied from the language of the so-called rider to this bill that the major objectives of the bill for which we fought on the floor of the Senate last Tuesday, which bill we succeeded in passing, are protected?

Mr. TUNNELL. I think they are protected. I should like to read a telegram which will show the objectives of those who were opposing House bill 4437. This telegram was sent on June 24:

H. R. 4437, DIRKSEN, covering return of employment service to States as amended by Education and Labor Committee, does not provide bona fide return. Repeals Federal recapture and control features opposed by all State unemployment administrators and the Governors Conference. House appropriations bill H. R. 6739 scheduled for consideration Senate next week will accomplish genuine return of employment service to State control October 1. Separate legislation covering transfer of personnel can follow later. Your opposition to H. R. 4437 as reported sought.

So this comes a long way from meeting the requirements of those who were opposing House bill 4437. I believe that it accomplishes the main thing sought to be accomplished by House bill 4437. I believe it is worth accepting.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Has the Senator from Oregon concluded?

Mr. MORSE. I have one further question. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada, now that he has had an opportunity to look over the memorandum which I have submitted to him if he agrees that the points listed, which set forth my understanding of what is accomplished by this rider language, are an accurate statement of the effect of the rider?

Mr. McCARRAN. The language of the rider accomplishes each and every one of the seven points raised by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator from Nevada. I wish to make clear both to the Senator from Nevada and to the Senator from Minnesota that the primary objective of these questions is to lay a legislative foundation for any future court interpretation which may be called for on the basis of the intent of the Senate at the time the bill was passed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator does not mind, I should like to have read the several points raised by the Senator from Oregon. I was not in the Chamber when they were read.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I shall read the seven points raised by the Senator from Oregon. His question was whether or not the following provisions from House bill 4437 are contained in the rider:

1. Return of the employment service to the States and authority to transfer property and records needed to operate the employment offices.

That is accomplished by the rider.

2. Transfer of personnel to State employment until they can be given an opportunity to take an examination for permanent employment.

That is accomplished by the rider.

3. Authority to return to such employees the deductions to their credit in the Federal Civil Service Retirement fund.

That is accomplished by the rider.

4. Requirement for States to maintain a merit system governing the employment in the States of these personnel.

That is accomplished by the rider.

5. Requirement that States refund misspent moneys.

That is also accomplished by the rider.

6. Guaranty of operations of local offices clause.

That is accomplished by the rider.

7. Requirement for Secretary to certify funds through the Social Security Board where States submit a single budget Unemployment Compensation and Employment Service.

That is accomplished by the rider.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a further question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. STEWART. The fourth point is as follows:

Requirement for States to maintain a merit system governing the employment in the States of these personnel.

The Senator says that that is accomplished by the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. By the rider.

Mr. STEWART. By the provision in the so-called rider, or the amendment reported by the committee. Will the Senator point out that language?

Mr. McCARRAN. On page 17 of the bill——

Mr. BALL. If the Senator will yield, it is the paragraph at the top of page 20.

Mr. McCARRAN. The language is as follows:

In carrying out the provisions under this heading, the Secretary shall assure that each State agency operates under such methods of administration relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis, as are found by the Secretary to be necessary to carry out the purposes of this heading.

Mr. STEWART. Down to that point, that accomplishes approximately what I wished to inquire about. Does that mean that there shall be in each State a uniform merit system, or may one State have one kind of merit system, and another State another kind?

Mr. McCARRAN. Each State may have a merit system of its own.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose they are not uniform?

Mr. McCARRAN. They may not be uniform, but if they are acceptable to the Secretary, that is the standard.

Mr. STEWART. The point I am making is, Can the Secretary require that they be uniform?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not so construe the language.

Mr. STEWART. The Secretary must approve them.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; but in approving them he does not necessarily require that they be uniform.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose he refuses to approve them unless they are uniform?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BALL. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that the only reason for that language is that in 1941, when these services were operated by the States, they were operated under two acts, the Wagner-Peyser Act and title III of the Social Security Act. At that time the President had transferred the Employment Service to the Social Security Board. Under title III of the Social Security Act the Social Security Board had exactly the same authority, in identical language with that contained in this bill, to require a merit system. As a matter of fact, the same language now applies to the administration of unemployment compensation. So when the employment offices were taken over by the Federal Government in January 1942, the States were operating under that identical language. But in this instance we make the appropriation solely to the Department of Labor, because since then the USES has been transferred to the Department of Labor, and the operation is entirely under the Wagner-Peyser Act, which contains no such clause. Merely to retain the same identical set-up which we had in 1941, we placed that language in the bill. It does not require a uniform system in all States. It merely requires that the appointments shall be made on some kind of merit basis. The Secretary has nothing to say about who is appointed, what he is paid, or how long his tenure shall be.

Mr. STEWART. If there is a requirement for a uniform merit system, as it is called, the system in my State or in the Senator's State may be under fire at some time or other because it does not accomplish what the Secretary desires to have accomplished. If the requirements of the Secretary as to the merit system are not met, what recourse does the State have?

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. I invite the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the following language:

In carrying out the provisions under this heading, the Secretary shall assure that each State agency operates under such methods of administration relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis as are found by the Secretary to be necessary to carry out the purposes of this heading.

Under the language of that provision I do not think the Secretary will have any authority to go any further and say that systems have to be uniform.

Mr. STEWART. Then, looking beyond that, and skipping over some of the language, we find the provision:

Operates under such methods of administration * * * as are found by the Secretary to be necessary.

Mr. TUNNELL. Yes. That has been practically in effect under the Social Security Act for years.

Mr. STEWART. Then let me ask this question, and then I shall not bother the Senator very much more. On the same page, page 20, in line 9, after the parenthesis and the comma, we find the following words:

And has made reasonable provision for facilitating the free movement of workers seeking employment and employers seeking workers.

What does that mean?

Mr. TUNNELL. That is the very purpose of the act; namely, to try to enable those seeking employment to find employers, and to try to enable employers who are seeking help to find the employees.

Mr. STEWART. Was a similar provision contained in the bill which the Senate passed a few days ago?

Mr. TUNNELL. I think it is the exact language.

Mr. MORSE. It is the exact language.

Mr. TUNNELL. Yes; I am told that it is the exact language.

Mr. STEWART. Is there hidden in any of this rider or amendment any effort, so far as the Senator knows, to reinstate the so-called FEPC which was so obnoxious to a good many of us a few months ago?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL], because this language was largely in his charge.

Will the Senator from Tennessee state his question again, please?

Mr. STEWART. I asked whether there is hidden within the words of the amendment or the rider, or within it, whether hidden or not hidden, an effort to reinstate the FEPC provisions pertaining to employment, particularly the employment of minority groups, which were so obnoxious to so many Senators a few months ago.

Mr. BALL. I say to the Senator, absolutely not.

Mr. STEWART. I am satisfied with that statement.

Mr. TUNNELL. I say to the Senator that that was in paragraph 11 of 4437, which came in under the Advisory Council.

Mr. STEWART. It was deleted from this?

Mr. TUNNELL. It was deleted from this.

Mr. McCARRAN. I say to the Senator that I am very sure there is none of it in this bill.

Mr. STEWART. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the two amendments of the Senator from Minnesota to the committee amendment. Without objection, the two amendments will be considered en bloc.

The amendments to the committee amendment were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the adoption of the committee amendment as amended, striking out lines 9 to 17 on page 15, and inserting other matter, ending on page 22, in line 11.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, were both the amendments to the committee amendment adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Both the amendments to the committee amendment were adopted.

The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—Federal Security Agency—Food and Drug Administration," on page 25, line 17, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "$800,000" and insert "$869,300"; in line 18, after the word "exceed", to strike out "35" and insert "85"; and in line 22, after the word "periodicals", to strike out "$3,037,181" and insert "$3,631,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 26, line 17, after "District of Columbia", to strike out "$113,202" and insert "$133,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Freedmen's Hospital," on page 27, line 6, after the word "special", to strike out "intruction" and insert "instruction"; and in line 14, before the words "of the", to strike out "establishment" and insert "establishments."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Education," on page 29, line 15, after the word "among", to strike out "the more scholarly"; and on page 30, line 2, after the word "same", to strike out "$991,990" and insert "$1,200,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Health Service," on page 34, line 20, after the word "automobiles", to strike out "$14,565,000" and insert "$15,565,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 6, after the word "automobiles", to strike out "$1,950,000" and insert "$1,985,900."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, in line 21, after the word "regular", to insert "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 25, after the words "purchase of", to strike out "two" and insert "twenty"; and on page 39, line 3, after "(5 U. S. C. 118 (a))", to strike out "$1,500,000" and insert "$2,061,813."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Saint Elizabeths Hospital," on page 41, line 12, after the word "residence", to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That not exceeding $200 additional may be paid to two employees to provide mail facilities for patients in the hospital."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Social Security Board," on page 44, line 8, after the word "herein", to strike out "$3,250,000" and insert "$3,497,535."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 20, after the word "automobiles", to strike out "$2,900,000" and insert "$3,028,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 19, after the word "and", to strike out "compenstion" and insert "compensation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Administrator, Federal Security Agency," on page 46, line 4, after "District of Columbia", to strike out "$190,044" and insert "$195,659."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries and expenses, Office of Community War Services, Federal Security Agency," on page 47, after line 6, to insert:

Salaries and miscellaneous expenses, social protection: For all expenses necessary to enable the Federal Security Administrator to carry out the provisions of Public Law 163, Seventy-seventh Congress, as amended by Public Law 381, Seventy-ninth Congress, and the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Federal Security Administrator to assist the States in matters relating to social protection, and for other purposes" (S. 1779, 79th Cong., or H. R. 5234, 79th Cong.), when and if such act is enacted into law, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; not to exceed $15,000 for the temporary employment of persons by contract or otherwise without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes and the civil-service and classification laws; acceptance and utilization of voluntary and uncompensated services; maintenance, operation, and repair of passenger automobiles; to accept the cooperation of the authorities of States and their counties, districts, and other political subdivisions, in carrying out the purposes of the acts; $460,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 2, after "District of Columbia", to strike out "$109,885" and insert "$126,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 5, after "District of Columbia", to strike out "$270,235" and insert "$289,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 19, after the word "employees", to strike out "by" and insert "of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 8, after the word "journals", to strike out "$900,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title IV—National Labor Relations Board," on page 54, line 23, after "(50 U. S. C., App. 1501–11)", to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That no part of the funds appropriated in this title shall be used in connection with investigation, hearings, directives, or orders concerning bargaining units composed in whole or in part of agricultural laborers as that term is defined in the Social Security Act in section 409, title 42, United States Code."

And on page 55, after line 4, to insert:

No part of the funds appropriated in this title shall be used by the National Labor Relations Board in any way in connection with any petition or complaint by or on behalf of any individual having authority, in the interest of an employer, to hire, transfer, lay off, recall, promote, demote, discharge, assign, reward, determine the amount of wages earned by, or discipline not less than five employees of the employer, or to adjust their grievances, or to effectively recommend any such action.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I think this amendment should have further consideration at the hands of the Senate. I think the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] might well explain the item.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, first let me ask whether the amendment striking out the proviso beginning in line 23 on page 54 has been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been adopted. Both parts of the amendment have been read, but no action has been taken.

Mr. McCARRAN. What was the action on the amendment striking out lines 23 and following on page 54?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be put on that amendment.

All in favor of the adoption of the amendment——

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Minnesota should explain the item.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I think the first part of the amendment relates to striking out the provisio in reference to packing-shed workers. That amendment begins in line 23, on page 54.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well.

Mr. BALL. I do not know whether there is any contest in regard to that item. I do not think there is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment striking out the proviso beginning in line 23 on page 54 and ending in line 4 on page 55.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment beginning in line 5, on page 55, inserting certain new matter.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly on the committee amendment in line 5 on page 55.

A week or two ago both the Senate and the House passed the so-called Case labor bill, section 9 of which provided that supervisors, as defined in that section, should no longer be considered employees for purposes of the Wagner Act. That section grew out of the fact that the National Labor Relations Board had rendered several conflicting 2-to-1 decisions. At first the decisions excluded supervisors from the definition of employees; but later, by another 2-to-1 decision, the Labor Board included them, and held that under the National Labor Relations Act the employer could be forced to bargain with a union of foremen or could be forced to permit his foremen to join a union, even a union of production workers.

The issue was discussed fully on the floor when that specific amendment to the Case bill was before the Senate. To my mind it is simply a question of divided loyalty. Under the court interpretations of the Wagner Act and the Board decisions, an employer may be cited and found guilty of an unfair labor practice on account of an act performed by a supervisor. The Board has now taken the position that the employer also may be required to recognize and deal with a production worker's union or an independent union of foremen. Particularly when they are in a production worker's union, they are in the position of having their loyalties divided. They are required to abide by the rules and constitution of the union, and at the same time they must represent the employer in the most important contact between management and the production workers.

It was the overwhelming opinion of both Houses of Congress that that situation did not make sense, and therefore they adopted that particular section of the Case bill, which did not deny the supervisory employees the right to join unions, but simply said that the Government, through its laws and this enforcement agency, would not force the employer to bargain with such a union, and would not require him to retain in his employ a foreman who joined the union against the employer's wishes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I wish to continue my statement first, please.

Mr. President, that bill was vetoed by the President; but in his veto message the President, in discussing this particular section, specifically said that he believed that that line must be drawn in legislation. He objected to the way the Congress had attempted to draw it, but he admitted there was a need for legislation on the subject. So it is clear that early in the next session of Congress we shall attempt to deal with this situation.

But now we are faced with the possibility or probability, I may say, that there will be a terrific drive on the part of both the CIO and the A. F. of L. to organize foremen, with the full backing and support of the National Labor Relations Board, under their present interpretation of the act.

So when Congress reconvenes in January and attempts to deal with this question, we may find ourselves facing a fait accompli, namely, the fact that a great number of foremen have been organized into the unions, under the impetus and protection of the Wagner Act; and then it will be too late or at least much more difficult to deal with the subject legislatively. It is in an attempt to hold that situation in status quo until Congress and the President, both of whom have recognized the need for legislation on the subject, can agree on what is a proper remedy, that I have offered this limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, before I yield to the Senator from Oregon, I wish to say that, as regards this amendment, it grieves me very much to disagree with my young friend, the Senator from Minnesota. I was very much interested in his presentation of the amendment. I voted against it in the committee and I shall vote against it on the floor, because I do not believe it represents a proper method to employ in bringing about the result which the Senator from Minnesota desires. I believe that the result should be achieved by a legislative bill. However, the matter has been submitted to the Parliamentarian and it has been held that the proposal is a limitation, and it is not subject to the rules. As I have said I voted against the amendment in the committee, and when the amendment comes to a vote in the Senate I shall again vote against it.

I now yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the remarks just made by the Senator from Nevada. I say to my good friend, the Senator from Minnesota, that I have great admiration for him. One of his qualities which I admire most of all is his absolute frankness and integrity of statement. I believe that he has just made a statement which is characteristic of statements made by him, whether on the floor of the Senate or off the floor of the Senate. He never leaves one in doubt as to where he stands on any issue or as to his motives. I admire that characteristic. It is one which I believe is highly desirable in all men.

The Senator has told us this afternoon, honestly and frankly, that the purpose of the language of the amendment is to seek to accomplish what, after all, he was not able to accomplish as one of the sponsors of the Case bill which was vetoed by the President.

Mr. President, it is true that the President of the United States did just exactly what the Senator from Minnesota has said he did, namely, to point out that a line should be drawn between rank-and-file workers and supervisory employees. However, there is nothing in the veto message which would support any conclusion, and I am sure the Senator from Minnesota did not imply it that the line which the Senator from Minnesota seeks to draw in this amendment and the type of line the President referred to. However, in order to avoid any danger of such an interpretation being made, I may point out that there is nothing in the language of the veto message on the Case bill which would support the conclusion that the line of this amendment is the line that the President of the United States thinks should be drawn when we draft legislation covering this subject.

The Senator from Minnesota is also quite correct in his statement that, in the next session of Congress, we will have before us the problem of adopting a labor code. I shall not consume the time of the Senate on this occasion to express my views as to the desirability of such a code. I have referred to it in other speeches on this floor. But what the committee amendment does seek to accomplish is that, by the proposed rider, we will now pass substantively on the whole question of organizing supervisory employees. I believe there to be only one place where that should be done. It should not be done in an appropriation bill but in the form of a bill for a labor code which I think will come before the Senate at the beginning of the next session of Congress.

What the Senator from Minnesota is trying to do—and I make no criticism of it—is to obtain what will amount to a legislative handicap favorable to those who seek the type of legislation affecting supervisory employees which the record of the Senator from Minnesota shows that he favors. I assert that the place to fight out that issue on the merits will be in the next session of Congress, next January and February, when we shall face head-on the question of what type of labor legislation substantively this body should pass. I think it is most unfortunate to seek to accomplish that objective this afternoon by way of an amendment to the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. President, I wish to make one more comment and then I shall be through. I assert that it is not fair for us at the present time, without due consideration which should be given to this matter in a committee, to say that we will vote for this proposal for the reason, among others, which the Senator from Minnesota advances, namely, the fear that between now and next January there may be a great organizational drive to bring about the organization of supervisory employees. Whether that will take place or not will have no bearing on what we should or may do on this issue in January or February next year. But until the matter can be handled in accordance with the ordinary procedure for the passing of substantive legislation, I do not believe this body should try to handle it by way of a rider to the pending bill.

Therefore, Mr. President, I may say that before we take a vote on this matter, it is the intention of the junior Senator from Oregon to suggest the absence of a quorum, and ask for a roll call vote on the rider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 54, beginning in line 23.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hayden	Overton
Andrews	Hill	Pepper
Ball	Hoey	Radcliffe
Barkley	Huffman	Reed
Bridges	Johnson, Colo.	Revercomb
Brooks	Johnston, S. C.	Robertson
Burch	Kilgore	Russell
Bushfield	Knowland	Smith
Byrd	La Follette	Stanfill
Capehart	Lucas	Stewart
Capper	McCarran	Swift
Carville	McClellan	Taft
Chavez	McKellar	Taylor
Donnell	McMahon	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	Magnuson	Tobey
Ferguson	Mead	Tunnell
Fulbright	Millikin	Wagner
George	Mitchell	Wherry
Gerry	Moore	White
Gossett	Morse	Wiley
Green	Murdock	Willis
Guffey	Myers	Wilson
Gurney	O'Daniel	Young
Hart	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. I wish to say a few words in opposition to the amendment. It seems that from a parliamentary standpoint it is permissible to attach such an amendment as this to an appropriation bill. I understand that it is a limitation instead of a substantive amendment, according to the precedents of the Senate. It is, however, just as much a violation of the spirit of the rule as can possibly be written. To each appropriation bill we now find antilabor amendments attached. On the very last day, supposedly, when appropriation bills can be passed, the very last week day before the end of the fiscal year an appropriation bill comes before the Senate containing what is generally recognized and what is intended to be an antilabor amendment.

Mr. President, is that to be a regular course of procedure? At the close of the fiscal year each time an appropriation bill comes before the Senate must we have a controversial amendment attached to be held as a club over the Senate and the Executive, since the bill must be passed at this time, to force the acceptance of these objectionable and controversial amendments? Is it a club over the people of the Nation?

I object to the spirit, I object to the principle of attaching such amendments, which are known as and which are in fact intended to be antilabor amendments, appropriation bills, and particularly at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I insist that I have a right to the floor in my own right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thought the Senator from Minnesota had risen to obtain the floor. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress gave consideration to the ever growing practice of appropriation committees attaching legislative riders to appropriation bills in the guise of limitations on expenditures. I wish to read a paragraph or two from the report filed on March 5, 1946, on that bill:

> The practice of attaching legislation to appropriation bills is often destructive of orderly procedure. Riders obstruct and retard the consideration of supply bills. Sometimes they contradict action previously approved in carefully considered legislation.
> In most cases such legislation is adopted under the parliamentary guise of "limiting provisos," avoiding points of order that would be raised against them by purporting to restrict the spending of Government funds. These practices, when used for purposes other than to effect real economies, should be prohibited by a tightening of the rules.
> Otherwise the regular jurisdiction of the standing committees of the House and the Senate will continue to be impinged upon by the appropriating committees.

Mr. President, I concur whole-heartedly in that conclusion of the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress.

During the period I have been a Member of this body I have seen this practice grow until today there is hardly an important appropriation bill brought up for consideration which does not contain in fact substantive amendments to existing law disguised in the terms of limitations on the expenditure of funds.

I do not quarrel at all with the interpretation of the rules and the precedents made by the Parliamentarian informally on this amendment. It is certainly drawn in the guise of a limitation on the expenditure of money. But there is not a Senator present who does not know that this makes a very substantive change in existing law, and violates the spirit, although not the letter, of the rules and precedents of the Senate.

Mr. President, I think the practice should be curtailed, and the bill for the organization of Congress which passed the Senate and is now awaiting action in the House includes a proposed amendment to rule 16 of the Senate, which makes an effort to limit and curtail the practice of obtaining substantive change in existing law in the guise of a limitation on the expenditure of funds.

Mr. President, the particular item under consideration has created a great deal of controversy before the National Labor Relations Board. Cases have come up and been argued and decided in one way, and the Board has heard other cases and has made decisions recently which look in another direction, so far as this problem is concerned.

I have no doubt that, if and when the concurrent resolution which has passed the House and is now in the Committee on Education and Labor, scheduled for consideration on Monday, is agreed to, creating a joint committee to study the whole question of labor relations and labor laws, that committee will give very serious and earnest consideration to the question which is involved in the pending amendment.

I do not think this is a wise or the sound way in which to legislate. I think a continuation of this practice as stated by the report of the joint committee will, if carried to its ultimate and logical conclusion, result in the impairment of the functioning of the standing committees of the Senate.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will reject the amendment.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the committee amendment which is pending begins with the language starting on line 5, page 55 of the bill.

I listened with great interest to what the Senator from Wisconsin said. I notice, however, that the argument about legislation on appropriation bills seems to depend on whose ox is gored.

There are half a dozen other limitations in the bill to substantially the same effect. Just a few moments ago we adopted the committee amendment relating to the United States Employment Service, which was clearly legislation on an appropriation bill, merely because we found ourselves in such a situation that that was the only way by which the Senate had a chance to get into conference its view on the question raised.

In the matter of the organization of supervisors, I may say that I was not in Congress when the Wagner Act was passed, but I would wager that in the minds of nine-tenths of the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives who voted for that act there was never the slightest idea that foremen, who have the power to hire and fire and discipline employees, who are responsible agents of the employer, would ever be considered employees under the act. Yet, the National Labor Relations Board, in a series of 2-to-1 decisions, has so held. I think it is an impossible situation, if we want responsible management to continue in this country.

Congress passed substantive legislation by overwhelming majorities in both Houses. The bill was vetoed by the President, but in his comments on that particular provision he stated there should be legislation on the subject. It was just that we could not quite agree on a particular form.

When Congress returns next January to consider the permanent legislation which we and the President agree is needed, what if for 6 or 8 or 10 months there has been a terrific drive to organize foremen into unions, with the backing of the National Labor Relations Board, which can put an employer in jail if he does not bargain collectively with a union of foremen, or if he does not permit a foreman to join a union? If we find the foremen organized, then our legislative task will be ten times more difficult in dealing with the situation.

The pending amendment would not prohibit any foreman from joining a union. It merely provides that if he does, and if the employer does not think he can operate effectively as the employer's agent when he is in a union, the employer can discharge him, and the foreman cannot go to the National Labor Relations Board and cite the employer for an unfair labor practice.

Mr. President, that is the effect of the amendment. It freezes the situation for the next fiscal year, until Congress may have a chance to try to get together again with the President on proper legislation in this field.

I may add that in the most recent case before the National Labor Relations Board, the Jones-Laughlin case, it was held by two to one that the employers would have to bargain collectively with foremen who joined the United Mine Workers. Recently the coal mines were taken over by the President, and Secretary Krug is about to sign, if he has not signed already, an agreement forcing the foremen to join the United Mine Workers' Union.

What that particular decision does is to deprive the employer in that case of any chance ever of getting that decision into court, and that is the best decision to take to court. This whole question has never been decided by the courts. It is entirely an interpretation made by the NLRB. But once the employer signs a contract—and he will have to sign it to get his mines back—he is foreclosed from ever getting the matter into court, because the only way to do so is to defy the NLRB order, the union complains to the court, and the employer is brought into court. I think this proposal is the only fair way of holding the situation until we get another chance to consider it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this proposal, offered in committee and adopted by a majority of the committee, is undoubtedly presented in the bill with the idea of preventing the organization and establishment under law of foremen's unions. I do not think it will accomplish the result which my good friend, the able Senator from Minnesota, seeks to have accomplished. He says that during the absence of Congress there will be set up foremen's unions, and such unions will have so established themselves that it will be impossible for Congress to deal with them when it reconvenes. The amendment would not prevent the establishment of foremen's unions. The establishment of foremen's unions could go on notwithstanding the adoption of the amendment. The only thing the amendment would do would be to prohibit the application of Federal money for use with respect to any trouble arising in such unions or between them and the National Labor Relations Board. That is one thing. The amendment would not accomplish the result of retarding the organization, the existence of or the growth of unions composed of foremen if such unions are in the making now.

The question is so close, and it has been regarded as being so close, that groups and legislative committees have dealt with it in various ways. Are we now in an appropriation bill under consideration, which must be passed on this last working day of the fiscal year, going to deal haphazardly with a matter which deserves long and careful study at the hands of legislative committees? It seems to me Mr. President, and I so stated in the committee, that this is not the time and this is not the bill on which to accomplish legislation of this kind. I hope the yeas and nays will be granted on this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on this question, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ANDREWS voted "yea" when his name was called.

Mr. McCARRAN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. A vote for the committee amendment, that is to retain the committee amendment in the bill, is a vote "yea," is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. And a vote to reject the committee amendment is a vote "nay"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there has been no answer to the roll call, has there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; there has been a vote "yea." The clerk will proceed with the calling of the roll.

The legislative clerk resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. BRIDGES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], who if present would vote "yea" on this question. I am therefore free to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BRIGGS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] is necessarily absent.

The Senators from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO and Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained on public business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on official business, having been appointed to the Commission on the part of the Senate to participate in the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is absent on official business, attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

I also announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] would vote "nay."

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is absent on official business attending the Paris meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers as an adviser to the Secretary of State. He has a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is absent on official business, having been appointed a member of the President's Evaluation Commission in connection with the test of atomic bombs on naval vessels at Bikini.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] is absent by leave of the Senate, being a member of a committee designated by the Senate to attend the atomic bombing at Bikini.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] are absent on official business, being members of the Commission appointed to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—31

So the committee amendment on page 55, lines 5 to 13, inclusive, was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title V—National Mediation Board—National Railroad Adjustment Board," on page 57, line 8, after the word "services", to strike out the colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That compensation for any referee who is a public official of any Federal, State, or local government shall not be paid from this appropriation for any period of time during which any such referee is receiving compensation for his employment in any such Federal, State, or local government."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title VII—General provisions," on page 59, after line 10, to strike out section 801, as follows:

SEC. 801. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 6, to change the section number from "802" to "701."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 12, to change the section number from "803" to "702."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated. I am authorized by the committee to offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 50, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

Civilian war benefits: For all expenses necessary, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and travel, to enable the Federal Security Administrator, in order to continue during the fiscal year 1947 the civilian war benefits program heretofore financed from the emergency fund for the President, to provide medical and hospital care (including prosthetic appliances and medical examinations) by contract without regard to section 3709, Revised Statutes, and money payments, to (a) civilians within the United States who have been injured as a result of enemy attack or of action to meet such attack or the danger thereof, or who have been injured while in the performance of their official duties as civilian defense workers; (b) civilians disabled as a result of illness, injury, or disease which occurred during detention by the enemy; and (c) the dependents within the United States of individuals injured or killed under circumstances described in clause (a) or (b) or reported as missing as a result of enemy action, $158,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I believe that this amendment should be called to the attention of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who wished to be heard on it. I do not see him in the Chamber at present. I wonder if we can postpone action on the amendment until he has an opportunity to be present.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be temporarily passed over.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated. I am authorized by the committee to offer this amendment.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 50, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

Civilian war assistance: For all expenses necessary, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to enable the Federal Security Administrator, in order to continue during the fiscal year 1947 the Civilian War Assistance program heretofore financed from the emergency fund for the President, to provide (a) temporary aid (including medical care by contract, transportation, and other goods and services without regard to section 3709, Revised Statutes, and money payments) to citizens of the United States or their children under 18 years of age who have been interned or stranded, and returned to the United States, or who have been evacuated from any area under the direction of the civil or military authorities of the United States, and (b) for the return of civilians evacuated from the Philippine Islands or Hawaii to the United States under the direction of the civil or military authorities of the United States during the period from December 7, 1941, to September 15, 1945, $5,495,000, which amount may be expended by advances or grants of funds or otherwise, to such Federal or other agencies as the Administrator may designate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 48, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$575,000" and insert "$649,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I should like to return to the amendment which was passed over temporarily. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] does not seem to be in the Chamber. I am advised by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] that the Senator from Tennessee would have no objection to the amendment if there were in it the language "citizens of the United States or their children under 18 years of age." That language is already in the amendment which has been offered.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, may the amendment be read again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read:

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 50, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

Civilian war benefits: For all expenses necessary, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and travel, to enable the Federal Security Administrator, in order to continue during the fiscal year 1947 the civilian war benefits program heretofore financed from the emergency fund for the President, to provide medical and hospital care (including prosthetic appliances and medical examinations) by contract without regard to section 3709, Revised Statutes, and money payments, to (a) civilians within the United States who have been injured as a result of enemy attack or of action to meet such attack or the danger thereof, or who have been injured while in the performance of their official duties as civilian defense workers, (b) civilians disabled as a result of illness, injury, or disease which occurred during detention by the enemy, and (c) the dependents within the United States of individuals injured or killed under circumstances described in clause (a) or (b) or reported as missing as a result of enemy action, $158,000.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, there is some confusion as between the two amendments. The other amendment is the one referred to by the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The other amendment has already been adopted.

Mr. McCARRAN. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that the language to which he refers is in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada on behalf of the committee.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I should like to be clear in my own mind as to the other amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator permit the Senate to dispose of the pending amendment?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, when the item on page 50 was before the Committee on Appropriations for consideration several members of the committee objected very strenuously to the use of the words "to civilians." On my motion there was inserted, instead of the language "to civilians", the language "to citizens of the United States or their children under 18 years of age." What the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and I, and other members of the committee, would like to make sure is that that language is in the amendment adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment heretofore adopted by the Senate will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 50, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

Civilian war assistance: For all expenses necessary, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to enable the Federal Security Administrator, in order to continue during the fiscal year 1947 the civilian war-assistance program heretofore financed from the emergency fund for the President, to provide (a) temporary aid (including medical care by contract, transportation, and other goods and services without regard to section 3709, Revised Statutes, and money payments) to citizens of the United States or their children under 18 years of age who have been interned or stranded, and returned to the United States, or who have been evacuated from any area under the direction of the civil or military authorities of the United States, and (b) for the return of civilians evacuated from the Philippine Islands or Hawaii to the United States under the direction of the civil or military authorities of the United States during the period from December 7, 1941, to September 15, 1945, $5,495,000, which amount may be expended by advances or grants of funds or otherwise, to such Federal or other agencies as the Administrator may designate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment has already been adopted.

The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 6739) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. MEAD, Mr. MURDOCK, Mr. WHITE, Mr. BALL, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 6042) entitled "An act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes," returned by the President of the United States with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was Resolved, That the said bill do not pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives not agreeing to pass the same.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6837) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. KERR, Mr. MAHON, Mr. NORRELL, Mr. HENDRICKS, Mr. KIRWAN, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. RABAUT, Mr. CASE of South Dakota, Mr. TIBBOTT, and Mr. TABER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 6682, Calendar No. 1663. The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary yesterday and is on the calendar today. It is an emergency measure. The law will expire at midnight on the 30th of this month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6682) to amend sections 81, 82, and 83, and repeal section 84 of chapter IX of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution to extend the effective period of the emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. O'DANIEL. I object.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish Senators would withhold their objections for a moment, in order to see if we cannot reach an understanding. I realize that, the Senate being in session following a recess, the joint resolution could not be introduced without unanimous consent. If it were introduced and objection were made to its present consideration, that would, of course, postpone action on it so far as today is concerned. The joint resolution would go to the the Committee on Banking and Currency, where it would be subject to consideration and amendment, and to the same procedure as applies to any other bill or joint resolution.

If objection were made to the mere introduction of the joint resolution now, of course that would necessitate an adjournment of the Senate until the following day or until some future day, at which time we would have a morning hour, when the introduction of bills and resolutions would be called for. The joint resolution could then be introduced. If any Senator then objected to its introduction, it would have to lie over a day, and that would postpone it one more day.

I have talked to the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee and to other members of the committee. Some of them seemed to be fearful that if the Senator from New York were permitted to introduce his joint resolution today, an immediate call would be sent out to the members of the committees to hold a meeting of the committee, and they would meet and would try to report the joint resolution to the Senate today.

I can assure all Senators that the Senator from New York, the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, has no intention of calling a meeting of the committee before Monday, at which time the joint resolution would be subject to all the rules and regulations which apply to any other measure.

Therefore, it would seem to me that no point would be gained by objecting to the introduction of the joint resolution today, because at best the joint resolution could not be adopted today. I have frankly stated to everyone concerned that there is no human possibility of the Senate enacting any legislation on the subject between now and midnight tomorrow night, so the OPA law would lapse, anyway. Regardless of whether it lapsed for 1 day or for 2 days or for a week, new action on the part of the Congress would be required, the time when that action would be taken would be a matter of conjecture, and would make no serious difference.

So, Mr. President, I hope Senators will not object to the introduction of the joint resolution today. If the Senator from New York were to seek immediate consideration of the joint resolution, I realize that objection would be made.

But I hope Senators will permit the joint resolution to be introduced today and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and thus let the committee on Monday take whatever action it may see fit to take.

I may say that I have urged that no snap judgment be taken by the committee today, because with so many members of the committee out of town it is felt that no fair judgment would be obtainable.

So I hope no objection will be made to the introduction of the joint resolution today.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I have the greatest respect and admiration for our majority leader. From what he says, and I believe him unqualifiedly, it appears that no action would be taken before the OPA Act expired on Sunday at midnight on the joint resolution proposed to be introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. BARKLEY. I say to the Senator from Texas that no action could be taken on it before Monday. It is just a question of timing, a question as to when it could be taken up.

But there is no use for us to "kid" ourselves, and I have no desire to "kid" either the Senate or the country. There is no humanly possible way by which action could be taken by Sunday night.

So, under the circumstances, I see nothing much to be gained by objecting to the introduction today of the joint resolution of the Senator from New York, and to letting it go to the Banking and Currency Committee. The only difference would be the time when the joint resolution could be introduced.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I think I have made it plain that I am against the OPA.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I got that impression the other night. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'DANIEL. I saw very little opportunity to cause the OPA to expire, but I hoped and prayed that it would expire, and I did everything I could do to bring about that result. Now, with the help of the President, it looks as if it has come about.

However, I am inclined to believe that we have had help from on high; we have had help from God, as well as from man, on this matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Bible says that the prayers of the righteous availeth much. But we might enter into a long debate here as to who is or who is not righteous. [Laughter.]

I hope, however, the Senator will not object to the introduction today of the joint resolution, because by objecting he will not gain any time or advantage.

Mr. O'DANIEL. All I would lose would be the honor of objecting to the introduction of the joint resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The joint resolution would provide, would it not, for a continuation of the present OPA Act?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. If objection is made, that will mean that the OPA Act will die at midnight tomorrow. But if before that time a continuing joint resolution is introduced, that will be before the Banking and Currency Committee, and it might be amended so as to continue in force the present OPA Act. Otherwise a new act will be required.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me say that the mere introduction of a joint resolution continuing a law does not continue it. The joint resolution has to be acted upon by the Congress.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. But it holds out to the President and to those who favor the OPA the hope that there will be a continuation of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think it holds out any hope of any kind.

Mr. WHERRY. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no use in trying to see spooks which do not exist. There is no way to prevent the introduction of the joint resolution either today or Monday. If it is introduced on Monday, it still will have to be referred to the committee, and in the meantime the OPA law will have expired at midnight on the previous Sunday. If the joint resolution is introduced today, it will have to go to the committee, and the OPA law will expire at midnight on Sunday, anyway.

So I see nothing to be gained by objecting to the introduction of the joint resolution today.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. What particular advantage would there be to the opponents of the joint resolution as between objecting now or objecting later to the introduction of the joint resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is hard to say whether there would be any advantage or disadvantage to either side.

There is this to be said: If permission is given for the introduction of the joint resolution today and its reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency, the committee could be called into meeting on some day next week, not earlier than Monday.

Mr. MOORE. It could be called into meeting today.

Mr. BARKLEY. It could be, but it will not be.

Mr. MOORE. Well, I object.

Mr. BARKLEY. A meeting of the committee will not be called today. If the Senator cannot rely upon my assurance on that subject——

Mr. MOORE. No; I do not want to deceive anyone at all. I wish to see this thing die. The Senator from Kentucky knows that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I gathered that impression also from the Senator. But it will die. It will be just as dead on Monday morning if this joint resolution is introduced today, as it will be if the joint resolution is not introduced until Monday. That is the truth about it.

Mr. MOORE. That may be perfectly true, but I still have not had an answer to the question why it would be a favor to allow the joint resolution to be introduced today.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then it would be pending before the Banking and Currency Committee, so that the chairman of the committee could call a meeting of the committee for Monday, if he wished to have the committee meet on Monday, or he could call a meeting for Tuesday. I imagine he would try to call the meeting for Monday.

If the joint resolution is introduced on Monday, the Senator from New York could still call a meeting of the committee that afternoon, if he saw fit to do so. But I will say to the Senator that it would be more convenient to permit the introduction of the joint resolution now and let it be referred to the committee, rather than to have to adjourn the Senate from now until Monday in order to have a morning hour, and then have the Senate spend 2 hours in the morning hour, in order that the Senator from New York might introduce his joint resolution on Monday. That is about the only difference.

I say to the Senator that regardless of whether the joint resolution is introduced today or is introduced on Monday, he will lose no advantage which he would have after the expiration of the OPA law.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, the majority leader said before, and I noticed it carefully and I read it in the RECORD again, that if the extending joint resolution is introduced, then it will be open to amendment and there can be attached to it the conference report or any other provision which it may be desired to attach to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is absolutely correct, and that is true either as to the committee or as to the Senate. In other words, the joint resolution is a simple joint resolution continuing the operation of the OPA Act. If the joint resolution never is enacted, of course the OPA Act never is revived, and it remains dead.

But the joint resolution could be amended in the committee. A majority of the committee could add to the joint resolution the bill which the President has just vetoed. The committee could make it even worse, if a majority of the committee preferred something worse. Or it could make it better.

But no matter what the committee did, the joint resolution still would be open to amendment in the Senate, and it would be up to the Senate to decide what sort of joint resolution it would pass, or whether it would agree to pass any.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I take it that the real question which confronts us is whether we shall now by unanimous consent permit the introduction of the joint resolution, or whether the Senator from New York as a matter of right will introduce the joint resolution on Monday.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct; that is really about all there is to it.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. O'DANIEL. The OPA Act is now in effect.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is; yes.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Therefore, a resolution known as a continuing resolution would be properly named.

If the OPA Act expires at midnight on Sunday night, how could a continuing joint resolution be introduced on Monday?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that is what an old colored man down in my section of the country called a "technimicality. [Laughter.]

Of course, the Banking and Currency Committee could correct that by saying it was a reviving joint resolution, instead of a continuing joint resolution. But that is not very important.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I am sure that when the Senator from Kentucky said there was no human means or no technical way by which the joint resolution could be passed today, he meant if objection were made. But I think we should let the country know, and I think the Senate should indicate, that it is aware that we could handle this joint resolution in the same way we handled the draft joint resolution a little while ago. All of us remember that when the draft law was about to expire, a joint resolution providing for its continuation for a limited time was introduced on the floor of the Senate; and in a matter of minutes the Senate passed the joint resolution continuing the Selective Service Act.

If no objection were made, the rules of the Senate would not prevent us from taking up this matter immediately and debating it and discussing it for as long as we chose to do so, and then having a fair and full vote on it in the Senate.

So I am sure the Senator from Kentucky meant to say that if objection were made we could not take up the joint resolution today, but if objection were not made we could take up and pass the joint resolution this very afternoon by having a fair and full vote on it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I am fully aware of the possibility which the Senator from Florida has pointed out. When I said it was not humanly or, perhaps, practically possible to pass the joint resolution today or by midnight tomorrow night, I took into consideration the practical situation. I knew that Senators would object to immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

I am only seeking to have the joint resolution introduced and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. No Senator will lose any right he possesses by not objecting to the introduction of the joint resolution at this time.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Will the Senator please explain the reason, if any, why the joint resolution could not be referred to the committee and the committee act on it this afternoon?

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no reason why, if the committee were called and the majority of the committee were willing to pass on the resolution, it could not be passed on today. In fact, the resolution could be acted upon. I have been told by the chairman of the committee, however, that the committee will not be called this afternoon, and I, myself, have urged that the committee be not called. I think I can assure the Senator that the committee will not be called this afternoon, but physically it could be called. If a majority of the members of the committee were willing to act on the resolution, they could act, but that will not take place.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I appreciate what the Senator has said, but I wish to interpose my objection just the same.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE] has already objected.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I was the first to object.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but I thought perhaps I could make some headway. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'DANIEL. The Senator has made some headway, but I want it to be known that I was the Senator who objected first.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well. I believe the RECORD will show that the Senator from Texas was the first to object.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I appreciate the way the majority leader has cooperated with me.

Mr. BARKLEY. I believe that the word "cooperated" is a misnomer. I have not cooperated with the Senator in his attitude on this legislation. I did cooperate with him the other night when I was trying to see that he received an opportunity to say what he had to say.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I was referring to that cooperation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was hoping that, by cooperating with me at this time, the Senator from Texas would accord me a little reciprocity in return for the cooperation which I gave him the other night.

Mr. O'DANIEL. If I could see any point to be gained by not objecting to this proposal, I might consider giving to the Senator a little more cooperation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know that I am in agreement that the Senator would have any advantage in not objecting, or in objecting. I do not believe that there would be any advantage to be gained either way.

Mr. O'DANIEL. That is why I wanted to have the honor of objecting.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator regards that as a vital matter in his public life, I shall not withhold the honor from him.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I certainly do regard it as being vital, because I had no hope of winning the battle when I started in the fight.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has recruited some powerful influences since he spoke. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'DANIEL. Yes; but as I have said, I have been praying that this would come about, because I know the Lord moves in mysterious ways His wonders to perform.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, He has certainly performed wonderfully in this case. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'DANIEL. He certainly has. He has enabled the American people to move in a wonderful style.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, as I understand it, the Lord is not compelled to accept the partnership if He does not want to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I present the conference report on House bill 8496, the naval appropriation bill for 1947. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6496) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 13, 26, 57, 63, 65, 69, and 70.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 7, 8, 10, 14, 15, 17, 18, 20, 21, 23, 25, 27, 28, 33, 34, 46, 58, 60, and 61, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$13,844,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$70,966,300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$131,018,300; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$370,558,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,239,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$325,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$706,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,271,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$354,412,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,785,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$57,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$275,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,642,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$31,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,425,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$967,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,626,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$383,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,140,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,456,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,705,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,075,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,045,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,715,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,562,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert "September"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert "September"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 12, 19, 59, and 62.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I wish to propound a question to the Senator from Louisiana with regard to amendment No. 10 in the conference report. I refer to the amendment which was carried by 2 votes in the Senate. The bill as it passed the House required that no funds under the act should be available for the manufacturing, assembling, repairing, or overhauling of torpedoes at Forest Park, Ill.

Was a vote taken on the amendment in the conferenece? Was a separate vote taken?

Mr. OVERTON. The House conferees receded on the amendment. It was not necessary for the Senate conferees to take any vote.

Mr. GERRY. Was any request made that a vote be taken?

Mr. OVERTON. Not on the part of the Senate conferees, as I recall. The amendment was a Senate amendment, and the House receded.

Mr. GERRY. Yes, but there were Senators who were interested in the amendment, and I should like to know if any of the conferees asked that a vote be taken on the amendment.

Mr. OVERTON. No. There was no necessity of any vote being taken, so far as the conferees on the part of the Senate were concerned, because the amendment was a Senate amendment. The House receded.

Mr. GERRY. The House receded?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes.

Mr. GERRY. Was there any debate on the matter before the conferees on the part of the House receded?

Mr. OVERTON. Not in connection with this amendment. There was debate in connection with another amendment.

Mr. GERRY. Which amendment?

Mr. OVERTON. The amendment which was inserted namely, that $350,000 shall be available for placing the equipment at the naval torpedo station, Newport, R. I., in condition for operation. There was some talk about that amendment.

Mr. GERRY. There was no talk with reference to the Forand amendment?

Mr. OVERTON. No.

Mr. GERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Speaking on the same subject matter which was raised by the able Senator from Rhode Island, I note that there still remains in the naval appropriations bill the $350,000 appropriation for placing the equipment at the naval torpedo station, Newport, R. I., in condition for operation. Am I to understand that, by leaving that appropriation in the bill, it is still discretionary with the Navy, under the language of the bill, to open up the torpedo plant in Newport, R. I., or leave it just as it is?

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, that is a matter of interpretation. The senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] took the position that this language would, in his opinion, at least as I understood him, require the Navy Department to resume the manufacture of torpedoes at Newport. I took an opposite view. It is my interpretation that the matter is left entirely within the discretion of the Navy. The Navy may use the money for such purpose at Newport as the Navy Department determines to be necessary or proper. The Navy may continue research work there, or abandon it. The Navy may continue the testing of torpedoes there or abandon the testing of torpedoes. I may say further that the Navy may manufacture torpedoes there or not manufacture them.

Mr. LUCAS. I believe that the able Senator is correct in his interpretation. There is no definite time stated in the amendment with reference to when the $350,000 shall be spent.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his explanation.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, under the form of the report would it be possible to construct new hospitals?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes; it will be possible to construct new hospitals.

The PRESIDING OFFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report submitted by the Senator from Louisiana.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the message announcing the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments in disagreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 6496, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
June 29, 1946.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 59 to the bill (H. R. 6496) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment strike out "and";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: ": Provided further, That wherever there are architectural and engineering services in any State in which a project is located qualified tc do the work, such services shall be utilized"; and

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 120. The Secretary of the Navy may delegate to the commandants of the naval districts, for administration within their respective districts, his authority to authorize payment of the expenses of the transfer of household goods of employees, and of the costs of transportation of their immediate families on change from one official duty station to another."

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 12, 19, and 62.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, has the conference report been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been agreed to.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be recorded as against the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 4512. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 5244. An act to authorize the appointment of additional Foreign Service officers in the classified grades.

PROGRAM FOR MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on Monday next at 12 o'clock the two Houses of Congress are to assemble in joint session for memorial exercises in honor of the late President Roosevelt. The House has advised me that it wishes the Senate to be in the Chamber of the House at not later than 11:45 o'clock a. m. Therefore it will be necessary for us to assemble at 11 o'clock Monday, and when we have concluded the business of the Senate today it will be my purpose to move to adjourn until 11 o'clock Monday morning, so that we may have ample time to assemble and go to the House Chamber, in the meantime transacting any preliminary business in the morning hour prior to our departure for the House.

EXTENSION OF PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PEPPER. In view of objection having been made a few moments ago when the Senator from New York, with other Senators, proposed to introduce a joint resolution for the continuation of OPA, I wish to ask whether, if the Senator were now to tender the joint resolution and objection were made, and there should be an adjournment of the Senate terminating the legislative day of March 5, in which we now are, it would be possible for the joint resolution to be offered subsequent to the adjournment, if the Senate reconvened after the adjournment on the same calendar day in which we now are?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Paragraph 1 of rule XIV provides, under the heading "Bills, joint resolutions, and resolutions," that if objection is made, it cannot be done.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Chair tell me to what section of the rule he refers?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be found in the rules on page 18, rule XIV, paragraph 5 of which provides:

All resolutions shall lie over 1 day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am not speaking about how long a resolution shall lie over once it comes from a committee or once it is offered. I am speaking about the possibility of introducing the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Chair will corroborate the statement I am about to make. Under the rules, during the morning hour, no matter whether that morning hour takes place from 12 to 2 o'clock or at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, a bill or resolution may be offered, and if objection is interposed, it has to lie over for 1 day before it can be introduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. That has nothing to do with whether it has been reported from a committee. It means the mere offer of a resolution or bill during the morning hour. If objection is made, it must lie over for 24 hours, or to another day. As a rule that is not done, but that does not vitiate the rule, and if any Senator objected, it would have to go over.

For instance, if I should move that the Senate adjourn for 30 minutes this afternoon, and we met at the end of that period, we will say, and had a morning hour, and the Senator from New York offered his joint resolution and objection were made to its introduction, it would have to go over until Monday, at which time it could be introduced.

Therefore I have no purpose to have a brief recess or adjournment this afternoon, because nothing would be accomplished. It seems to me that there is no point in undertaking to do that, and I have no intention of doing it, because the joint resolution could not be introduced before Monday, at best. I have no doubt that when on Monday morning we reach the order, during the morning hour, for the introduction of bills, this joint resolution will be introduced and take its course before the Senate that other bills and resolutions take.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has correctly stated the rule. If a recess or adjournment should now be taken and the Senate reassembled in an hour, the same objection could be made to the introduction of the joint resolution that was made earlier today.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Chair will allow me to make a suggestion, I have before me section 1 of rule XIV, which no doubt the Chair had in mind in making the ruling he indicated. The section reads:

Whenever a bill or joint resolution shall be offered, its introduction shall, if objected to, be postponed for 1 day.

I make the parliamentary inquiry of the Chair as to whether that one day means a calendar day or a legislative day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It means a legislative day.

Mr. PEPPER. That is what I thought. We are presently in the legislative day of March 5, are we not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. If we were to adjourn, would not that end that legislative day, and if we were to reconvene, would we not reconvene in another legislative day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That much is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. If that be true, then, if the joint resolution had been tendered in the legislative day of March 5, and an adjournment terminated the legislative day of March 5, and brought about a new day, when we reconvened would it not be possible for the resolution at that time to be introduced, there being another legislative day after the day when it was first offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The tendering of it has not anything to do with it. Objection was made when it was tendered; therefore that is obliterated. The fact of taking an adjournment would not change the situation. The same objection could be made again.

Mr. PEPPER. If there were to be an adjournment terminating the legislative day of March 5, and the Senate were to reconvene, then that would put the morning hour back into effect, would it not, and the introduction of bills or resolutions would be permitted when that part of the morning hour was reached?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it would not be permitted if any objection were made, and if objection were made, though we were in a new legislative day, the resolution would have to lie over for another day. That is the rule, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator from New York offered his resolution today, and objection were made, he could not offer it during the following day and satisfy the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Today it is not offered under the rule at all.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand the parliamentary situation, in the event the joint resolution is offered, even on Monday, and an objection is made to its being offered, it would have to lie over until Tuesday before it could even be referred to the committee?

Mr. BARKLEY. It would have to lie over for one legislative day before it could be introduced and referred to a committee.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to make one more inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. That being true, if we were to have an adjournment and a reconvening of the Senate today, and then the joint resolution were offered, when the Senate reconvened on that new legislative day, then at least the resolution could be introduced on Monday instead of on Tuesday, could it not? We would save a day if we did that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would have to lie over a day, and, of course, its introduction could not be acted upon Monday.

Mr. PEPPER. But this is my question: We are now in the legislative day of March 5, and if we should adjourn in 15 minutes and then reconvene 15 minutes after we adjourned, that would constitute a new legislative day. Then there would be a morning hour, and if the Senator from New York should offer his joint resolution and objection were made, at least he could introduce it the next time the Senate convened.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He could offer it on Monday again.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; but as it is now, if we do not adjourn, if we go over until Monday and he offered it on Monday, and objection were made, he could not introduce it until Tuesday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would lie over 1 day.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the only way by which the joint resolution could be finally introduced today and referred to a committee, under the circumstances, would be for us to adjourn for a brief season and then return after the adjournment, at some hour to be fixed in the motion for adjournment, at which time we would have a morning hour, and the Chair would call for the introduction of bills and resolutions. If objection were made, then in order to get the resolution introduced at any time today, we would have to take another adjournment, and I doubt whether we could take two legislative adjournments in one calendar day. I should like to inquire of the Chair whether the Senate can adjourn twice in the same calendar day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian advises the Chair that that cannot be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that we could not by taking a second adjournment, bring about the possibility of the joint resolution being introduced today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that it would have to go over until Monday in any event.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that in all likelihood there will be no objection to its introduction Monday if the resolution is proffered, because no point could be gained by objection. I cannot guarantee that, of course, because I am not in the confidence of any Senator who might feel like objecting, but I see no point to be gained in a further objection on Monday to the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. If we should adjourn within a half hour and have a new legislative day, this resolution could then be offered. However, objection then would mean that it would go over until another legislative day. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senate should meet on Sunday, the resolution could be offered on Sunday and we could meet and consider it. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It could be read only one time. If any Senator objected it could not possibly be considered that day.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the rule requires that a bill or joint resolution having been finally introduced must be read on three different days, so if objection were made and it were finally introduced on Sunday, it would have to be read once on Sunday, and once on Monday, and it could not possibly be referred to the committee until Monday, and could not possibly be considered until Tuesday, even if the Senate met on Sunday; it could not be ready for consideration by that time, anyway.

Mr. MYERS. By following that procedure, however, Mr. President, we might be assured consideration of the joint resolution on Monday, while if there were objection made each day and three objections were made in all, it might be Thursday or Friday before consideration could be secured.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There would be no possible way of the Senate considering the joint resolution before the time stated.

PROVISION FOR SECONDARY MARKETS FOR FARM LOANS GUARANTEED BY VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, on page 9 of the calendar will be found Senate bill 2280, Calendar No. 1541. It is necessary that this bill be passed as soon as possible in order that the banks may sell their mortgages to the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation so as to enable them to use again their capital for financing loans guaranteed by the Veterans' Administration under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended. A bottleneck exists at the present time due to the fact that the small banks, especially, throughout the country are loaded up with mortgages which they cannot liquidate. They want to get rid of some of those loans, and the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation has the money and wants to lend it, due to the fact that recently the farmers have not desired to borrow as much money as they wanted to borrow a few years ago.

The Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation desires the law amended to permit the Corporation to purchase such loans, just as it has purchased other agricultural credit paper through the Federal Land Bank in the past. The bill was considered by the Banking and Currency Committee, which had hearings on it, and the committee approved the bill unanimously.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Is the Senator desiring consideration of Senate bill 2280, which is Calendar No. 1541?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say that that bill was unanimously agreed to by the Banking and Currency Committee and reported to the Senate by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE]. I am sure there can be no objection to its enactment.

Mr. WHITE. I have talked with certain members of the minority on the Banking and Currency Committee, and they have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I will say that as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee I hope the bill will be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2280) to amend the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act to provide a secondary market for farm loans made under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 (b) of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 1020d), is amended by inserting after the first sentence of said section the following new sentence: "The Corporation is further authorized to purchase from approved lenders, for cash, loans made under section 502 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 (Public Law 346, 78th Cong.), as amended, for such prices and upon such terms and conditions as the Board of Directors of the Corporation finds appropriate to effectuate the purposes of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944."

SIMPLIFICATION AND IMPROVEMENT OF CREDIT SERVICES TO FARMERS

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1353, House bill 5991, which I discussed yesterday afternoon. The House has passed one bill relating to the Farm Security Administration and the Senate passed another bill which is now in the House. In the bill now on the Senate calendar the Senate committee struck out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and substituted the Senate bill. Passage of this bill will enable the conferees to deal with the contents of both bills in an effort to reach some legislation in regard to this important service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. As I understand, this is a bill against which there has been some objection urged by two or three Senators on the minority side, but I also understand that they have yielded their opposition and are in approval with the Senator's efforts to have the bill passed at this time.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think there is some opposition to the bill, perhaps, Mr. President, but I have made a unanimous-consent request that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Georgia?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5991) to simplify and improve credit services to farmers and promote farm ownership by abolishing certain agricultural lending agencies and functions, by transferring assets to the Farmers' Home Corporation, by enlarging the powers of the Farmers' Home Corporation, by authorizing Government insurance of loans to farmers, by creating preferences for loans and insured mortgages to enable veterans to acquire farms, by providing additional specific authority and directions with respect to the liquidation of resettlement projects and rural rehabilitation projects for resettlement purposes, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That section 1 (a) of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, is hereby further amended by deleting the last word "farms", inserting a comma after the word "acquire", and adding the following: "repair, or improve family-type farms, to enlarge undersized farms, or to refinance indebtedness against undersized or underimproved farm units when loans are being made by the Secretary to enlarge or improve such units. Loans may also be made to assist borrowers under this title in making the repairs and improvements needed to adjust their farming operations to changing conditions."

Section 1 (b) of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"Any veterans (defined herein as a person who served in the land or naval forces of the United States after December 6, 1941, and who shall have been discharged or released therefrom under conditions other than dishonorable) who is found by the Secretary by reason of his ability and experience, including training as a vocational trainee, to be likely to carry out successfully undertakings required of him under a loan which may be made under this title shall be eligible for the benefits of this title to the same extent as if he were a farm tenant. Except with respect to veterans, only farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, and other individuals who obtain, or who recently obtained, the major portion of their income from farming operations shall be eligible to receive the benefits of this title. In making available the benefits of this title, the Secretary shall give preference to persons who are married, or who have dependent families, or, wherever practicable, to persons who are able to make an initial down payment, or who are owners of livestock and farm implements necessary successfully to carry on farming operations. No person shall be eligible who is not a citizen of the United States."

Section 1 (c) of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended to read as follows:

"No loan shall be made for the acquisition, improvement, or enlargement of any farm unless such farm will be of such size and type as the Secretary determines to be sufficient to constitute an efficient family-type farm-management unit and to enable a diligent farm family to carry on successful farming of a type which the Secretary deems can be successfully carried on in the locality in which the farm is situated: Provided, That loans may be made to veterans, as defined in section 1 (b) hereof, who have pensionable disabilities, to enable such veterans to acquire, enlarge, repair, or improve farm units of sufficient size to meet the farming capabilities of such veterans and afford them income which, together with their pensions, will enable them to meet living and operating expenses and the amounts due on their loans."

Section 3 (a) of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended to read as follows:

"Loans made under this title shall be in such amount (not in excess of the value of the farm as certified by the County Committee) as may be necessary to enable the borrower to acquire or enlarge the farm or to make the necessary repairs and improvements thereon, and shall be secured by a first mortgage or deed of trust on the farm. Loans may not be made for the acquisition or enlargement of farms which have a value, as required, enlarged, or improved, in excess of the average value of efficient family-type farm-management units, as determined by the Secretary, in the county, parish, or locality where the farm is located."

Section 4 of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended by designating the present language as subsection "(a)", changing the period at the end of such subsection to a colon, and adding the following: "Provided, That there may be distributed in any fiscal year to each State or Territory such amount not in excess of $100,000 as is determined by the Secretary to be necessary to finance loans in such State or Territory under this title.

"(b) Special appropriations for the benefit of veterans may be allocated equitably among the several States on the basis of need, as determined by the Secretary, without reference to the formulae set forth in subsection (a) hereof."

Section 6 of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended to read as follows:

"To carry out the provisions of this title, there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $50,000,000 for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, and such further sums as may be necessary for administrative expenses in carrying out this title during such fiscal year."

Title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is further amended by the insertion of a new section 7 immediately following section 6, to read:

"SEC. 7. Sums heretofore appropriated or otherwise made available hereunder shall be subject only to the limitations contained in this title, as amended."

Section 21 (a) of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"Grants may also be made to such eligible individuals, where necessary to aid in their rehabilitation, and to cooperative associations furnishing medical, dental, or hospital services to such individuals."

Section 21 (c) of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended to read:

"There are eligible for the benefits of this title (1) veterans, as defined in section 1 (b) hereof, who desire the practical guidance in farm and home operations supplied by the Farm Security Administration to its borrowers, and (2) farm owners, farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, and other individuals who obtain, or who recently obtained, the major portion of their income from farming operations, and who cannot obtain the necessary financing elsewhere at reasonable rates and terms."

Section 23 of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended to read:

"There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such amounts as the Congress shall from time to time determine to be necessary to enable the Secretary to carry out the purposes of this title."

Section 41 (g) of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma and adding the following immediately thereafter: "including the release from personal liability, without payment of further consideration, of—

"(1) borrowers who have transferred their farms to other approved applicants under agreements assuming the outstanding indebtedness to the Secretary under this title; and

"(2) borrowers who have transferred their farms to other approved applicants under agreements assuming that portion of their outstanding indebtedness to the Secretary which is equal to the earning capacity value of the farm at the time of the transfer, and borrowers whose farms have been acquired by the Secretary, in cases where the county committees certify and the Secretary determines that the borrowers have cooperated in good faith with the Secretary, have farmed in a workmanlike manner, used due diligence to maintain the security against loss, and otherwise fulfilled the covenants incident to their loans, to the best of their abilities."

Section 42 (b) of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is amended to read:

"Each member of the committee shall be allowed compensation at the rate of not to exceed $5 per day while engaged in the performance of duties under this act. The number of days per month that such members may be paid shall be determined and approved by the Secretary. In addition, they shall be allowed such amounts as the Secretary may prescribe for necessary traveling and subsistence expenses."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to better adapt the loan programs authorized by the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, to the needs of veterans and low-income farmers, and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will appoint the conferees later.

SATURDAY HOLIDAYS FOR DISTRICT BANKS AND BUILDING-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, there is on the calendar Docket No. 1531, Senate bill 2307, a bill to provide that every Saturday shall be a holiday for banks and building-and-loan associations in the District of Columbia. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. The bill has been approved by the Commissioners of the District; it has been approved by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, and it has also been approved by the District of Columbia Committee of the House. All the bill does is to provide that every Saturday shall be a holiday for banks and building-and-loan associations in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill applies only to the District of Columbia?

Mr. McCARRAN. It applies only to the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2307) to provide that every Saturday shall be a holiday for banks and building-and-loan associations in the District of Columbia, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fourth sentence of section 1389 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, as amended (D. C. Code, 1940 ed., sec. 28–616), is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, That every Saturday shall be a holiday in the District and not a business day for (1) every bank or banking institution having an office or banking house located within the District, (2) every Federal savings and loan association whose main office is in the District, and (3) every building association, building and loan association, or savings and loan association, incorporated or unincorporated, organized and operating under the laws of and having an office located within the District; and any act which would otherwise be required, authorized, or permitted to be performed on Saturday in the District at the office or banking house of, or by, any such bank or banking institution, Federal savings and loan association, building association, building and loan association, or savings and loan association, if Saturday were not a holiday, shall or may be so performed on the next succeeding business day, and no liability or loss of rights of any kind shall result from such delay."

DISTRIBUTION AND UTILIZATION OF HEALTH PERSONNEL, FACILITIES, AND RELATED SERVICES

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 244, which is on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 244) further increasing the limit of expenditures for a study and survey of the distribution and utilization of health personnel, facilities, and related services, submitted by Mr. PEPPER on March 22, 1946, and reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, with an amendment at the end of the resolution to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$40,000."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment in line 5 by striking out "$40,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "$5,000; be it further

"Resolved, That the authority heretofore granted by Senate Resolution 74, Seventy-eighth Congress, agreed to June 2, 1946, and as continued from time to time, shall be terminated August 1, 1946", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures under Senate Resolution 74, Seventy-eighth Congress (providing for study and survey of the distribution and utilization of health personnel, facilities, and related services), agreed to June 2, 1943, is hereby increased by $5,000; be it further

Resolved, That the authority heretofore granted by Senate Resolution 74, Seventy-eighth Congress, agreed to June 2, 1943, and as continued from time to time, shall be terminated August 1, 1946.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] a question. Is that the amendment on which we had an agreement?

Mr. PEPPER. That is the amendment which the Senator from Nebraska agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not hear the amendment read. It seems to me that the figure "$10,000" was read. Was that the original language?

Mr. PEPPER. No; the original language was "$40,000," but the amendment cuts the amount to $5,000. The amendment is in the exact language to which the Senator agreed.

Mr. WHERRY. Our understanding is now that the amount of money appropriated under the amendment is $5,000, and that the authority heretofore granted shall be terminated on August 1, 1946.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 1654. An act to provide for the registration and protection of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes;

H. R. 3517. An act to authorize the admission into the United States of persons of races indigenous to India, and persons of races indigenous to the Philippine Islands, to make them racially eligible for naturalization, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4512. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of pevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5244. An act to authorize the appointment of additional foreign service officers in the classified grades;

H. R. 5716. An act to amend the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended;

H. R. 6335. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6429. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6516. An act to increase the salaries of the Metropolitan Police, the United States Park Police, the White House Police, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

SUPREME COURT, TERRITORY OF HAWAII

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Louis LeBaron, of Hawaii, to be associate justice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Hon. Bunk Gardner, of Kentucky, to be United States district judge, Canal Zone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Hon. George B. Harris, of California, to be United States district judge, northern district of California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the nominations on the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the President be immediately notified of all nominations this day confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

AUTHORIZATION TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS AND RECEIVE COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I ask unanimous consent that the President of the Senate be authorized to sign enrolled bills during the adjournment of the Senate, and that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to receive communications from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADMISSION OF COLORED REPORTERS TO UNITED STATES SENATE AND HOUSE PRESS GALLERIES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks a resolution which was introduced and passed at the recent convention of the American Newspaper Guild, which pertains to representation in the press galleries of the House and Senate by newspaper men of the colored race.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SCRANTON, PA.—The weight of the 25,000 members of the American Newspaper Guild was thrown behind the fight of colored reporters for admission to the United States Senate and House press galleries here on Friday, June 21, when delegates to the thirteenth national ANG convention unanimously passed a resolution condemning racial discrimination in congressional press galleries.

Drafted by Lowell Lomax, reporter for the Washington Afro-American, and only Negro member of the 10-man District of Columbia delegation, the resolution calls on the ANG to protest this outrageous injustice to millions of American citizens.

Introduced at the convention by the Washington delegation of the ANG, the resolution reads as follows:

"Whereas the 13,000,000 Negro citizens of the United States have no duly accredited representative in the press galleries of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States, thus depriving these citizens of direct access to news of their Government, and whereas the Negro press, still in its infancy, has more than 1,000,000 subscribers who are entitled to correspondents cognizant of their particular interests and problems: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the American Newspaper Guild protest this outrageous injustice to millions of American citizens; be it further

"Resolved, That the International Executive Board of the ANG and all guild locals appeal to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and members of the Rules Committee of the Senate to take appropriate action so that correspondents of this great segment of the American press are welcomed to the press galleries of the House of Representatives and the Senate; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Guild officers be instructed to make a proper presentation of the action of this convention to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairman of the Rules Committee of the Senate and the chairman of the Standing Committee of Correspondents of the House and Senate Press Galleries."

After motion for adoption of the resolution was made on the floor of the convention, Lowell Lomax of the Washington delegation arose to denounce the discriminatory racial policies in the congressional press galleries and to urge the unanimous adoption of the motion.

Enthusiastic applause greeted Mr. Lomax at the conclusion of his speech on the press gallery resolution before the 250 delegates in the ballroom of Scranton's Hotel Casey.

Edward Talty, staff reporter on the Washington Times-Herald and Harry Read of the National CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination also spoke in support of the resolution.

Other members of the Washington delegation who endorsed the resolution were William Flythe, Times-Herald; Philip J. Austensen, Post reporter and president of the Washington Newspaper Guild.

Mrs. Mary Spargo, Washington Post; S. Paul Hoffman, Post; John McLeod, Daily News; Quenten Mott, Evening Star, and Milton Murray, International President of the American Newspaper Guild.

REORGANIZATION OF CONGRESS—EDITORIAL COMMENT

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the body of the RECORD several editorials which I hold in my hand, which are in support of the bill which seeks to reorganize the Congress.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Eugene (Oreg.) Register Guard of June 19, 1946]

TIME OUT FOR REPAIRS

The Senate, which has been trying rather desperately to cope with most of the Nation's pressing ills all at once, took time out the other day for a little self-improvement. The result was a bill reorganizing and streamlining congressional procedure which is excellent as far as it goes. And it goes quite a long way.

The senators discarded one or two mossy, cherished traditions, and it must have wrung some of the older, more conservative hearts to do so. But they voted themselves and their colleagues in the House a $5000-a-year salary increase by way of heart balm.

They also provided some generous social security which will permit them to retire with dignity and a pension after 62 years upon this earth, provided that six of those years were spent in Congress. To enlarge upon the wisdom of that move might lead to some unflattering examples. So perhaps it is enough to say that the pension appears to be a wise investment.

Among the reorganization bill's chief virtues are a reduction in the number of committees, expert assistance for appropriations committees, enough money to hire capable help for other administrative and research duties, and the registering of lobbyists.

A lot of Senators have enjoyed the power, prestige and importance of many committee memberships. But they really pay for their enjoyment in hard work. Besides answering their mail, having their ears bent by constituents, understanding all current legislation, being on the floor for debate and voting, they are also at present supposed to be experts on all the various, complex specialized subjects which they have to wrestle with in a half dozen committees to which they may belong.

It is just too much to do efficiently. Besides, the same general legislative subject may slop over into two or three different committees, all of which adds to the confusion, delay, and red tape.

As for appropriations, Congress has generally had to take an executive department's word for what it needed and why. The members have been busy enough without endeavoring to fathom the inner workings of outside agencies. Consequently, they have approved or slashed budgets through ignorance, caprice, benevolence and sheer cussedness. Provision for expert assistants will give the committees some boys on their side whom they can trust, and who presumably will know what they're talking about.

The new bill should ease group pressures not only through registration and financial accountability of lobbies, but by the establishment of majority and minority policy committees which would put major issues on a party basis. This last is something that Commerce Secretary Wallace suggested a while back, except that the Senate bill stipulates no reprisals if some rugged individualist refuses to hew to the party policy line.

In short, there is promise of better government in the Senate bill. If the House concurs, the result ought to win Congress a unanimous cheer. And that's a sweet sound that the legislators haven't heard in a long time.

[From the San Diego (Calif.) Union of June 20, 1946]

STEPPING UP PROCEDURE

After a long period of discussion about streamlining Congress, the Senate finally evolves a bill aimed to step up procedure and bring more modern methods into the legislative department of the Government. In addition to voting the Members of both Houses a $5,000-a-year salary increase and retirement pensions payable under certain conditions, the Senators provide for revision of committees, for financial and technical experts to assist Members and for the registration and financial accountability of lobbyists. The measure fairly well covers the purpose intended and in all probability will be concurred in by the lower House

There may be some criticism of the salary boost, in view of our existing debt and already heavy governmental outlays. However, anyone who has had much contact with Congressmen knows that there is little left at the end of a regular term after the expenses of living in Washington are paid. It is true that Members enjoy fairly liberal allowances and mileage; but it also is true that they have to carry a pretty heavy financial burden, including the legitimate expenses of primary and election campaigns. As to the pension plan, its propriety is questionable. If Members of Congress feel entitled to retirement pay, there is no reason why governors, mayors, and other public officials, including State legislators, should not feel likewise.

Those who enact the laws of the land and expend the money of taxpayers certainly should have the benefit of the best available research and information; many State legislatures already have such service at their disposal. Capable advisers in all probability could save the Treasury a vast amount of money when appropriations are under consideration.

One thing "streamlining" cannot do, of course, is to give Congressmen sufficient moral stamina to vote their convictions when playing politics is more expedient. If this could be done it would be a good thing for both Congress and the country.

[From the Lewiston (Idaho) Tribune of June 13, 1946]

CONGRESSIONAL FACE LIFTING

A Congress fit to serve in an atomic age rather than that of the Clipper ships seems to be in store for the future if the House of Representatives accords the Government reorganization bill the same reception it received in the Senate on Tuesday. The bill was introduced to streamline Congress, reduce it from an overweight and ponderous growth to a sylphlike and vibrant body able to react to the demands of Government.

Outstanding in the provisions of the bill is the reduction in the number of Senate committees from 33 to 15 in order to lighten the load on lawmakers. The growth of committees has long bothered many solons, for they have been forced to spend more time in attending to committee business than on the floor of the Senate. Many Senators are on as many as 10 standing committees, which results in their being unable to efficiently perform their duties on any one of them. It has necessitated sketchy preparation and inadequate knowledge of the business at hand. With the number of committees reduced, Senators can, if they will, devote more time to carrying on the functions of Government. It is to be hoped that this reduction in the number of committees will see more Senators in the Chamber when that body is in session. Oftentimes important legislation has been acted upon with only an indifferent handful present.

Also of value will be that section of the bill which permits committees to retain technical and administrative assistants. More than once, committeemen have been ignorant of the facts behind the legislation they were considering never having been briefed on the subject. Assistants who are well versed in whatever phase of government the committee handles can keep Congressmen informed of all the aspects involved. This will remove the embarrassing episodes where Congressmen are made an object of humor by a witness who knows more about the subject than they do.

A pay hike for Congressmen is advisable, and the bill provided that $5,000 a year would be added to the $10,000 already received. Congressmen have been receiving $10,000 since 1925, but the manner of living in Washington, D. C., which might mildly be described as sumptuous, finds many of them unable to make both ends meet. This was perfectly agreeable in the days when, for example, the Senate was known as a rich man's club, but today when many Congressmen's sole income is that received for Government service they should not be forced to pinch pennies.

The optional pension plan whereby Congressmen could contribute 5 percent of their wages for 5 years and serve 6 years in Congress in order to be eligible is in line with the growing conviction that all persons should be given aid when they are no longer able to work.

Altogether the reorganization plan will give Congressmen a needed face lifting, restoring youthful vigor and removing the heavy paunch caused by an overindulgence in committees. It has met with some opposition, mainly from those Senators who would lose both face and rank as committee heads if the committees were removed, but those Congressmen who have any regard for doing a good job will accept it, realizing that it is something that has been needed for a long time.—T. W. C.

[From the Salt Lake City (Utah) Tribune of June 20, 1946]

FOR REVISING CONGRESSIONAL PROCEDURE, MAKE LA FOLLETTE'S BILL A LAW

Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin, has done at least one service to Congress and the country for which he deserves to be remembered with gratitude. He conducted an investigation, submitted a report, introduced a bill and advocated its passage with such force and logic that a long-needed reform in legislative procedure in the direction of simplicity and efficiency should result.

He would keep pace with the growth of population and the attendant increase of public business, including problems and perplexities of which the founding fathers knew nothing and never lived long enough to learn about. Whether the overhauling contemplated comes through contrition or compulsion, the character and reputation of Congress will expand or dwindle accordingly.

The Senate has already approved the plan, the gentleman from the Badger State having secured a majority support before the southern Senators could organize a filibuster or effect a coalition. The vote was 49 to 16 in favor of the revision. As passed by the upper House, the bill embraces six major provisions, as follows:

1. Reduction of the number of Senate standing committees from 33 to 15, many memberships now being complimentary.

2. Increase in congressional salaries from $10,000 to $15,000 a year to enable men of moderate means to aspire and reject pressure.

3. Expansion of technical and administrative assistance to lawmakers. Each committee is to get four experts and each lawmaker a competent research aide.

4. Creation of a pension system which would allow a Member of Congress to contribute voluntarily to the Government's retirement fund.

5. Elimination of many routine tasks, such as a necessity for acting on each damage claim against the Government or on each proposal to build a bridge across a navigable stream.

6. Tighten fiscal controls by requiring Congress to go on record in favor of an increase in the national debt each time an estimated appropriation is above anticipated income for the next fiscal year.

As may be seen, this measure provides for simplification, expedition, and investigation of all legislation under consideration. Under the awkward system in vogue the legislator is often entangled in a complexity of committees, delayed in research or by numerous meetings, interfering with sessions which should be attended. Often there are not more than a half dozen Senators or a score of Representatives present when a bill is being discussed.

By supplying the several committees with experts to render technical and administrative assistance to 15 or 20 committeemen together, the saving in time would be enormous and opportunities for loafing would be minimized. The apparent obligation to press personal damage bills, to seek appropriations for the private convenience of constituents, to solicit Federal financial assistance while condemning bureaucracy, to fill the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with unspoken speeches, would no longer seem essential to official continuance of service.

Requiring Members of both Houses to answer the roll call, when appropriations are asked in excess of the estimated income for the following fiscal year, is desirable for two reasons: It will discourage indifference to the national debt and it will enable taxpayers to read the records of those who represent them. No frank and fair-minded legislator could object to that.

While the bill that passed the Senate omits reference to some important defects in the present system that need to be rectified, such as the selection of committee chairmen and personnel, as well as the enfeebling recognition of seniority rather than capability, there is enough proposed from which to make a start.

Representative ADOLPH J. SABATH, of Illinois, chairman of the House Rules Committee in charge of the bill, has asserted that he expects to take his time in considering its provisions. As he is past 80 years of age, he cannot expect to delay action indefinitely.

CITIZENSHIP—LETTER FROM ELIZABETH HARGRAVE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks an exceedingly interesting letter which I received from a young lady in the eighth grade of one of the Portland, Oreg., public schools, which illustrates, I think, and very interestingly, the breadth of educational work that is going on in our public schools. The letter deals with the subject of citizenship, and there is attached to it a statement of what the young eighth graders consider to be the "10 essentials of a really good American." I wish to be associated with the conclusions of those young citizens.

There being no objection, the letter and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PORTLAND PUBLIC SCHOOLS,
Portland, Oreg., April 17, 1946.

WAYNE L. MORSE,
United States Senator,
Eugene, Oreg.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: Some extremely serious questions have arisen in our eighth-grade class discussion. You see, we have been studying a unit of work which teaches us better understanding of people of different races, nationalities, and religious faiths.

We have discovered that all human beings are very much alike. Difference in skin color is caused only by two chemicals just under the surface of the skin, melanin and carotene. All blood plasma is exactly the same. There is no such thing as Irish blood, Jewish blood, Negro blood, etc. The structure of the brain and central nervous system is exactly the same in all people. There is no Jewish race; it is the Jewish religion. Environment is what causes people to seem different.

We boys and girls have written what we think are 10 essentials of a really good American. I am enclosing a copy for you. We know that lots of people are prejudiced against people of other races and religious faiths because they do not know enough about them. We know many people do not feel as we do. We know all people are created equal and we think they should all have the same opportunities.

In our list of essentials of a really good American it is Nos. 3, 4, 5 that some people would not believe. That is our serious question. We wonder whether most people would think we were right in including them in our list. Each of us (there are 62 in our class) is writing to a different person somewhere in the United States to get opinions.

What is your opinion of the importance of attitudes of people toward those of different races, nationality backgrounds, and religious faiths as an essential qualification of a really good American?

We have a chart in our room with my name and your name on it. After it is a blue star which shows I sent the letter and a gold star will show I received an answer from you.

Please address me care of my homeroom teacher, Miss Ellen Dalquist. I am very grateful to you.

Sincerely yours,

ELIZABETH HARGRAVE.

GLEKCOE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL, PORTLAND, OREG., SPRING TERM, 1945–46

The following were composed by 8B students after a study of intergroup understandings and a study of the rights guaranteed by the United States Constitution:

"TEN ESSENTIALS OF A REALLY GOOD AMERICAN

"1. A really good American shows reverence and love for God.

"2. A really good American is not unduly influenced by others but states his honest opinion according to what he thinks is right.

"3. A really good American does not dislike other Americans because of their race, nationality background, or religious faith.

"4. A really good American shows courtesy and respect toward all people regardless of race, nationality background, or religious faith.

"5. A really good American does everything possible to help his fellow Americans have equal opportunities to use their constitutional rights.

"6. A really good American is honest and trustworthy in all his dealings.

"7. A really good American, when saluting the flag, salutes it with full appreciation of the words he or she is speaking.

"8. A really good American is loyal to his country and his fellow men at all times.

"9. A really good American upholds and obeys the laws that concern him.

"10. A really good American uses his opportunities to the best advantage and does his work well to the best of his ability."

PARTICIPATION BY UNITED STATES IN THE UNITED NATIONS ORGANIZATION—STATEMENT BY WOMEN'S ACTION COMMITTEE FOR LASTING PEACE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a statement issued by the Women's Action Committee for Lasting Peace. This statement is in reply to a statement already appearing in the RECORD, which was inserted in the RECORD by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER].

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Women's Action Committee for Lasting Peace has one purpose; it is, to unite American women to work for full participation by the United States in the United Nations organization in order to build a world of peace and justice under law.

Its headquarters are in New York City but it is a national organization with State chairmen and congressional district chairmen in practically every State in the Union. It has over 20,000 members and the active cooperation of more than a dozen national women's organizations whose names appear on the stationery. It is the only women's organization working actively and exclusively for world peace through the United Nations organization. It supports measures in Congress aimed to achieve this result.

To secure its objective of furthering the United Nations organization and United States cooperation in it, the Women's Action Committee is concerned that Members of Congress shall be internationally minded. It keeps a record of the votes of Senators and Congressmen on international issues and it sends, on request, the records of these votes to its members. Seven Senators, who are running for reelection this fall, have consistently opposed international cooperation.

The Chicago Daily Tribune, May 1, 1946, attacked the Women's Action Committee in an editorial headed "Snobbery." The paper accused the organization of being made up of eastern internationalists, consistent New Dealers, with knee-bending subservience to the empire, and viewing Stalin with worshipful regard. Said the Chicago Tribune, "This meddling organization follows the international line. It is difficult to believe that any middle westerners will fall victim to their snobbery."

The Senator from North Dakota, who is coming up for reelection, and who was one of two Senators who the Women's Action Committee is remembering voted against the United States' ratification of the United Nations Charter, read the editorial from the Tribune into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 3. He apparently did not know that this eastern organization has members in 13 of the North Dakota communities as well as in practically all congressional districts of the country.

It is only fair that a statement concerning the work of the Women's Action Committee for Lasting Peace should be inserted in the same columns.

ADMINISTRATION OF MILITARY JUSTICE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two articles and an editorial on the court-martial problem. One is entitled "Justice on a Drumhead," and is written by Maurice Rosenblatt. The second is an editorial entitled "Army Courts Martial," published in the San Francisco Chronicle of April 23, 1946; and the third is an article entitled "Revise Courts Martial," published in the Washington Post of January 1, 1946.

There being no objection, the articles and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Nation magazine of April 27, 1946]

JUSTICE ON A DRUMHEAD

(By Maurice Rosenblatt)

A colonel sits stiffly before the American flag. To his right and left, tapering in rank, are half a dozen junior officers, immobility and coldness masking their faces. This is a general court martial. The trial judge advocate, whose sole duty in the Army is to prosecute, sits on one side acting both as prosecutor and adviser to the court. Opposite is the defense counsel, who has been hastily called from his duties as supply officer. The defendant—call him Sergeant Smith—is marched in under guard. He is bewildered by the rank and isn't sure whether he should salute or sit down. He has seen his attorney only once before, for a few minutes.

Charges are read, and the defense counsel waives the right to challenge any member of the court. A witness identifies Smith and is handed a typewritten sheet from which he reads his testimony. A judge asks if Smith was sober when the witness saw him in the jeep. Two other witnesses read statements. The judge advocate says that Smith is clearly guilty.

While the court deliberates he stands outside under guard. Things happened so fast he missed the moment when he was going to tell the court all about the jeep; that he'd just been released from the hospital and wanted to pick up ice for a party at the casual camp. He was going to tell about getting no mail for 3 months while his division pushed the enemy back several hundred miles; about being wounded. Carrying an automatic rifle made him a special target, though these people wouldn't understand that. All he wants is to get back to his outfit and not let his family know he was court martialed. He goes over the unuttered story.

Meanwhile the court reaches its decision. The junior officer votes first so that he will not be swayed by the judgment of his senior. It is a scrupulous provision, one of those punctilios of Army law which could have meaning if the substance of the whole procedure were fair. Finally Smith faces the judges. He has been found guilty of unlawfully using Government property. Before fixing sentence the court examines his record; it is clean, but the president of the court has privately reminded the others that the commanding general is tired of vehicle thefts, and that these fellows back from the front must realize they are still in the Army.

So Smith hears that he is to be broken to private, forfeit all pay and allowances, including months of combat pay which never caught up with him, be confined at hard labor for 2 years, and be dishonorably discharged. The whole trial took scarcely longer than a traffic case in night court.

Eight months after VJ-day more than 33,500 American soldiers are still confined in army prisons and rehabilitation centers. How did they get there?

Upon entering the army the soldier surrenders his constitutional rights and becomes subject to a code set forth in the Army's Manual for Courts Martial. This defines three types of court. The summary court tries minor violations and may fine or restrict an enlisted man. The special court, a board of three officers, decides cases of a more serious nature; these are presented by the trial judge advocate, and the defendant is entitled to counsel. The highest tribunal, the general court martial, has power to try officers as well as enlisted men. It can administer fines, sentence to hard labor and dishonorable discharge, and even impose the death penalty. The defendant may choose his own counsel, but few soldiers know that they may retain a civilian lawyer if they desire, and guardhouses provide no facilities for inmates to make arrangements for their defense. In practice the defense counsel is usually inexperienced and sometimes without legal training.

On paper Army justice is severe but fair. Actually it is frequently unfair and even brutal, less a system of justice than an arbitrary disciplinary code. Instead of preserving order and curbing crime it serves too frequently as an instrument of oppression by which officers fortify low-caliber leadership. Army justice has become the club which polices the caste system, punishing petty misconduct while ignoring the grossest malefaction. It creates bitterness, disillusionment, and helpless resentment among citizen-soldiers.

An ex-GI can talk about Army justice for hours, drawing on an inexhaustible stock of stories. Most of the cases cited here came to my notice during the 3 years I was attached to the Army's Department of Criminal Investigation. Army men who worked in the Judge Advocate or Provost Marshal section can match these with examples far more grim and lurid.

The first complaint against Army justice is that it operates on a double standard. Theoretically both officers and men are subject to the Articles of War listed in the Manual; in practice Army justice is administered only by officers and applied almost exclusively to enlisted men. In 1940 the Army conducted 16,391 courts martial; 17 of the men tried were officers. Only commissioned officers may serve on the court. Consequently the soldier is not tried by his equals but by representatives of a superior class whose status is maintained by disciplining the ranks. And a large proportion of trials arise from conflicts between officers and men.

An officer may violate an Article of War flagrantly and publicly, and not be punished. During the war a married lieutenant stationed at an east-coast town dated an 18-year-old girl. As he was taking her home he dragged her into an alley and tried to rape her. During the struggle the girl's arm was broken. The lieutenant had her arm set at the Army hospital, and the case was reported to military authorities. When questioned, the lieutenant admitted his part in the affair but laughed it all off, saying the girl was notoriously loose. The captain conducting the inquiry, a good friend of the lieutenant's, dropped the matter with the comment that lots of people broke their arms in winter falling on ice.

A contrast to the case of the laughing lieutenant is offered by that of the two enlisted men who picked up a WAC hitch-hiker in New Guinea. The woman spent several hours with the soldiers and later reported to the MP's that her watch had been stolen. Some two hours after reporting the theft, she casually remarked that she had also been raped. The two soldiers readily admitted having had relations with the woman but said she had been completely agreeable. At the trial no medical testimony was introduced to show physical evidence of rape. The court had only the word of the woman. But the two soldiers were sentenced to more than 10 years' hard labor. The character of the woman was not discussed at the trial, although she was awaiting return to the States because of mental incompetence.

An accused officer is rarely confined to a guardhouse before his trial. He can collect his evidence and muster his witnesses. If he is found guilty, the double standard still operates—"the higher the rank the milder the penalty." A reprimand to an officer is regarded as equivalent to a prison sentence for an enlisted man. Even traffic violations were treated differently during the war. At a camp where noncoms caught speeding were reduced to private and compelled to dig graves, officers were fined and reprimanded.

Combat soldiers who had engaged the enemy and survived by their own wits and intiative clashed with the garrison mentally behind the lines. At the front the use of vehicles, equipment, and food was dictated by necessity, and small heed was paid to vouchers or requisitions. When combat soldiers returned to a rear base, they wanted to blow off steam and have a good time—which generally involved liquor and a vehicle. Often when they were apprehended they were still suffering from combat fatigue, but the courts martial were likely to ignore that fact and to convict these men along with barracks thieves and deserters.

An over-conscientious soldier can get into considerable trouble inasmuch as the preservation of authority is of greater concern to the court than the merits of the case. A private at Fort Custer, Mich., while on "k. p." was directed by the mess sergeant to take meat which had been thrown into the garbage and place it in the refrigerator. The private refused because the meat was dirty. Two days later he was court-martialed for refusing to obey a lawful order. The only factor which the court considered was that the sergeant had issued an order which the private failed to obey. He was sentenced to 3 months' hard labor.

There is no habeas corpus in the Army. The Articles of War direct that no one may be unduly detained without being properly charged and tried, but the soldier, jailed before trial, has no way of enforcing his rights. Public opinion, the watchdog of civilian justice, plays virtually no part in the Army's system.

A Pennsylvania soldier, the father of eight, went home on furlough and overstayed his leave a week to be with his sick wife. On his way back to camp he was picked up in New Jersey. His records failed to arrive, and his trial was therefore put off. He told his story to six chaplains and inspectors without results. After he had been kept in confinement 3 months the allotment to his family was cut off on the ground that he was not earning his pay while in the guardhouse. That night he swallowed a disinfectant poison but was rushed to a hospital, where a stomach pump saved his life. A few lines in his home-town paper about the attempted suicide worked wonders. He was brought to trial immediately and received a full acquittal, followed in a few weeks by an honorable discharge.

Who was to blame? Nobody wanted to take the responsibility for releasing the soldier under a system set up to confine, try, and convict. The safeguards of Anglo-Saxon justice were missing.

Guardhouse censorship makes it impossible for a prisoner to tell the outside world about mistreatment or violations of regulations by prison officers. In many though not all Army prisons, at home and abroad, a sadistic streak developed in the jailors. Men have been beaten and tortured, and fatalities have resulted from guardhouse brutality. The most notorious camp, at Lichfield, England, is currently having its crimson history of flogging and murder spread before the public in the testimony given at the trial of nine guards and two officers accused of cruelty. Yet the Lichfield commandant, Colonel Killian, was recommended for promotion by the War Department. Public protest led, instead, to his being charged with responsibility for the cruel treatment of prisoners—treatment which is alleged to have included beatings with rifle butts and rawhide.

Apologists for the Army's court-martial record point out that there are practically no instances of an innocent man being convicted or framed. That is true, but one must remember that Army regulations are so voluminous and contradictory that every officer and man in the service could be proved a transgressor if the authorities desired to press a charge. Too much depends upon the caprice of superior officers. Stealing a jeep might rate only a 6 months' sentence at one camp; at another it might bring 3 years and a dishonorable discharge.

At present the House Military Affairs Committee and an Army commission are investigating the court-martial system. Nothing will be accomplished, however, if they recommend only superficial reforms instead of basic changes. Any effort to revamp military justice runs head on against the congealed caste system, the officers' code, the inflexability of the military mind, and the sacred traditions of the service. But the fact remains that now is the time to obtain the needed changes, while the Army is courting public favor for appropriations and recruits. Veterans and taxpayers can demand certain reforms:

1. The protection of habeas corpus must be extended to the Army.

2. Military courts should include enlisted men as well as officers among the judges, in the trials of both officers and enlisted men.

3. The legal section of the Army, the Judge Advocate General's Department, should not be under the control of commanders of troops but should be made directly answerable to the Secretary of War, a civilian. This would end the present practice of using the legal powers of the Army as an administrative weapon to enforce personal policies. A civilian board of review should examine all court-martial sentences, and periodically inspect guardhouses and rehabilitation centers.

4. The Judge Advocate section, which today functions as a prosecutor's office, should provide also for defense. Access to civilian attorneys, now provided for in theory, should be facilitated.

5. The Courts Martial Manual should be revised; penalties for specific offenses should be standardized and a distinction made between breaches of Army discipline and criminal offenses. Also, a policy should be worked out regarding psychiatric evidence and medical treatment of sexual abnormals.

6. Officers in the Judge Advocate and Provost Marshal sections who have shown bias, cruelty, or negligence should be prosecuted.

7. Court-martial proceedings are not secret. If the press made a point of reporting courts martial like civil courts, the spotlight of publicity would do more than anything else to remedy current abuses.

Above all, the thousands of American soldiers still confined in Army guardhouses and Federal penitentiaries are entitled to a prompt review of their cases. A distinction should be made between those who committed actual crimes and those who overstepped one of the innumerable taboos and happened to be caught.

Remember, the man in uniform can do nothing about all this. It is up to veterans and civilians to right the wrongs of the past and set up a court-martial system which will be the cornerstone of a democratic army.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle of April 23, 1946]

ARMY COURTS MARTIAL

On the strength of statistics showing that Army courts condemned 142 men to death during the war while there were no executions in the Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, Congressman J. LEROY JOHNSON of California appears justified in asking what's wrong with the Army court-martial system. Granting that the Army had twice the numerical strength of the naval services, and that opportunity for the two major types of capital crimes—murder and rape—was greater among the ground forces, these factors do not begin to explain the score of 142 of 0.

JOHNSON charges that the Army used its court-martial system to enforce discipline, rather than to administer impartial justice. The charge is serious enough to warrant the fullest investigation, and the investigation should have the whole-hearted support of the Army.

Wartime necessitates a considerable submergence of the individual rights for the welfare of the whole Nation, and several hundred thousand Americans willingly gave their lives on that basis. But it is doubtful if any young man perceived it his duty to face a firing squad of his own comrades for a crime which otherwise would not carry the death penalty so he might serve as an example to the service at large. That sort of stringency, far from promoting justice, would only kindle a deep and ominous resentment as an example of the kind of ruthless inhumanity we were trying to abolish from the earth.

If JOHNSON's charge is groundless the Army should refute it with all the vigor at its command. If the charge has basis in fact, the Army can serve its own best interests by overhauling its system of justice.

[From the Washington Post of January 1, 1946]

REVISE COURTS MARTIAL—COMMUNICATION POINTS UP DEFECTS

It is proper, I think, to point out at this time the existence of a type of duress practiced upon the courts in the Army court-martial system and, I assume, also existing in the Navy. Of course, any type of duress is prohibited by the manual for courts martial, but a method of exerting it upon a sworn court is nevertheless being practiced every day.

Courts are appointed by the commanding officer or general. The same officer refers charges for trial after he has examined them. Because of the fact that a report of an investigating officer is before him at the time of trial, too often commanding officers reach stern conclusions as to the guilt or innocence of the accused long before the trial is held. After the trial the same commanding officer must review and approve or disapprove the findings of the court and the sentence. To assist him in this work there is provided a staff judge advocate who is the judicial officer of the command.

One personal experience of the undersigned should be sufficient to prove the immediate need for a revamping of the entire system of courts martial and for reenactment of certain of the Articles of War.

The undersigned represented a staff sergeant in a general court martial in the military district of Washington about 2 years ago. It was a case in which the accused had been held without charges for a long period of time and had been held without trial for an even longer period, notwithstanding the fact that the Articles of War require that where a man is in arrest or confinement immediate steps will be taken to try him or he will be released.

Immediately after having been requested to act as defense counsel for the accused, the undersigned contacted the staff judge advocate of the military district of Washington in order to obtain a copy of the order appointing the court and certain necessary papers. In a discussion the judge advocate said to me the following: "Now, Ball, you have not got a chance in this case, and you might as well plead this man guilty and I will be satisfied with a sentence of 1 year."

This statement, mind you, was made by the highest judicial officer of the command, whose duty it was to review the record of the case at the trial from the standpoint of legality, competency, and sufficiency of evidence and the ever-present requirement of fair trial. The undersigned advised this officer quite frankly that he could abide by no such advice and that he considered it his duty to represent the man to the best of his ability on every issue at the trial.

The case was tried, a motion to release the accused on the ground that the Articles of War had not been complied with in that he had been held for months without trial was overruled, and the accused was sentenced to be reduced to the grade of private and to forfeit a certain amount of his pay per month for 6 months. You will note that the court did not sentence him to any confinement.

Upon review of this case the order, prepared by the staff judge advocate heretofore mentioned and issued by the commanding general of the military district of Washington included the following statement: "The sentence though grossly inadequate will be duly executed." This sentence in the order is an example of the type of duress exercised every day in court-martial procedure. The only possible effect of that statement was to admonish the court for not imposing a more severe punishment upon the accused.

It is such admonishment by the commanding officer of each member of the court in a published order which amounts to nothing short of duress upon the court and as a matter of fact in most cases results in more severe punishment in the next case heard by the court of equal guilt and circumstances.

Any system which allows courts, sworn to decide the case to their best ability according to the law and the evidence produced before them, to be ridiculed for their honest efforts is so contrary to the concept of democratic government which we in America have long since learned to love and appreciate that its very existence in its present state should be short lived and in its place should be a system of justice for each service separate and apart from command functions.

Only through the correction of the system, in order that the actual intent of Congress that every man should be given a fair and impartial trial be carried out, can real justice be provided. Otherwise the shocking injustices arising from courts martial in the past few years will continue to be a mockery of genuine judicial process.

FRANK J. BALL, JR.,
Major, AUP, Inactive.

ARLINGTON, VA., December 26.

Mr. MORSE. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a statement on naval and military justice by Arthur J. Fruend, presiding at a session of the section of criminal law of the American Bar Association at Cincinnati, Ohio, on December 19, 1945.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The subject of our discussion this afternoon is Naval and Military Justice. It will be treated by two distinguished members of our armed forces and followed by a discussion of experts. It is our hope that the discussion period will also have the participation of all persons here interested.

While a great variety of subjects have been studied at this American Bar Association meeting, it is likely that none is of greater importance or of greater public interest than the one assigned to us. The system of naval and military justice is under severe public scrutiny. Fire at our systems of courts martial has been directed by returning veterans, by our press, and in the Halls of Congress. It is obvious that this should be so.

The Articles of War and our courts martial procedure are deeply rooted in our Military and Naval Establishments. The summary and direct methods, while efficient in a mechanical sense, have but small comparison to the administration of justice administered in our civilian criminal courts. It is to be expected that contrasts should be observed by returning veterans and the parents and friends of men convicted by courts martial.

Complaint is made that officers untrained in the determination of facts and the fixing of punishment constitute the personnel of courts martial; that members of the court are frequently under domination of their superior officers; that untrained persons are often assigned to try and defend the accused and that defense counsel are themselves often under the fear of reprisal by a superior officer if complete zeal is given in such defense; that punishment inflicted is in a large number of instances by civilian or humanitarian standards out of all proportion to the nature of the offense or the character of the offender.

On the other hand, a naval or military force cannot perform its functions without the highest standards of discipline. It is said that the present system of courts martial is essential to the maintenance of that discipline.

It is not for me as chairman to discuss the merits of this extremely important controversy. But it is my hope that a frank and sincere consideration of the problem be given. We should, like Janus, look backward and forward. Looking backward, if injustices have been done, we should use our efforts to correct them. If the system is good, it can withstand the most careful and meticulous scrutiny. If the system needs to be changed, we should advise what changes are necessary. And to look forward, we should realize that we are going to have a large Naval and Military Establishment in this country for years to come. Many believe that we will have compulsory peacetime military service. If that be so, then it is all the more important that our system of naval and military justice to regulate the lives of hundreds of thousands of young men who will constitute a large part of our Naval and Military Establishment, be governed by as perfect a system of justice as the mind and heart of man can devise.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, at this late hour I do not intend to make an extended statement on the subject of military justice; but before the Senate adjourns for the summer I intend to make further remarks upon it.

At this time I wish to point out that many of us who have been interested in the two court-martial resolutions which have been pending for many months in the Senate believe that it would be very unfortunate for the Senate to adjourn without passing one of the resolutions calling for a Senate investigation of the court-martial systems of the Army and Navy. I think we have been exceedingly patient. The so-called McCarran resolution was submitted some months ago, subsequent to the resolution which I submitted on the same subject.

Suffice it to say at this time that I do not think we have any right, as representatives of the people of the United States, to adjourn for a long recess—supposedly until next January—and permit many so-called military and naval prisoners to languish in military and naval prisons as the result of the miscarriage of military justice during this war. It seems to me that we have a duty to put a Senate committee to work during the summer and next fall, to make a thorough investigation and survey of military and naval justice.

I wish to say to the Secretary of War, Mr. Patterson, that he does not impress me one iota by his defenses recently published in the press in regard to military justice. I am not at all impressed by the attempts on the part of the War Department and the Navy Department to investigate themselves. I repeat what I have previously said. It is the clear public duty of Members of the Senate to pass either the McCarran resolution or the Morse resolution, calling for an investigation of military and naval justice. I do not know how much longer we are going to tolerate the gross injustices which developed during the war on the part of the War Department and the Navy Department, with huge numbers of our men in the service suffering from such injustices.

I close by repeating what I previously stated. Let Mr. Patterson, the Secretary of War, produce a rebuttal to it. I have yet to talk with a single lawyer who served in the armed forces of the United States Army or Navy who had not said to me that it is of the utmost importance, in the name of justice, that either the McCarran resolution or the Morse resolution be passed by the Senate.

Thus once again I raise my voice on the floor of the Senate. I ask the Senate to recognize the importance of these pending resolutions and that we serve notice on the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War by action, demonstrated by a majority vote for one of the resolutions, that the Senate intends to analyze from top to bottom the military justice practices of the Army and Navy.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I wish to say that the Mead committee has, in a small way, looked into the question of military justice and court martial. The question arose in connection with an investigation in Hawaii, and one in Puerto Rico. I am of the opinion that a thorough investigation of the entire procedure of military justice during the war should be made. I feel that the problem calls for study. I believe that the Senate is the proper body to look into this question. Enough was disclosed during the two investigations to which I have referred to indicate that this subject is important in connection with our national defense. I believe that an overall, thorough investigation of military justice during the war should be made.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Michigan for the support which he is giving me in this fight. I think the RECORD will show that I have yet to raise my voice in connection with this matter without having the support of the Senator from Michigan, as well as the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] who, as Members of this body know, is himself a veteran of this war and is thoroughly familiar with the importance of the fight which I am trying to make in my demands for an investigation.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 1, 1946, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1946

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou infinite spirit of life, Thou hast not set a limit to the richness of love, to the power of self-sacrifice, nor to the sublimity of purity. O teach us the beauty and the simplicity of the Christian life apart from creeds and dogmas, that in faith we may walk with Thee, happy in the assurance of a wise fellowship of service. While days are difficult and discipline is hard, do Thou open our minds for the reception of Thy guiding wisdom and direct us with Thy nourishment. In affliction shield us, endowed with Thy plenteous gifts, that our endeavors may be in harmony with Thy will and our strength be able to bear it. Do Thou bless and enrich the church universal, and let the glory of the Lord be established in the souls of all the nations. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 6516. An act to increase the salaries of the Metropolitan Police, the United States Park Police, the White House Police, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 6682. An act to amend sections 81, 82, and 83, and to repeal section 84 of chapter IX of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5933. An act to authorize and direct the Board of Education of the District of Columbia to establish and operate in the public schools and other suitable locations a system of nurseries and nursery schools for day care of school-age and under-school-age children, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2234. An act to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5990) entitled "An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71 to the foregoing bill.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment numbered 1 to said bill, disagreed to by the House, asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. HOEY, Mr. BALL, Mr. WILLIS, and Mr. FERGUSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6428. An act making appropriations for the Coast Guard, Treasury Department, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. GREEN, Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. WHITE, Mr. GURNEY, and Mr. REED conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6837. An act making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. GURNEY, Mr. BROOKS, and Mr. REED to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1654) entitled "An act to provide for the registration and protection of trademarks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes."

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6496) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement on the part of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6496) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 13, 26, 57, 63, 65, 69, and 70.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 7, 8, 10, 14, 15, 17, 18, 20, 21, 23, 25, 27, 28, 33, 34, 46, 58, 60, and 61, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$13,844,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and at the end of the matter so restored insert the following: "or who have not been commissioned in the line of the Navy more than five years prior to the commencement of such educational courses or postgraduate instruction"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$70,966,300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$131,018,300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$370,558,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,239,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$325,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$706,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,271,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$354,412,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,785,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$57,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$275,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,642,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$31,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,425,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$967,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,626,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6496) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, submit the following report in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

No. 2: Appropriates $13,844,000 for "Miscellaneous expenses" instead of $13,205,000 as proposed by the House and $14,483,000 as provided by the Senate.

No. 3: Makes $15,000 of the appropriation for contingencies of the Navy immediately available as proposed by the Senate.

No. 4: Amends language inserted by the House and stricken out by the Senate preventing the use of the appropriation "Instruction" for certain postgraduate instruction of officers. The amended language will permit line officers of the Navy to qualify for staff duties provided they make the election to become staff officers within 5 years after their commissioning in the line.

No. 5: Adopts Senate amendment permitting the Navy to charter and hire vessels for auxiliary purposes.

No. 6: Appropriates $443,750,000 for "Maintenance, Bureau of Ships," as proposed by the House instead of $446,750,000 as provided by the Senate. The Senate increase of $3,000,000 was for the purpose of producing training devices. It is the intention of the conferees that the appropriation for "Research, Navy," may be available for the production of these devices.

No. 7: Adopts language inserted by the Senate making the appropriation for the Bureau of Ordnance available for research.

No. 8: Adopts language inserted by the Senate naming the five ordnance stations where schools may be conducted with Government funds.

No. 9: Appropriates $246,390,000 as proposed by the House for "Ordnance and Ordnance stores, Navy," instead of $247,990,000 as provided by the Senate. The Senate increase was for the purpose of producing training devices. It is the intention of the conferees that the appropriation for "Research, Navy," may be available for the production of these devices. The amendment, as agreed to, also makes $350,000 of this appropriation available for placing the equipment at the naval torpedo station, Newport, R. I., in condition for operation.

No. 10: Strikes out language inserted by the House and deleted by the Senate preventing the use of the appropriation for the Bureau of Ordnance to be used for the manufacture, assembly, repair, or overhaul of torpedoes at the naval ordnance plant, Forest Park, Ill.

No. 11: Places a limitation on transfers from the naval stock fund so as to prevent the fund from being reduced below $50,000,000 instead of $100,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. No limitation was carried respecting these transfers as the bill passed the House.

No. 13: Eliminates a Senate proposal to make the appropriation for the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery available for the purchase of uniforms for guards at the Naval Hospital Medical Center in Bethesda, Md.

No. 14: Adopts the term "naval shipyards" as proposed by the Senate, instead of "navy yards" as proposed by the House.

No. 15: Clarifying amendment.

No. 16: Appropriates $70,966,300 for naval public works within the United States instead of $83,000,000 as proposed by the House and $35,966,300 as provided by the Senate.

No. 17: Exempts from the operations of the limitation on the amount of the appropriation for public works inside the United States that may be expended without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes fees paid for architectural or engineering services as proposed by the Senate.

No. 18: Limits the amount of public works funds within the United States that may be expended without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes to 10 percent as proposed by the Senate instead of 5 percent as proposed by the House.

No. 20: Clarifying amendment.

No. 21: Makes the appropriation for public works outside the United States available for expenditure without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes as proposed by the Senate.

No. 22: Permits disbursements and accounting of appropriations for public works as one fund as provided by the Senate.

Nos. 23, 24, 25, and 26: These amendments all deal with the appropriations for the Bureau of Aeronautics. The effect of the action taken is to appropriate $805,760,000 as proposed by the House instead of $812,845,800 as provided by the Senate but with certain redistributions of the appropriation as proposed by the Senate. The Senate increase which was eliminated was for the production of training devices. It is the intention of the conferees that the appropriation for "Research, Navy," may be available for the production of these devices.

No. 27: Appropriates $5,963,000 for the pay and allowances of the Marine Corps Reserve as proposed by the Senate instead of $15,634,000 as provided by the House.

No. 28: Corrects a total.

Nos. 29, 30, and 31: Appropriates, in each instance, 50 percent of the increase added by the Senate for the pay of civilian employees of the Marine Corps.

No. 32: Corrects a total.

No. 33: Appropriates $2,857,000 for general expenses of the Marine Corps Reserve as proposed by the Senate instead of $4,800,000 as provided by the House.

Nos. 34 and 35: Corrects totals.

Nos. 36 to 45, inclusive: Appropriates, in each instance, 50 percent of the increase added by the Senate for the pay of civilian employees in the various bureaus and offices in Washington.

No. 46: Adopts Senate language clarifying intent of the House provision.

Nos. 47 to 54, inclusive: Appropriates, in each instance, 50 percent of the increase added by the Senate for the pay of civilian employees in the various bureaus and offices in Washington.

No. 55: Corrects a total.

No. 56: Appropriates $1,500,000 for contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Hydrographic Office instead of $1,425,000 as proposed by the House and $1,650,000 as provided by the Senate.

No. 57: Eliminates language inserted by the Senate permitting, under certain conditions, time studies to be made of work performed by Government employees of the Navy Department.

No. 58: Action same as that taken on amendment No. 14.

No. 60: Clarifying amendment.

No. 61: Adopts language inserted by the Senate preventing the use of funds appropriated in the bill for expenses incident to the care of surplus materials.

Nos. 63 to 70, inclusive: These amendments all deal with the Maritime Commission and War Shipping Administration. Under the House provisions the War Shipping Administration would become merged with the Maritime Commission on July 1, 1946, and the War Shipping Administration would be liquidated by December 31, 1946. The Senate provided that the merger would take place on October 1, 1946, with liquidation to follow on March 1, 1947. The amendments as agreed to will require the merger to take place on September 1, 1946, and liquidation to become effective on December 31, 1946.

AMENDMENTS IN DISAGREEMENT

The following amendments are reported in disagreement:

No. 1, relating to cost-of-living allowances for civilian employees of the Navy Department in foreign countries. The House managers will move to recede and concur.

No. 12, relating to the naval procurement fund: The House managers will move to recede and concur with an amendment.

No. 19, relating to use of public works funds: The House managers will move to cede and concur with an amendment.

No. 59, relating to limitations on expenditure of funds to pay salary and wages of anyone who engages in a strike against the Government, or who is a member of an organization that asserts the right to strike against the Government, etc. The House managers will move to recede and concur.

No. 62, relating to language permitting the Secretary of the Navy to delegate certain authority. The House managers will move to recede and concur with an amendment.

HARRY R. SHEPPARD,
ALBERT THOMAS,
THOMAS D'ALESANDRO, Jr.,
CHARLES A. PLUMLEY,
WALTER C. PLOESER,
NOBLE J. JOHNSON,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that the House managers, after a free and full conference, have been able to reach a complete agreement on all of the matters in dispute in the Navy Department Appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1947. There were a few contentious subjects, but by give and take we finally had a meeting of the minds.

The bill, as made up in conference, carries a total "out of the Treasury" appropriation of approximately $4,120,000,000 which is supplemented by a $500,000,000 transfer of funds from the Naval Stock fund. The total amount carried in the bill is roughly $10,000,000 under the total as passed by the House and the reduction results largely from the elimination of approximately $11,500,000 for the Marine Corps Reserve program. As passed the House, the bill provided funds to double the size of the Marine Corps Reserve. General Vandergrift appeared before the Senate Committee and indicated that the greatly augmented program would afford some difficulties and that he would be satisfied if the original Marine Corps estimates for the Reserve program would be approved. The agreement is in accord with his wishes.

There were really only two other matters that were of general interest. The House bill carried funds for the construction of four permanent Naval hospitals and an addition to an existing hospital. The Senate struck out these monies. We finally agreed to reinstate about $42,000,000 for this hospital program which is about $12,000,000 less than the House bill set up. This sum should provide something between 3,000 and 4,000 additional beds in permanently constructed hospitals and will at least be a start in the direction of meeting the 13,000 odd permanent bed deficiency that exists at the present time. The other matter that I think should be brought to your attention in the matter of the compromise we made on the action of the Senate in restoring approximately $5,500,000 for the salaries of civilian employees in the Navy Department in Washington. The House had cut that sum from the Budget estimates with an eye toward economy. The reduction spelled positions for about 2,000 individuals. Every one of the divisions in the Navy that were affected by the slash appeared before the Senate Committee and entered vigorous objection to the reduction. It was finally agreed, therefore, that we would halve the difference so we restored approximately 2 and three-fourths million dollars for these salaries. Even with this restoration, however, we reduced the budget estimates for civilian employees at the seat of Government by about 7 percent.

I think that is all that I care to say about the report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, all I wish to say is that I support unqualifiedly the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON].

Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, on Monday of this week the President accepted the resignation of the Honorable Ganson Purcell, Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission. The great work of this able and fearless administrator over his 16-year period of public service is known to all of you. Hence, I will not recount his accomplishments in detail but merely use this brief moment to pay to him the tribute which he so justly and richly deserves.

Ganson Purcell entered into the services of the United States in 1930, when he became a member of the staff of the Legislative Counsel of the United States Senate. He became Assistant Legislative Counsel to the Senate in 1932. After ably serving in that capacity until 1934 he became a member of the legal staff of the Securities and Exchange Commission which was then in its infancy but whose future held such great promise. The Commission, which had been created by Congress to curb the financial excesses rampant in the twenties and which substantially contributed to the debacle of the early thirties, was then attracting to its staff some of the most brilliant minds and skilled technicians in this country. Ganson Purcell was one of the first of this group. His first job at the Commission was almost at the bottom of the organization, but it was not long before his keen mind, and exceptional abilities, led to his rapid advancement. He became, successively, Assistant Director of the Trading and Exchange Division, Director of the Trading and Exchange Division, and, in 1941, Commissioner. Since 1942 he has been the Commission's chairman.

Keenly aware of the public interest, zealous to protect the small investor from the unscrupulous practices of the Wall Street coterie and skilled in the techniques of both the law and the market place, he did much to build the stature of the Commission into a real bulwark of our system of free enterprise.

It was with great personal regret that I learned of his resignation from the Commission, and I know that my keen regret is shared by the other Members of the House. I see in his resignation another example of a solid, able, and even-handed public servant who stayed in the governmental harness years beyond the time when personal interest would have dictated otherwise.

While the loss of the services of Ganson Purcell is a real blow to the Commission, I know that his keen mind and great heart have left an enduring mark which should bode well for the common weal.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question. I realize we have to have a strong Navy now and a good Army and a strong air force. But when I hear over the radio, as I did yesterday morning, "This is WRC-NBC; we have collected $43,000,000,000 in taxes for the year and we have paid $12,000,000,000 off the national debt this year." Then they stop there and make the people of this country believe we are doing some good financing. But instead of the radio commentator telling the public we are going into debt over $2,000,000,000 for the year, with all the money that you have collected, it makes the picture sound, but it does not fool the public. It behooves the Committee on Appropriations at all times to cut down these appropriations to the limit of their ability with good sound financing. I wonder whether the Appropriations Committee has done everything it could do in eliminating every unnecessary expense in the naval appropriation bill. It has not been done in some other bills.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Vermont to answer the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I would remind my good friend, the watchdog of the Treasury, that when we bring in a report after a conference with the Senate which measures our ability to trade to the extent that we reduced the original House bill by $20,000,000, he should not find any fault with that. May I say to him also that he should not believe everything he hears over the radio.

Mr. RICH. I do not believe in what I hear from many radio commentators. I am not so much interested so far as the conference report is concerned as I am in the ultimate financing of this Government of ours. Now you have to do either one of two things. You must either stop spending extravagantly or bust; and I do not want to be a party to the bust. For 15 years this country has had an orgy of high financing and very extravagant administration. No other administration has ever been like it for inefficiency and extravagance. It is the world's worst spenders.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND].

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, at the appropriate time I intend to offer a motion to recommit this conference report with instructions to the House conferees to stand by the House language which was put in the bill; in other words, my amendment to prevent the use of funds by the Navy for the manufacture, overhaul, repair, and assembly of torpedoes at Forest Park, Ill. I was greatly surprised and disappointed when I found after the amendment had been adopted here on the floor of the House and had been adopted by the Subcommittee on Appropriations in the Senate that the full Senate Appropriations Committee had deleted it from the bill and the Senate sustained that action. However, in accordance with long-established precedent, I expected that the House conferees would stand up for the language in the House bill, which I understand they failed to do. Instead they yielded to the Senate. Therefore, the amendment was deleted from the bill.

Mr. Speaker, this really means something in more ways than one. It means that the Navy is riding roughshod and doing just what it pleases, regardless of the effect upon a torpedo station that was built in 1869, where the torpedo was invented and developed and where highly skilled personnel was used during the war, not only to manufacture torpedoes as they did during peacetime but also to teach the manufacture of torpedoes to those people who were to be hired by private contractors and who were to be used at the plant in Forest Park, Ill., a plant that was operated during the war by a private contractor, the American Can Co., and which was taken over by the Navy on December 10, 1945.

The reward for those men of Newport, who did so much for the war effort, as well as for many years previously, is that they are being thrown out into the street after having rendered 25, 35, and, in one case, 39 years of faithful service to Uncle Sam, under civil-service rates of pay, which are about 20 cents an hour less than the Navy is paying at Forest Park. While throwing out these long-term employees who were under civil service, but are too young to take advantage of the retirement law now on the books, they have blanketed into the Civil Service to man the plant at Forest Park the men who during the war were working for private contractors at much higher wages, and who are eligible for unemployment compensation, to which, of course, the employees at Newport are not eligible.

The Navy Department has made the specious argument that they can manufacture torpedoes cheaper at Forest Park than at Newport, but as usual, they handle their language very deftly. They also juggle figures very nicely. I do not say that they lied to you, but I could say it. For instance, in the case of manufacturing the mark-13 torpedo, the Navy Department states that the cost at Newport was $9,040, against $7,900 at Forest Park. What is the truth of the matter? I have the figures, and the Navy Department has the same figures on file, showing that for the last 5 years the average cost of the mark-13 torpedo manufactured at Newport is $7,000, which includes five or six hundred dollars for ranging. Bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that Newport is to continue the research and development work, but the torpedoes will be manufactured at Forest Park, Ill., and then will be shipped 1,000 miles back to Newport for testing, for post ranging, and for issue. Moreover, they tell us that Forest Park is going to have 1,250 employees. Admiral Hussey admitted, and you will find it in the hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, that if my amendment remains in the bill it means but 600 jobs at Newport. How can you reconcile the Navy Department's statement that they are going to save money by using Forest Park if they are going to use 1,250 workers at Forest Park when 600 people can do the same work at Newport? It does not jibe.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want to commend the gentleman for his splendid argument for the Newport station. In my judgment it is just bureaucratic arrogance and favoritism to close a station which was established by act of Congress, and transfer its activities elsewhere.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman no doubt is aware of the statement made by Admiral Hussey that if the Navy so decided, they could close Annapolis without considering Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not believe in that kind of administration.

Mr. FORAND. I hold in my hand a copy of the Chicago Tribune of June 27, and I want to read an excerpt from it.

Mr. FORAND. Capt. Harry Hoffman, commanding officer at the naval ordnance plant at Forest Park, Ill., has given us a fine example of the arrogance of some Navy officers and the contempt they have for Congress.

I quote from Captain Hoffman's statement, as it appears in the Chicago Tribune:

I thought everybody had learned the lesson of the vulnerability of our seacoasts in this war.

You know as well as I do that coming from the Arctic Circle they can reach Forest Park or Chicago or New York just as easily as they can reach Newport.

It was a good, sound decision getting our plants dispersed and located inland, and now a small group of minority politicians—

Those who are fighting for their own districts are called minority politicians.

There is a fine example of what the naval officers think of us, we who are elected by the people to represent them here in this Congress. I believe that under the Constitution we in the Congress have the right and the duty to tell the Navy what they should do, not they tell us what we should do. I continue the quotation—and now a small group of minority politicians comes along and tries to wreck our program. The Navy wants Forest Park.

Will the Navy say what they want and what they will get, or will the Congress say so?

Mr. DE LACY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DE LACY. I wish to compliment the gentleman from Rhode Island on the magnificent statement of facts he has made about his own torpedo station in relation to the Forest Park development.

In my own district we have a magnificent station, with a history not as long as that of the station in the gentleman's district, but one that is very efficient. We likewise are suffering the same penalty for having done good work over a long period of years and built up a corps of highly trained mechanics.

I certainly hope the gentleman will be successful in his fight.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Did I understand the gentleman to say that torpedoes could be manufactured in the Rhode Island torpedo plant $2,000 cheaper each than at Forest Park?

Mr. FORAND. Not quite that. The Navy says that Newport is manufacturing at $9,040, whereas Forest Park is manufacturing at $7,900. I say that the actual figures would prove that $7,000 is approximately the cost of a Mark 13 torpedo at Newport. If they want to use the same type of torpedo manufactured under similar conditions we maintain we cannot only meet that figure but that we have workmen who are so far superior by virtue of their long experience—in fact, to the point where they were used as teachers for the group at Forest Park—that we could better that figure.

Mr. RICH. I hope the gentleman will put those figures in the RECORD. It seems to me we ought to have them in the RECORD because wherever the Navy, the Army, or any component of the armed forces can purchase the necessary equipment at the cheapest possible price, they should, in order to assist in balancing the budget.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Rhode Island three additional minutes.

Mr. FORAND. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we can go just a little further than that and show that the figures quoted are the figures that were used when a private contractor was operating the Forest Park plant. Everybody knows that with the Government taking over operation of the Forest Part plant the cost will be higher.

Mr. RICH. Everybody knows that whenever the Government does anything the costs are a great deal more than in private enterprise, because Government accountants do not take into consideration all the costs that enter into private manufacturing. A lot of expenses, therefore, are not reflected in the costs.

Mr. FORAND. I believe this case has merit. In addition to what I have already said, we have got to consider the human element and realize that at Newport the Navy Department has insisted right along over a period of years that no other industry be located in that area so that it would not afford competition in their labor market. By closing the manufacturing establishment at Newport you are closing the only industry in that entire area and are subjecting men and families who have been there for years to go into the wilderness looking for jobs.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield gladly to my friend from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman has brought out a fact that is very important, and that is throwing a great many men out of jobs, men who have been there through the years, who have been trained to do this particular kind of work, who either have to have this particular job or else be transferred to a country far, far away, where they do not want to go. A continuance of operations at Newport would save these men either from being out of jobs or having to go elsewhere to support their families.

Mr. FORAND. Unfortunately, I may say to the gentleman from Kansas, that has already happened and the welfare rolls of the city have already swollen because of the number of men who have lost their employment and their inability to support the number of dependents they have been supporting.

I am glad the gentleman from Kansas has made this statement because he is a member of the Committee on the Civil Service and heard the testimony of these men. He knows their story.

Mr. REES of Kansas. It is a very serious thing to cause men to lose employment.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield.

Mr. WILSON. Will the gentleman explain to me why the Senator from Rhode Island signed this conference report?

Mr. FORAND. I cannot answer for the actions of a Member of the other body.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and include therein certain excerpts and tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the motion offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island will not prevail and that the House will approve the conference report as submitted by the Subcommittee on Naval Appropriations. It would appear that the only contention before us at the moment is the question of the location of a torpedo plant.

There is a plant located presently at Newport, R. I.; but during the war the Navy Department saw fit to establish an entirely new plant at Forest Park, Ill.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAHAM. That also includes a plant at Sharon, Pa.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. Now, it ought to be made clear at the outset that the conference report and the bill as passed by the House does not extinguish the plant at Newport, R. I. The essential point is that it is put upon a research basis and the plant will be rehabilitated. At the same time, this $32,000,000 plant at Forest Park, Ill., which is the finest and most efficient plant in all the world, will be preserved.

I can commend my good friend the gentleman from Rhode Island for his zeal in this matter because the plant is in his district. I can speak entirely dispassionately on the matter because the Forest Park plant is located 200 miles from where I live. As a matter of fact, there is not a single war installation in my congressional district. So I have no personal interest in the matter whatsoever. I do commend his zeal. But the real issue involved here, Mr. Speaker, is whether by the action of the Congress we propose to contravene the administrative judgment of the Navy, which is founded upon good ground and was taken for very persuasive reasons.

We should not for a light and transient reason undertake to roll back the administrative decision of the Navy unless there is good cause for it. The Navy had reasons for going out to Forest Park, Ill., and locating the torpedo plant, which, as I said before, is regarded by the Secretary of the Navy as the most efficient in the world. The Navy has not run roughshod over anybody. There has been none of the alleged arrogance on the part of Navy officials. The fact of the matter is there was good reason for preserving this plant and asking the Appropriations Committee and asking the Congress to preserve the plant and keep it in operation.

In the first place, the plant at Forest Park is the newest plant in all the world. The plant at Newport is about 77 years old and some of its machinery and its buildings are in an obsolescent stage. They have a sprawling plant, as distinguished from the compact torpedo plant located on 117 acres at Forest Park, where every part of the torpedo, from the tiniest little gyro mechanism on down is manufactured within the confines of a single plant. So it is self-sufficient.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is in error about that, is he not? There are parts coming in there that are manufactured elsewhere.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I still stand by the statement. I said that it was self-contained.

Secondly, it is the lowest-cost plant. I do not know anything about the figures that were submitted by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND]—and certainly I would not presume to impeach those figures—but I do know that the Navy Department is the authority for the figure that at Newport it cost $9,040 to manufacture a torpedo, as against $7,914 at Forest Park; in other words, the Navy comes with their figures and says, "You can manufacture a torpedo at Forest Park, Ill., $1,126 cheaper than you can at Newport, R. I." I do not know where the figures of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND] came from, but I do know that those are the Navy figures indicating that the cost of manufacture at Forest Park is infinitely cheaper. I have no choice except to give full credit and authenticity to the figures that the Navy has submitted.

With respect to the item that appears here about men who have been engaged in the service for a long time and who, in some instances, may have to find other work, let me remind you that of the 1,200 employees at Forest Park today, 900 are veterans of World War II—900 out of 1,200 did yeoman service for their country in World War II. Are they not entitled to some consideration on the part of the Congress and the people if the future welfare of the employees is to be a determining factor? If you propose now, for the sake of one locality, to close a torpedo plant in another, and state that the Navy is interested in retaining and putting out of business 900 veterans of World War II, then what? There is no force at all in the sympathy or argument, and I brush it to one side unless it is considered from the standpoint of veterans at Forest Park as well as that of men with long service at Newport. But there is equity on one side as against the equity that has been submitted on the other; and when all is said and done, of course, you do not rationalize this question of efficiency in national defense on sympathy; and if it is the most efficient plant in all the world, then it ought to be retained.

The next argument I would make in opposition to the motion to be offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island in behalf and in support of the Newport plant is that the Forest Park plant is the only plant in the United States—and perhaps the only plant in the world—where the new Navy electrical torpedo can be manufactured, and I stand on that statement. That is one of these new instrumentalities of war that has been developed within the last few years. The only place in the United States where they have the machinery, where they have the capacity, where they have the precision, and where they have the skill to get out this new electrical torpedo is at Forest Park, Ill. Are you going to junk a plant like that for the sake of a sprawling plant that is 77 years old, when the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Forrestal, himself said that Forest Park is one Navy plant that must not get away from us—meaning the plant at Forest Park, Ill.?

That involves, then, this over-all, larger issue of contravening the best judgment of Admiral Hussey and the members of his staff in the Bureau of Aeronautics. After all, they did noble and great service in time of war. We were content to rely on their judgment when the Nation was at war. Are you going to say, "That is all right, as long as the war was on, but now we are going to run out on your best judgment, and notwithstanding the fact that you want to retain the plant at Forest Park, we will arrogate to ourselves sufficient wisdom in that field and we propose now to shut down Forest Park in behalf of a 77-year-old plant at Newport, R. I."

Coming back to my good friend, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND] I do commend his zeal in this respect, but when all is said and done, they have had this plant up there for a long time, nearly 3½ generations. If it is going to be a question of governmental benefits, then what about diffusing a few of those benefits? After all, are we not just as near to the Federal Treasury out in the Middle West as in any other section of the country? After all, are we not entitled to some of those benefits? We do not ask for all of them. We do not say, "Shut down Newport, R. I." It will be maintained. There is money in the bill for the rehabilitation of some of those structures. But we say at the same time, when the Navy in its best judgment says, "This is one plant we must not lose, this is the only plant in the United States where an electrical torpedo can be made," that Forest Park is entitled to full consideration.

You remember what happened in the early days of the war. The first thing our strategists did was to start moving inland with ordnance plants and shell-loading plants, and all that sort of thing. They did not want to locate huge war plants in areas that might be vulnerable to attack. I am no strategist. I do not propose to comment at any length on it. But certainly the Navy must have had it in mind at that time of building a plant in the very center of the country, so that the business of constructing torpedoes of all kinds to be launched against our enemies in the early days of the war might be safeguarded against all hazards.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAHAM. Admiral Hussey testified that the vulnerability of the plant at Newport was greater than that of the plants in the interior built at Oak Park, Ill., Sharon, Pa., St. Louis, Mo., and Pontiac, Mich.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Exactly so. That was Admiral Hussey's contention.

I will not belabor the subject any further. Let me conclude by saying that within the next 30 days a new million-dollar addition which has already been completed at Forest Park will be opened. Are you going to junk that against the judgment of all the experts in the Navy? I think this House ought to return to that question a resounding "No," and say "They have made this finding upon the basis of the facts, and have located there what they regard as the greatest torpedo plant in all the world. Their hand shall be upheld and they shall be sustained."

Mr. Speaker, the motion the gentleman from Rhode Island will make ought to be voted down.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY].

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, I have in the past 6 years admired and respected the gentleman from Illinois in all his debates on the floor of this House, but it seems to me this morning that he has gone far afield and he does not know too much about the subject he is talking about. I do not believe he knows anything about the conditions that exist in Rhode Island and in Newport in particular in relation to the situation of this plan. He knows nothing of the type of mechanics we have in Newport. He knows nothing of the outlay on buildings that have been constructed since this war started. We have spent millions of dollars on this island where this torpedo station is located to construct new buildings and put in new equipment. We have a modern plant there at the present time. There is no question in the mind of anyone in the Navy Department or anyone else that we have the best mechanics obtainable in this country located in the city of Newport, men who have spent their lifetime in this torpedo station.

When the gentleman from Illinois quotes figures he has read in the Chicago Tribune about the cost of a torpedo, those figures just are not true. The figures that were presented to the committee are the figures that were given when the American Can Co. was building those torpedoes, but since that time the Navy Department has taken over Forest Park and the costs are going to go up. I can show you here figures and guarantee that a torpedo can be built at Newport about eight or nine hundred dollars cheaper than it can be built under Navy jurisdiction at Forest Park.

The gentleman from Illinois mentioned the veterans of World War II at Forest Park. I can say to him we have had over 100 veterans of World War II laid off at Newport at the present time. He also spoke about the new electrical torpedo and said that Forest Park is the only plant that has the mechanism available to build the new electrical torpedo. But Admiral Hussey has already stated before our Committee on Naval Affairs that the electrical torpedo today is obsolete and that the equipment which is now located at Forest Park to build these electrical torpedoes is just a waste of the Navy's money because he has already declared that the new electrical torpedo is no good, is obsolete, and will not be built in the future. Therefore, what is there to the argument of the gentleman from Illinois when he says that they have the only equipment to build a torpedo which has been already declared obsolete? In this particular plant in the city of Newport there is no other industry and when this industry is taken out it will affect the entire economy of the city. There is no other industry where the men who have been working at the torpedo plant all their lives can find another job. Newport is actually isolated from the State of Rhode Island. The only other naval activity anywhere near Newport is across the bay about 7 or 8 miles and the only way they can get there is by taking a ferry and crossing a bridge which costs them $3.50 a day. The only other way to get there would be by automobile by a ride of 60 miles. I sincerely hope that the motion to recommit which will be offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND], will be carried.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] a member of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, this has been a most interesting discussion. Naturally, we commend the Members who are trying to take care of employment in their districts. I happen to come from a district that has no naval installations. I am not interested in any of the arguments that have been made in regard to employment as far as this particular matter is concerned. Naturally, when the war was over, Government employment had to be cut down because we were not producing and it was not expected that we would continue to produce the equipment and materials which we did during the war. Every community that had activities connected with production for war purposes wants to see their particular community benefited by keeping that production going. That is impossible if we are going to run our Government on anything like a business basis. It appears to me that the Navy Department is responsible for the production of this material; the Navy Department which knows what equipment it has and where it can produce needed equipment best is the proper agency to determine where the production should go on and at what place plants should be kept in operation. When the Navy Department comes before a congressional committee and lays down its facts and figures and makes its recommendations as to what it wants in order to do an efficient job, I believe that the Congress would do well to consider seriously what that department which has the responsibility says should be done.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Will you give us some information with reference to what the Navy Department says about manufacturing these torpedoes cheaper at one plant than at the other?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I understand that was covered in the hearings. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] I believe, covered that in his statement a few months ago.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND] made a statement different from that. What was your opinion of that?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The fact of the matter is, it is the Navy official. The Navy Department has made the statement that you can manufacture them at Forest Park, Ill., for $7,914, and at Newport, R. I., for $9,040; that you can manufacture them at $1,126 cheaper for every torpedo at Forest Park than at Newport. You can impeach figures if you like to, but nobody has authentically impeached them as yet. We can only depend upon the naval officials.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Now, I would like to proceed a minute. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the same argument that has been made about continuing this plant at Newport in the production of torpedoes, and closing the one at Forest Park could be made as to one plant against another in thousands of instances throughout our country. We should adopt a business basis, have some confidence in what those who have the responsibility say to us, and stop considering the proposition that it is the duty of the United States Government to somehow, some way, keep every plant that we had during the war in operation. That just cannot be done in the postwar economy.

I believe this conference report should be adopted.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. HUBER. I was wondering why we should be quarreling as to whether Rhode Island or Illinois shall make the torpedoes when the atomic-bomb test tomorrow may make every production obsolete.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman may have something there. I think the proper thing to do is simply to follow out what the responsible people say we should do and adopt this conference report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] has expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, some of my constituents have lived long in this particular section. I cannot believe that efficiency in any new mushroom plant exceeds that of the people who have worked at Newport these many years and who have had long experience. Would any of you allow your own old-established plants to be uprooted and abandoned in order that plants built hastily for temporary needs might remain in operation? What interests me greatly is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] argues efficiency and declares that sentimentality must not enter into the decision. He then appeals for the veterans working in the new locations. That, indeed, is a very effective sentimental appeal. We are appealing for an old-established plant, where workers have been employed for years and they and their families have established themselves in the vicinity. I do not wish them uprooted, and none of you would hesitate to object in a similar situation. The report of the committee is unfortunate. We could and should reject it. Do not tell us that the new plants are more efficient than the one at Newport after all these many years of experience and training. We cannot accept such claims, especially when the reports are so conflicting.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH].

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take the 3 minutes. I do want to point out, however, that when this bill was being considered in the first instance in the Committee of the Whole House, near the end of the day when there were just a few Members present, because of the stress of time and the parliamentary situation prevailing, a teller vote was prevented. It is my considered opinion that had a teller vote been taken the amendment offered then by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND] would have been defeated, and I expect to take advantage of every parliamentary procedure today to defeat his amendment, because of its lack of merit.

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman knows there was just a handful of Members on the floor at that time.

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I do not yield. I only have 3 minutes.

The gentleman also knows that I rose at the time and asked for tellers; a gentleman on the other side gained the floor which procedure automatically prevented a successful attempt on my part to obtain a vote by tellers.

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an answer?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

Mr. Speaker, after full hearings in the Senate the item the gentleman from Rhode Island is now fighting for was stricken from the bill, and the Senator from Rhode Island signed the conference report. In addition to that $350,000 was added by the Senate and retained by the conference committee to more than take care of the Newport needs.

I believe that when experts of the Navy Department testify as they did testify before both the House and the Senate committees, giving abundant evidence of the necessity for the Forest Park item, we should pay attention to their recommendations, and all the more so when the Senator from Rhode Island signs this conference report. It seems to me that that action outweighs the action by which this amendment was adopted originally in the House side when fewer than 50 Members were present.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I yield.

Mr. WILSON. Is it not true that the storage depot for these torpedoes is located at Crane, Ind., and that if they were made on the coast it would involve shipping of the finished torpedoes all the way to Indiana for storage and then shipping them back again, whereas if they are manufactured out there they will be nearer the place where they are to be stored?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, the hearings are full of testimony that sustain the action in the Senate. At page 197 of the Senate hearings on this bill you will find the statement made by one of the Navy experts to the effect that the vulnerability of installations such as Newport was a very compelling reason to relocate the torpedo manufacture at Forest Park, St. Louis, Sheridan, Pennsylvania, Pontiac, and Chicago.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

I wish to take this opportunity of paying tribute to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND] and his colleagues for the aggressive manner in which they have made their presentation to the Congress and to the members of our subcommittee.

When this issue was under consideration the committee in its hearings obtained all the justifications for these activities that it was possible to secure from the gentlemen representing the interests of the Government. The final judgment of the subcommittee was verified by the action of the full committee. When I presented the issue to them they concurred in what the subcommittee had done insofar as it applied to Newport and Forest Park. When we came to the floor of the House, however, the gentleman from Rhode Island offered an amendment and I wish to call the attention of the membership to what is involved.

There is a splendid plant in Rhode Island that has been in existence for a long period of years. You also have at Forest Park one of the most modern plants of this character that is known in the world, in which the Federal Government has invested more than $21,000,000 of the taxpayers' money. I call your specific attention to the language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island. It reads as follows:

> That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the manufacture, assembly, repair, or overhaul of torpedoes at the naval ordnance plant, Forest Park, Ill.

Your subcommittee naturally would not go along with that amendment and approve it on the floor, although the House at that time placed it in the bill over the committee objections.

It went over to the Senate. Senator GREEN, who also represents the great State of Rhode Island, was, I am advised, present at the time this amendment was considered by the Senate. Full debate was had in the Senate and the provision was eliminated from the bill.

Mr. Speaker, in order to take care of the Newport station the House managers agreed to incorporate the following language in the bill. Let me call to the attention of the House, however, that it is rather interesting that the gentleman who speaks so adversely about the conference report, neglected to comment on this language. Here is the wording:

> Two hundred forty-six million, three hundred ninety thousand dollars of which $350,000 shall be available for placing the equipment at the naval torpedo station, Newport, R. I., in condition for operation.

Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that you have before you in this particular issue a question of policy. Either the House is gong to legislate as to which operational projects will be closed and which are to remain open and perforce exercise the prerogative of geographical favoritism, or it is going to legislate upon the basis of equity which means that we must leave these decisions up to administrative officials who are competent to make these decisions.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FORAND. I am just wondering what advantage that $350,000 is going to be to rehabilitate Newport if they are not going to use the machinery?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am assuming that Senator GREEN, representing your State, would have asked that question at the time he was discussing it with the naval officials. He seems to be a very intelligent gentleman. When we were discussing the problem with him he said, "As a compromise I think we have reached as satisfactory a conclusion as is possible under the circumstances." That is the only answer I can give the gentleman because I did not do the gentleman's thinking.

Mr. FORAND. How come the $350,000 was suggested? If the gentleman does not know the origin of it, I can give it to him.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It was put in at the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island, if the information given to me by the Senator is correct.

Mr. FORAND. It was put in there because the Secretary of the Navy in trying to offset the amendment which I offered said it would require $350,000 to rehabilitate the plant up there, take the machinery out of grease and start to operate. I think the figure is wrong. In fact, the experts who work there tell me it is.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, permit me to make a few observations about this very troublesome matter. Before I start, I want to say a few words about my two distinguished friends from Rhode Island, Mr. FOGARTY and Mr. FORAND, two of my good, close, personal friends. I commend them for their fine fight which they have made for their district. I do not know of any two men in Congress, when you get right down to bare facts, who have done more for their districts than have these two gentlemen. When November comes I know your good people, whom you have the honor to represent, will so recognize your outstanding ability and we will see you back here next January.

Let us discuss this matter on its merits. The proposition opens up two very fundamental factors. First, is it going to be the policy of the House of Representatives to take away from the Navy its administrative functions; namely, out of the literally hundreds and hundreds of projects that the Navy has undertaken, will it be the policy of the Congress which it certainly has not been heretofore, now at this late date to write that policy of the Navy by telling it where it is going to have installations?

We have not done it in the past, and certainly we will not do it in the future, because it just does not make sense. I might say that four out of five of the conferees of the other body just put their feet down on that proposition and said, "We will not usurp the administrative functions of the Navy." In the first place, the House is not qualified to do that job. If there is any doubt in the wisdom of the policy that we have followed these many years, that great committee of this House, the Committee on Naval Affairs, ought to look into the matter and do a little legislating and change the policy if it needs changing.

The second fundamental principle is simply this, as was so ably brought out by our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON]: Can we keep all of these fine plants going in the Army and the Navy? Of course not. There have been thousands of business dislocations throughout the United States. There have been many dislocations of families. Do we want to say to the Navy, "You must keep this fine community going by keeping this plant there?" The Navy says, "We want to do otherwise. We are not going to close it, but we are going to operate it as a scientific laboratory." Yet, this fine community says, "Well, you have operated it so many years here that we feel it belongs to us, and we want you to operate it just like you have done in the past."

We grant you that there may be some dislocations in that fine community, though I hope not, but if there are, there will be dislocations in your district and mine and every other district in the country on account of this war.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Members will think carefully over this matter, and when it comes to a vote let us not recommit this bill. We have worked long and hard on it, and there is only one little item in here that we cannot get together on. Certainly the House is not going to tear up 4 months of hard work over one matter that in truth and in fact should not have been before us now. It should have been handled in the regular way.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FOGARTY. The only stand we take today is that we claim that the Newport torpedo station is the most efficiently operated station in the country; that we have the best group of mechanics available; that we have the old-line mechanics that know about the making of a torpedo inside and out, and that is where efficiency counts.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I understand the gentleman's point of view. They make them in Forest Park and they have trained labor there also.

Mr. FOGARTY. But they will be sent to Newport to be passed on afterward.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. CHURCH. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CHURCH moves to recommit the conference report on H. R. 6496 to the committee of conference with instruction to the managers on the part of the House to insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 9.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 1: Page 2, line 22, after the comma insert "special cost of living allowances for employees abroad."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 2: Page 22, line 11, insert the following paragraph:

"NAVAL PROCUREMENT FUND

"For the purpose of settlement of war contracts under the Contract Settlement Act of 1944, and during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, advances by check or warrant and reimbursements to the Naval Procurement Fund from naval appropriations may be made on the basis of the estimated cost of a project without further accounting distribution of expenditures to the individual appropriations involved."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHEPPARD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12 and concur in the same with an amendment as follows: On line 2 of said Senate amendment strike out the word "and."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 19: Page 25, line 16, after "Statutes", insert "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for hospital construction: Provided further, That wherever there are architectural and engineering services in any State in which a project is located qualified to do the work, such services shall be utilized."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHEPPARD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19 and concur in the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said Senate amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That wherever there are architectural and engineering services in any State in which a project is located qualified to do the work, such services shall be utilized."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I should like to ask the gentleman two questions.

First, I assume that the purpose of the amendment the gentleman has offered is to permit the use of funds in the bill for hospital construction.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No. That is not a part of this amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is it Senate amendment No. 19 we are now considering?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is not the gentleman dropping the limitation against part of the funds being used for hospital construction?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have moved that the House recede and concur with an amendment which will eliminate that language.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What language is being eliminated?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That none of the money can be used for the construction of hospitals. That is the pertinent part of the amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. So that it will be possible to use money in the bill for hospital construction?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That correct, under the amendment which is now under consideration.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is the point I want established. It will be remembered that in the consideration of the Army appropriation bill the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] established that the Tripler Hospital was started in Hawaii with transferred funds. So, now, I ask the gentleman with reference to the transfer clause which was embodied in the bill originally. I recognize that that is not before us in the conference report, but in view of the proposed elimination of the restriction on hospital construction I desire to get a statement from the gentleman. It is also important for the conference which will probably be held on the War Department appropriation bill today. Heretofore the Navy bill has not carried a transfer clause, but the bill that is now being approved does carry a transfer clause permitting the Navy Department to transfer money from one appropriation head to another. Is the present proposal for the purpose of permitting a hospital or hospitals to be started with transferred funds?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; not as such. I may say to the gentleman that there was an agreement in this bill on 5 percent for 1 year only.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The situation with which we are confronted in connection with the conference on the Army appropriation bill is that the Army bill was passed by the House eliminating any transfer clause, and I understand that the other body put in the Army bill a transfer clause for 10 percent. Was there any suggestion in the conference with the other body on the Navy bill in connection with the language of that bill that a uniform policy of transfer should be developed between the Army and the Navy?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; there was not, because it was no in conference. The Senate agreed to the amount of 5 percent as set originally by the House.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I will say to my friend from South Dakota that we reluctantly put the 5-percent transfer clause in this bill for this year and served notice on the Navy that in the future we would not do it under any circumstances. They wanted it more or less to give them a little flexibility during this change-over period. Next year they will not get it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It is not to be regarded as a precedent, either for the Navy or War Department.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. No.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. And it is not for the purpose, taken in connection with the amendment to lift the ban on hospital construction, of permitting transfers to start some major hospital?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 59: Page 43, line 9, strike out all of page 43 after line 9, including line 9, and lines 1 and 2 on page 44, and insert the following:

"SEC. 109. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, this is the antistrike provision and is a matter which has been inserted in all the appropriations bills. The House has already declared its position on this subject.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 62: Page 50, line 22, insert the following:

"SEC. 120. The Secretary of the Navy may delegate to the commandants of the naval districts, for administration within their respective districts, his authority (1) to employ persons in the departmental service of the Navy Department, wherever located, and (2) to authorize payment of the expenses of the transfer of household goods of employees, and of the costs of transportation of their immediate families on change from one official duty station to another."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHEPPARD moves to recede and concur with an amendment to Senate amendment No. 62: In lieu of the matter inserted by said Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 120. The Secretary of the Navy may delegate to the commandants of the naval districts, for administration within their respective districts, his authority to authorize payment of the expenses of the transfer of household goods of employees, and of the costs of transportation of their immediate families on change from one official duty station to another."

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include an editorial entitled "Texas" which was published in the Lexington Gazette, of Lexington, Va., on May 14, 1846.

Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL ACT AND STABILIZATION ACT—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning without my approval H. R. 6042 amending the price-control laws and extending them for another year.

The choice which H. R. 6042 presents is not a choice between continued price stability and inflation. It is a choice between inflation with a statute and inflation without one. The bill continues the Government's responsibility to stabilize the economy and at the same time it destroys the Government's power to do so.

If this bill were allowed to become law, the American people would believe that they were protected by a workable price-control law. But they would not be protected and they would soon come to a bitter realization of that truth. It is only fair to tell them the facts now.

The lesson from our own experience after the last war, disastrous as it was to our farmers, our workers, our manufacturers, our distributors, and our consumers, has been too easily obscured by the annoyances and irritations and the occasional inequities of price control. The fact that inflation has already gutted the economy of country after country all over the world should shake our comfortable assurance that such a catastrophe cannot happen here.

For 5 years we have proved that inflation can be prevented. It still can be prevented if we have the will to prevent it. Today the opportunity of completing the transition from war to peace with an economy which is stable, sound, and secure is within our grasp.

To avoid sacrificing this opportunity requires courage, wisdom, and self-restraint. This winter and spring the tensions have been more acute than ever before. We are all weary and impatient of Government restrictions and controls. We are all eager for the day when we can pursue our own affairs in our own way. In such a mood there is the natural temptation to remove essential safeguards, prematurely.

This bill yields to that temptation. It would provide us with no real safeguards at all. It would start prices and costs climbing and keep them climbing. It would start the value of the dollar falling and keep it falling. Far from helping production it would retard it. In the end this bill would lead to disaster.

I shall not attempt to comment on all the bill's provisions. Some of them are entirely appropriate. Many others reflect minor concessions to special interest groups of the sort which the Congress has heretofore resisted. To these latter provisions I object on grounds of principle. But in the last days before the expiration of legislation so vital to the Nation's welfare I should not regard these concessions as a basis for withholding my approval from an extension bill.

My fundamental objection to the bill is to the numerous amendments which would raise the price of essential cost-of-living commodities. Of those by far the most damaging is the price-raising amendment for manufacturers introduced by Senator TAFT (section 11), operating in conjunction with the revised price-raising amendment for distributors introduced by Senator WHERRY (section 10, par. [t]), and with the special cost-plus amendments for automobile and appliance dealers first offered to the House Committee on Banking and Currency by Representative CRAWFORD (sec. 10, par. [q] and [r]).

The mainspring of this combination is Senator TAFT's amendment. It is that amendment which would compel thousands of needless price increases amounting to many billions of dollars. The Wherry and Crawford amendments simply make sure that before the Taft amendment price increases for the manufacturers reach the consumer, they will be pyramided by generous wholesalers' and retailers' mark-ups.

The provisions of the Taft amendment are complex but they wear a superficial reasonableness. I am sure, however, that Congress adopted this amendment without full appreciation of its consequences.

I wish it were possible to tell you exactly how many billions of dollars the American people would eventually have to pay for the Taft amendment and its companion pieces. To attempt to do so, however, would be like trying to estimate the cost of a fire about to sweep a city before the first building had started to burn. Even to estimate the total amount of all the first round of price increases is not now possible.

Here, however, are a few examples which would enter into such a total.

The first impact of the Taft and Wherry amendments in the crucial field of housing would be little short of devastating. The prices of nearly all building materials would be affected. The average increase of such materials, excluding lumber, would be approximately 20 percent. This would completely disrupt the program recently approved by the Congress to provide veterans' housing at reasonable cost.

Ceilings for steel would have to be raised an average of $4 to $8 a ton. These increases would in turn be reflected in the ceilings of everything made of steel.

The average price of low-priced automobiles would be increased $225 to $250, on top of the substantial increases already granted.

Household appliances such as washing machines and refrigerators would increase from 25 to 30 percent. Floor coverings would go up about 17 percent; plumbing supplies, about 16 percent; farm machinery, about 13 percent.

The prices of clothing—already too high—would be increased by an estimated average of 15 percent—more than half of which would be attributable to the Taft and Wherry amendments and the balance to other amendments. This by itself would add about $3,000,000,000 a year to the living expenses of American families.

These are only preliminary estimates of a few of the initial price increases. They do not take into account the further increases, for example, on automobiles, after steel, tires, safety glass, and other materials and parts have received their own increases.

The bill would cause some major increases in foods immediately. It would curtail subsidy payments so that the prices of certain foods would have to go up. Other foods would get immediate increases under the Taft amendment, but these would go to processors rather than to farmers. Like the wage earner, the white-collar worker, and the millions of old people and others who must live on fixed incomes, the farmer is a victim of this bill.

This, however, does not mean that the country would get any real protection for long in what it costs to eat. The same thing is true of rents. The bill does not direct any immediate increases in rents at all. But this does not mean that rents could be effectively controlled.

If I thought that this bill would make possible some genuine protection against soaring food prices and rents, I should hesitate long before disapproving it, despite the total impossibility of stabilizing the prices of other essential commodities. Our economy, however, cannot be half-stabilized. We cannot quarantine inflation. Higher prices for the things that farmers and landlords buy would inevitably force up farm prices and rents. In the case of farm prices, this is required by the parity provisions of the law. In the case of both farm prices and rents, general increases would be forced upon us by simple justice and the hard facts of business and economics.

This bill, therefore, gives only the delusion of protection against rising costs of food and shelter. It would delay their rise a little. But the delay would be long enough only to cause unnecessary hardship for farmers and landlords—not long enough to bring real benefits to consumers and tenants.

The spectacular increases in the prices of manufactured goods which the Taft amendment and its companion amendments would cause, right at the beginning, are far in excess of anything which industry needs to earn generous profits and obtain full production. The increases are so large because the formulas for computing them are bonanza formulas.

The Taft amendment puts into prices the profit per unit of sales which the industry received for the particular product in the year 1941. That was a year in which manufacturers and processors received a much greater profit out of each dollar of sales than in any one of the five peacetime years which preceded 1941 and more than in any one of the following five wartime years. Indeed, 1941 profit margins were half again as great as in the banner year of 1929. Today, however, the volume of sales is greater than that of 1941 and it is going to increase steadily if inflation does not stop it. Thus, at the very time when we should be getting the benefit of high volume in the form of lower prices, the Taft amendment would inflate prices.

In the case of products like automobiles, washing machines, and refrigerators which are just returning to the market, the Taft amendment produces especially unreasonable prices. This is because the amendment adds to prices all the abnormally high costs arising from temporarily low volume and changeover conditions.

The Wherry amendment gives a final boost to prices by requiring the pyramiding of manufacturer's increases at the wholesale and retail levels.

Of course profits ample to provide the incentive for full production are what makes the American free enterprise system work. Prices must not be inflexibly held. Increases have been granted and more will have to be granted to remove impediments to production. The Taft amendment, however, in the name of stimulating production, promises peak profits on every product even where production is already going at full blast and profits are eminently satisfactory. As industry after industry accepts the invitation of the Taft amendment in an attempt to make good profits better, prices will go up and up.

In addition, the industries in real need of relief will tend to be lost in the shuffle. The OPA, already criticized for delay in these deserving cases, will be increasingly unable to act promptly to break production bottlenecks.

There is a grim irony in the fact that the Taft amendment is defended as a stimulant to production when in fact it will greatly impede production.

The evidence is readily at hand. For weeks we have seen meat and other commodities withheld from the market in anticipation of higher prices. The simple fact is that the average businessman or farmer who knows that his price will soon be higher will not sell any more goods this week than he has to—be they suits or sewing machines or cattle.

The manufacturer with a price increase pending would naturally slow down deliveries as much as his working capital and his storage facilities would permit. At the same time the knowledge that his suppliers had their own increases pending would lead him to do all he could to build up his inventories. But his suppliers would also slow down deliveries for the very same reason. As essential materials and parts were withheld from the market, production lines would gradually grind to a halt. Workers would pay their toll to this amendment in loss of employment. Consumers would pay theirs in lack of goods.

These cases would develop, not by hundreds but by thousands. As fast as price increases were granted, they would raise the costs of purchasing industries and form a basis for additional increases. Each one would bring its new slow-downs and new bottlenecks. It is plain to see why the enactment of the Taft amendment as an aid to production would be a sorry jest. Production requires a reasonable stability in costs, a continuing flow of goods, and a readiness to buy and sell. The Taft amendment would result in erratic price and cost movements, a feverish effort to buy, and a calculated reluctance to sell.

The Taft amendment would wholly destroy the program of wage stabilization which has been so painstakingly, and at times painfully, developed during the months since VJ-day.

The Wage Stabilization Board has contributed greatly to that development. The representatives of industry, labor, and the public who compose it have brought what threatened for a time to become a runaway wage movement into a fair and orderly procedure with which virtually all unions and managements have cooperated. This Nation still needs the continuing services of the Wage Stabilization Board.

I wonder therefore if the Congress realized when it voted for the Taft amendment that it was voting to destroy the present wage stabilization program and the usefulness of the Wage Stabilization Board. Under the existing program the Board has the task of determining the limit of wage increases which an employer can use as the basis for price increases. Its determinations of these limits have played a vital role in bringing about innumerable wage settlements. The Taft amendment, however, provides that, "in determinating costs for the purposes of this section, all costs shall be included." The Office of Price Administration advises me that under this provision it would be required to recognize all wage increases as a basis for price increases, even if the Board had not approved them and regardless of their amount.

This is the beginning of an inevitable spiral of uncontrolled inflation—a race between rising wages and rising prices. Farsighted leaders of both labor and management know that nothing can be gained—and everything lost—by simply letting prices and wages chase each other.

Yesterday I received a letter from the National Wage Stabilization Board, which Board represents industry, labor, and the public. The Board advises that it believes that uncontrolled inflation will result from this bill. Furthermore, the Board states:

> It is our unanimous judgment that the proposed legislation presents no possibility of wage stabilization or of the achievement of the balance between wages and prices which is essential to economic stability.

This bill provides a sure formula for inflation:

1. A first round of sharp and widespread price increases;

2. Production slow-downs due to price uncertainties;

3. Renewed demands for further wage increases due to higher living costs;

4. Higher production costs due to production slow-downs and stoppages and to higher labor costs;

5. A cost-plus pricing amendment which requires higher production costs to be translated immediately into higher prices.

And all this at a time when the supply of goods is still far below the record demand.

The formula would lead to disaster even if it could be assumed that price control could be administered in an orderly fashion, and that the Office of Price Administration would be able to build up a staff adequate to its new burdens. The fact is, however, that these assumptions are unreal. The OPA could not discharge the responsibilities which the Taft amendment and the other price-raising amendments would thrust upon it—either with its present staff or with any staff that it might conceivably recruit.

Moreover, enforcement and compliance with price regulations are dependent on the general stability of prices over considerable periods of time. Once prices were set in continuous upward motion, compliance would deteriorate rapidly. Little hope could be held out for compliance with ceiling prices fixed under the Taft amendment.

The reason for this is that the ceiling price of each individual manufacturer would depend upon the price which that particular manufacturer charged in the base period—usually October 1–15, 1941. To this base period price each manufacturer would be entitled to add a uniform increase factor representing cost increases incurred by the industry generally since that time.

Under this system, obviously, every manufacturer who had a different price in the base period would have a different ceiling price now. Uniform ceiling prices would become impossible, except in those industries which charged uniform prices in the base period. Thus, most of OPA's dollars-and-cents regulations, which are the most readily enforceable kind, would be wiped out.

Proof of any ceiling price violation would require proof of the price which the particular manufacturer charged during a 2-week period 5 years ago. Every enforcement proceeding would thus becomes a time-consuming and often futile historical investigation.

In these circumstances, the formal structure of price and rent control which the bill retains would be wholly ineffectual to stem the tide of inflation which it would set in motion. Unable to cope with the deluge of industry demands for higher ceilings under the new pricing formulas, and increasingly aware of the futility of its task, OPA's administrative staff would disintegrate. After irreplaceable losses from its ranks had reached a certain point, the consequence would not be more administrative delay; it would be complete collapse.

In the face of these alarming consequences to the country if the present bill should become law, I urge the Congress with all the earnestness at my command to reconsider the whole problem of stabilization.

In that reconsideration, let us see just where we stand today. Under the existing stabilization laws production has recovered remarkably from the shock of war's end. Output of civilian goods already surpasses the 1941 level and employment exceeds that level by six million. This record has been achieved in spite of shortages of critical materials and parts and in spite of extended work stoppages in basic industries. The major labor-management disputes are settled, and we are moving rapidly toward the realization of our postwar objectives of full production and full employment in a sound economy.

There still are shortages but they will be progressively wiped out in the months ahead if business and labor stick to their job of producing the most possible goods in the shortest possible time. This can happen only if business has assurance of reasonable stability in its costs, and if labor has assurance that its real wages will not be cut sharply by rising living costs.

We can look ahead to a steady easing of other inflationary forces. The efficiency of production is bound to increase and bring with it an upsurge in total output. If the stabilization laws are renewed in effective form it is expected that the Federal Budget will be balanced during the coming year, thus eliminating the deficit which was a basic source of inflationary difficulties.

As the inflationary pressures lessen, commodity after commodity can be removed from controls, and we can emerge with a stable economy in which the traditional American free enterprise competitive system can take command. Not until then will the law of supply and demand keep prices at reasonable levels. So long as demand far exceeds supply the law of supply and demand will drive prices up.

Let us remember further that inflation and collapse in the United States would gravely jeopardize our efforts to build the kind of international economic relations that will provide a solid basis for world peace. The whole structure of international prices, currency values, and financial and trade relations is still unsettled. Because of our position and influence in world trade and finance, inflation and collapse in this country would shake the entire world.

In short, the most serious difficulties of the transition from war to peace are already behind us if only we have the wisdom and fortitude to see to it that the forces of inflation, so long held in check, are not unleashed when victory is all but won.

Therefore I call upon the Congress to act and act now by passing a bill which will give the Nation adequate assurance of completing a successful transition to a sound peacetime economy. Such a bill should contain the following provisions:

First. The bill should provide for extension of the stabilization laws for a full year.

Second. The bill should authorize the continuance of stabilization subsidies on a scale sufficient to avoid serious increases in food prices during the next 6 months and to permit the orderly termination of subsidies during the first half of 1947. In my judgment, an authorization for the expenditure of a billion and a quarter dollars during the year as a whole is the minimum necessary for these purposes.

Third. The bill should lay down a congressional policy with respect to the termination of price controls and subsidies. I approve the provisions of paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of the proposed new section 1A of the Price Control Act contained in section 3 of the present bill. These provisions call for the orderly removal of all price controls and subsidies during the course of the coming year, with the exception only of those commodities which, on or before April 1, 1947, the President finds to be still in critically short supply and for which he asks and secures authority for continued control to be administered by some established department or agency of the Government other than the Office of Price Administration.

I would not oppose the formulation of standards for the decontrol of particular commodities, as provided in H. R. 6042, or the establishment of an independent Price Decontrol Board to review these applications—provided that the standards were modified to make sure that, during the next crucial 6 months, ceilings do not have to be lifted where it is clear that serious price rises would result. The spelling out of detailed standards and the establishment of new and complex administrative machinery, however, do not seem to me to be necessary. If the Congress lays down the declaration of decontrol policy contained in paragraph (b) of the proposed new section 1A, permitting administrative flexibility in its application, I give my personal pledge that the policy will be carried out to the full in spirit as well as in letter.

I ask the Congress also, if it gives me responsibility for carrying out a measure of the kind I am urging, to permit me to do this through a unified or effectively coordinated administrative organization and not to handicap me by legislating an unsound split of authority.

Fourth. The adjustment of product prices to make possible the maximum total production is, of course, one of the fundamental requisites of good price administration during this final transition period. I do not believe that any change in the present law is necessary to assure that such adjustments are made. To put the matter beyond doubt, however, I would not object to a provision which expressly requires the adjustment of price ceilings wherever this is necessary and would be effective to increase the total production of needed goods.

The great majority of the American people want an effective price control law. They are entitled to have it. Under such a law we can win the war against inflation just as decisively as we won the war against the Axis.

Most Members of the Congress have not yet had an opportunity to take an unequivocal position on this issue. As the present bill becomes more and more heavily loaded with amendments during its 4½ months' progress through the Congress the issues became more and more obscured. Members who wanted more effective price control were found voting for the bill, or for particular amendments to the bill, on the basis that these were the best that could be secured. Side by side with them were Members who wanted to weaken price control or get rid of it altogether.

It is most unfortunate that the Congress has delayed final passage of a bill down to the eve of the very date of termination of the existing law.

As far back as September 6, 1945, I urged the Congress to pass an extension of the Price Control Act at an early date so as to avoid the uncertainties which have made control more difficult for the last few months. Had this been done there would now be no necessity for these last-minute decisions. I repeated my request to the Congress to extend price-control legislation without crippling amendments again and again—on January 21, 1946, May 22, 1946, May 25, 1946, and June 11, 1946.

Nevertheless, just before the expiration of all price control there has been presented to me by the Congress an impossible bill.

I cannot bring myself to believe, however, that the Representatives of the American people will permit the great calamity which will befall this country if price and rent control end at midnight Sunday. On behalf of the people I request the Congress to continue by resolution the present controls for the short period of time necessary to write a workable bill.

The fight against inflation is never easy. We are battling against economic forces which have caused us untold misery after every previous war and which have overcome or are threatening to overwhelm many of the nations engaged in this war.

We shall not win this fight by soft measures.

All of us who must play a part in the decision of this issue face a solemn responsibility. We stand at an historic moment. Our actions will be judged by the American people and judged again by history.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 29, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, as we have an hour to discuss this measure, I have agreed to yield 30 minutes to be used as directed by the senior minority member of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

I now yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why we should have extended debate on this question. I think everybody here has made up his or her mind as to how to vote.

I introduced a bill providing for the extension of the Price control and Stabilization Acts as they now exist. That bill was amended in the House, and I thought it was greatly weakened. I voted against those amendments. I believe the economic pressures that make for inflation are as strong now as they have ever been. I believe there is a great danger confronting the people of the United States. We passed a bill in a weakened form. It went to the Senate. The Senate passed a bill that was still weaker. The conferees labored long and diligently to bring forth a bill that would meet with the approval of both Houses. We did report a bill which I think was much superior to the bill that was passed by the House and the bill passed by the Senate. I told you I thought that bill was workable. It did not meet with my approval, however. We took the material we had and did the best we could with it.

The responsibility for the enforcement of this law is in the executive department. I urged the President to sign the bill. He told me the same things he has set forth in his veto message to the Congress. I am not an expert on price control. It is a highly involved and technical matter, a matter that should be considered by men who are charged with the duty of enforcing it and who know the practical effect of the amendments which we adopted. I was hopeful that the President would approve the bill. I was hopeful that he would think the bill might work to effectuate the purposes for which it was enacted. I cooperated in bringing back, as your agent, the best bill that I could bring back so far as my influence was concerned. That, however, did not mean I was in favor of it. It meant that, as your agent, I was trying to keep the processes of legislation operating. I voted for it because I thought it was the best bill we could get and that it would subserve the purposes for which it was enacted. The President, who is charged with the duty of enforcement, says it will not do that. I do not think there is any inconsistency on my part or any subserviency to any other department of Government when I say to you I am going to vote to sustain the President's veto. If the bill we sent to the President will not be effective, I am hopeful we may pass something that will be effective. At the conclusion of the debate I shall introduce a House joint resolution to continue the Price Control and Stabilization Acts until July 20, 1946, in order that the Congress may again consider this important and complicated question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I can surely sympathize with the position in which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] finds himself this morning. I can heartily agree with him when he says he thought, as we all thought, when the conference report came back to the House, that it was the very best bill which could be presented to this House, under the circumstances. I cannot understand why with that statement so fresh on his lips, he announced he was going to vote to sustain the veto, because anyone who votes to sustain the President's veto today, according to the statements which have been made by the ranking Members in the Senate and in the House, is voting to destroy price control. I do not want to take the responsibility, notwithstanding the President's statement, of destroying control of price. I believe sincerely that if President Truman had conferred with his congressional leaders a few weeks ago instead of very recently, he would have signed this bill. I believe he has been misinformed on almost all of the major statements contained in the veto message. Surely one could point out many inconsistencies in the statement. I shall not take the time to do it. They speak for themselves.

President Truman has been given more or less of an ultimatum by the leadership of this Congress that if he vetoed this bill he would take the responsibility for the control of prices being discontinued at midnight on June 30.

Now, it is utter folly, and in this respect he had been very much misadvised by some people other than the leadership here in Congress—it is utter folly to send this question back to either House of Congress in the hope that anything will come out of it different than came out of that conference. The President says he would have no objection to having the power to adjust prices to get production. Specifically, I want to call your attention to the fact, and it is obvious that the President's attention has not been called to the fact, that he has always had the power to adjust prices to get maximum production, even as far back as Public 729, the Stabilization Act of October 1942, when the Congress laid down the very definite policy that he should make adjustments to get the maximum amount of production in cases where, by reason of increased labor costs to the producers of agricultural commodities, the prices did not reflect the increased costs. So it has been the policy of this Congress—this Government, because it is law—that prices should be increased to absorb the increase in production costs, ever since the Stabilization Act of 1942.

Mr. Bowles comes before us and he says: "We are going to raise prices to absorb production costs where necessary to get production." The House says, "You shall."

Mr. Bowles says, "We want to get rid of subsidies as quickly as we can." The Congress says to Mr. Bowles, "You shall." With the exception of transferring the authority to adjust prices on agricultural commodities from a mismanaged OPA to, we hope, an efficient Department of Agriculture, there is nothing in this bill that does not reflect the attitude of all Administration witnesses who appeared before both the House and Senate committees. The only controversy in this bill, the only controversy in this veto message, is whether the administrators of price control shall be told that they must do the things which they say they are going to do anyway.

I think we owe the country an obligation for transcending any obligation which we might as individuals feel to follow the President of the United States in this. There are no new arguments in the message, not any new arguments at all. Every sentence contained in this veto message was considered by both the House and Senate Banking and Currency Committees and debated for days and days in both the Senate and the House. There is nothing new in this. The situation is still as it was when we voted to adopt the conference report day before yesterday, the same identical problems. I know that the question has been raised that it would be inconsistent for anyone who voted against the conference report now to vote to override the President's veto. Anyone who took the attitude that there were deficiencies in the bill that should be corrected in conference in keeping with his philosophy of price control could, of course, have voted not to accept the conference report in an attempt to force the conference report back to the conferees where he might hope the conferees would adopt his particular philosophy. But the situation today is that both the House and the Senate have accepted the conference report, and now it is this or nothing. We cannot ever hope to report out and submit to the Congress any better bill than we have at the present time.

I want to warn you and I want to warn the President that if this is continued for 2 or 3 weeks then there probably will be a movement, which we will no longer take responsibility to control, to write specific decontrols into the bill. I was one who led the fight against specific decontrols. If he takes the attitude that he will take the responsibility for the defeat of price control, then those of us who fought so successfully to get this bill into such shape that he could consistently sign it, surely will have to give up the fight.

Mr. Speaker, we should override this veto. We should vote notwithstanding the President's veto to continue price controls to save the President himself from being embarrassed later on by following the misguided consultants who evidently wrote the veto message. If you will take Mr. Bowles' radio speeches of the past 3 months and compare the phraseology with the veto message I think it will be very obvious to you who wrote this veto message.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Speaker, today the Congress has the most momentous decision to make that it has been called upon to face in the postwar period. Today, we will decide whether America will escape the devastation of inflation that has beset most of the rest of the world as a result of the war—or whether we will surrender to it.

We will decide whether we will have a reasonable and a sound prosperity, full employment and full production through an effective and real price-control bill—or whether we will have dislocations, labor difficulty, shortages, and profiteering with a phony price-control bill.

For myself, I intend to support and sustain the President in his veto of the so-called Price Control Act recently sent to him by the Congress. No phony price-control bill will help this Nation in the period which lies ahead and only through the President's veto can the Congress have a chance to pass a real and an effective bill which will control inflation.

GIVES CONGRESS ONE MORE CHANCE

The President by his veto gives the Congress this choice of a real bill, if we choose to write one. That is the reason why I think all friends of inflation control should support the President here today.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], who has just spoken, has charged that the President's message is inconsistent. If there is any inconsistency, it is in the bill as passed by the Congress itself. This bill, which purports in its preamble to control inflation, in fact would encourage it by congressional order. Everyone knows that this bill was loaded down with amendments ordering mandatory price increases on the millions of prices of the things that the American people must buy. It is a mandatory order to increase the cost of living of the American people.

As the President so wisely points out, it orders increases in thousands of prices where the manufacturer now may be making record-breaking profits from his over-all operation. It complicates and delays the making of necessary price adjustments to relieve real hardship or to encourage additional necessary production. It is impossible of good administration.

It unhinges the price-wage relationship which has been so difficult to establish or to keep in balance. With the bill as passed by the Congress, no wage stabilization would be possible. And without wage stabilization, there can be no end to price advances on everything.

FARMERS FACE HIGHER COSTS

The bill does nothing to actually help the farmers of America. Already, increasing processor and distributor margins, are cutting into the farmer's share of the American dollar. This bill, designed primarily to add to the profits of industry, will further decrease the value of the farmer's dollar by raising the price of almost everything he buys—without materially helping him on the things he has to sell.

Lack of production has been charged against restrictive OPA ceilings. Yet labor difficulties have caused nine-tenths of our loss of production and restrictive pricing less than one-tenth of this loss. But with this bill labor difficulties will be increased as strikes and new contracts are started to keep up with the skyrocketing cost of living.

PROFITS AT RECORD LEVELS

Insufficient profits of business and industry have also been charged against the OPA in the drive to put in many special interest amendments into this bill. The City National Bank of New York shows that only in 2 years out of the last 20, aside from the price-control years, have all corporation profits, after taxes been as high as they were last year. And still profits after taxes will go higher this year because of great tax relief granted to all business in this year's tax bill. But, still, this bill, with its Taft and Wherry amendments asks for more and more profits at the risk of destroying inflation control.

However, it is to the Members on my side of the aisle that I would like to address my remarks. Many ask, would they be inconsistent in voting now to sustain the President's veto, when they voted earlier in the week to send the emasculated and mangled bill on to him for action.

I do not think they would be inconsistent in any degree. It was with the greatest reluctance that I voted to send the bill on to the President. I knew I was voting for a straw man to control inflation. I knew I was voting for an unworkable, yes, an impossible OPA bill. But it was the only bill that as a legislator I had a chance to vote on—and I had to vote to send it on to the President to complete the legislative action on even a bad bill. Bad as it was, it was still better than no price control bill at all.

WANT BEST POSSIBLE BILL

As in the past, I have voted for the best that the legislative situation permitted and there was no other choice but to send the bill on to the President. I had voted against all crippling amendments and there was no further chance, without a Presidential veto, of getting a chance to rewrite a new and an effective bill.

The President, in his wisdom and under his constitutional right, has vetoed this bill. This, Mr. Speaker, gives the Congress another chance to try to work out an effective price-control bill—one that will prevent—rather than encourage inflation.

By voting to sustain the President, then, Members are giving the Congress another 15 or 20 days in which to try again to work out a good price-control bill. I am certain we cannot possibly send him a worse one at the end of this 15 or 20 days, and I think—I hope—that we can certainly improve on the feeble effort of the current bill.

Fifteen or twenty days is all that the President asks in this veto—15 or 20 more days of the time of the Congress to give America a real effective price-control bill. Is it not worth these extra days of work to give real meaning to the successful effort of the war years to prevent inflation?

LOSE ALL GOOD EFFECTS OF CONTROL

If we surrender now, without taking this added time, we wipe out the good results of all the headaches, the difficulties, the pain that American business has gone through during the war years to prevent inflation. We will fumble the ball in the last 2 minutes of the game and lose all the good effects of a difficult price-control program with which we have put up during these past years.

The President asks for these 15 or 20 days during which time a temporary act would continue the price-control program as is. I feel that the Congress must and should pass this temporary extension today, and then go to work on writing a real price-control bill for the coming year. We must take action today on this temporary extension or run the danger of forcing the country into a lost week end of inflation. But even if we fail to get action completed today, one lost week end of inflation is better than a year of lost week ends and the attendant DT's of ruinous inflation.

We must sustain the President and then give him this 15 days of temporary continuance. The people of this Nation want and demand effective price control. All the public-opinion polls show that from 70 to 80 percent of the people want effective price control. They do not want legislation for special-interest groups.

I plead with the Members who voted to send this bill on to the President for final action to now sustain him, so that we can have one more chance to prevent the disaster of inflation.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARRY. Will the gentleman tell us what new evidence is going to be presented that we have not heard during the last 2 months?

Mr. MONRONEY. I may say to the gentleman that the people of the country surely are entitled to have the Congress work 15 days more, as much as we want a vacation, to see if we can give them a price-control act.

Mr. BARRY. What is the new evidence?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. In the event that the President's veto is sustained, then the House can immediately adopt a joint resolution to extend the time of the present bill that we are now considering for 20 days?

The SPEAKER. It could.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing that is important to secure both for the individuals of this country, the citizens of the country, and for this Congress, it is to get the matter settled. Then the people will know what they can expect. There is only one way in which it can be settled and that is to override this veto.

I thoroughly agree with the position taken by the gentleman from Michigan, the ranking minority member of this committee, in urging everyone, no matter how they voted on the previous conference report, to vote to override the veto at this time. If you do not do that, no one will have the slightest idea what will happen. I do not think it would be wise to leave the country in that shape.

People will probably withhold goods for a longer period of time if it is their disposition to do so because they will not know what to expect in the next price-control bill, if any, that is presented to the President.

The President has made some suggestions in his veto message. If he had made those suggestions 3 or 4 months ago, if there had been any disposition to find a compromise that was workable, I believe the Congress would have gone along with him. But the trouble was all through it has been a policy of all or nothing. Our only opportunity to settle this question is to override the veto today and put this law on the books. It is a workable substitute. I do not see how any better one could be obtained.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I thoroughly agree with the chairman of my committee that we have brought to the House the best bill that can be given to you. We have worked on it for weeks and months. Not only do I join with him, but I join with the leaders of this House and with the leaders of the other body in making that statement. Think before you vote today. In my opinion, if you vote to sustain the President's veto, you will kill OPA.

I agree with the chairman that we have done the best we can in securing an effective price control, yet I do not agree with him that the President knows more about this subject than he does, because my chairman has lived with this subject for the last 5 years and the President has thousands and thousands of problems and therefore cannot give it the attention it deserves, and I will say that my chairman knows a great deal more about it than Mr. Bowles. Mr. Bowles, deep down in his heart, does not object to this bill so much. He objects to the authority that you are taking away from him and placing in the Department of Agriculture. He objects to the authority of the decontrol board which has concurrent jurisdiction, along with OPA, of decontrol and taking ceilings off of the merited cases. He wants it all. Any man who will not work in harness unless he is the lead horse, so to speak, cannot last very long.

Mr. Porter, in his testimony before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, stated that they did not need any amendment for a successful price control. He said that they could decontrol, when necessary to do so, under the present law, and that the law should not be changed in any way. I told Mr. Porter, who is a very affable gentleman, that he had just about as much chance to get the OPA bill, as written by his department, through the committee and the House as a snowball has to survive in the lower regions.

The main thing the OPA officials objected to, and the advice they gave the President, was that the so-called Wolcott-Taft amendment would authorize higher prices to manufacturers and processors, but they failed to tell the President that the conference report included producers, agricultural producers, along with manufacturers and processors. This amendment would probably not increase the price of any agricultural product, except dairy products, and three-fourths of the complaints have been from the dairy producers.

Why should anyone object to this amendment? It only says that people engaged in business are entitled to prewar profits at a period of free economy, and during that period many high-cost producers did not make a profit. This amendment just simply says that you have a base of what was made during the years of free economy and add to it only the additional cost to the producer. The high cost producer, under this amendment, would not make anything now, but he and those who made a fair profit are entitled to at least what he did obtain during that period and by adding the additional cost since that period it is only fair and equitable to producers at that time. It means that the high-cost producer of that period will not make any profit now.

We all know the only way to defeat inflation is production. This amendment is perfectly fair and will give more production, the goal we are all asking for to defeat inflation, without much higher cost to the consumer. Some are trying to claim that the high-cost producer, under this amendment, would make a greater profit now. If he lost in that base period because he was a high-cost producer, he will not profit very much now, but certainly he is entitled to the increased cost since that period. Let me repeat the thing that will destroy inflation is production, and let me stress that price control is intended to curb people bidding against each other on commodities that are scarce, but at the same time prices must be high enough to keep people producing commodities, and just why anyone would be against the policy of the so-called Wolcott-Taft amendment I cannot understand. Under this amendment, commodities that are scarce cannot get out of bounds by competitive bidding, and on commodities that are so necessary the producer must have an incentive, and, therefore, he is entitled to at least a profit that a good businessman made in prewar days

The amendment may raise the price of some things, but not many. It is conceded by all, so far as agriculture is concerned, it probably will raise prices only on dairy products and on these it will be very little. So far as clothing is concerned, if you do not give a profit to the producer he will not produce, or if he does produce he will retain the merchandise in warehouses until he can secure a legitimate profit. I feel that some manufacturers are obtaining too much profit, but many others who are producing scarce articles do not make enough to stay in business. It is very difficult to have a yardstick for all the producers of clothing, and the only fair yardstick I know, not only for producers of clothing, but of food and everything else, is that they all be given the same profit they received in a period when we had a free economy. Not only would this be fair, but this would bring full production in a short time.

I think the OPA has done a fairly good job in holding down inflation. Of course, we have some inflation. We will always have inflation as long as we have war and spend as much money as we have during the war and since. It is estimated that the purchasing price of the dollar now is about 70 cents. That shows we have inflation, but nothing like we had following World War I. A few years after World War I the purchasing power of the dollar went down to about 40 cents. The OPA officials estimated that if they could hold the value of the dollar down to 60 cents it would be a good job. I admit that some few things will go higher under the bill agreed to by the conferees; but if the producers of these commodities will produce more, which will defeat inflation, I believe, in the end, if the present bill is adopted, your dollar will be worth at least 60 cents, and you will have a contented people because they will realize the fairness of the law.

Let me repeat that I think this is a good bill in the present emergency, after the war is over, at least after the shooting is over, if properly administered, and that the leaders of our party in the House and in the other body, and also the leaders of the Republican Party in the House and the other body, agree that this is the only fair bill for price control that can be obtained now. I believe this bill, if properly administered, will give incentive to all producers and will stop the black markets in lumber, meats, dairy products, and everything else. I think the President has been badly advised in recognizing the views of Mr. Bowles and one or two other men who are anxious to work alone and not in harness in preference to leaders of both parties in both bodies in securing a workable price-control law in the present emergency.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be permitted to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, if Mr. Bowles in his bitterness and the President in his disappointment would now turn their efforts and influence toward production and more production which is after all the answer to most of the world's problems, instead of trying to sell the country on the idea that we are going to have uncontrolled inflation, they would do much to allay certain fears that are so widespread at this moment. For after all, "The only thing we have to fear is fear."

Maximum production together with the cooperation on the part of the public not to purchase anything except necessities would, I am sure, control inflation and go far toward helping to stabilize our economy.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the House a few minutes ago received the message of the President vetoing the OPA bill. The question now before us is, Shall the House pass the bill notwithstanding the veto of the President? We passed the bill in the House by a vote of 265 to 105. An overwhelming majority of Democrats and Republicans voted for the compromise bill. I was one of the 265. The 105 votes against the bill represented two groups. One group insisted that OPA be continued another year without the changes. The other group was against any extension whatsoever. It will require a two-thirds vote to override the veto of the President. The President has been warned heretofore time and again by his friends and his leaders in the House and Senate that a veto of this will would kill OPA, but the President ignored the advice of Speaker RAYBURN, Democratic Leader MCCORMACK, Mr. SPENCE in charge of the bill, Senator BARKLEY, and Senator MCKELLAR, the President pro tempore in the Senate, and no doubt he accepted the advice of Chester Bowles and others who desired to continue for at least another year these war-emergency controls over agriculture, industry, and the American people. These Democratic leaders, as well as Republicans, have been studying this price-control problem for more than 4 years. They really know more about it than the President, Mr. Bowles, and others who urged him to veto this bill. They seem to think that, if they could kill the OPA bill, that they could force through the Congress a resolution to continue the life of the OPA without change. The Roosevelt and Truman administrations, because of the war emergency, secured almost unlimited control over the American people, agriculture, industry, and commerce. Although the war has been over in Europe for nearly 15 months and in Japan nearly a year, they refuse to relinquish these war emergency controls. Now is some modification necessary?

Many able Members of the House and Senate and countless millions of Americans in agriculture, industry, and in all walks of life insisted that we could not have recovery in this country under present OPA. They pointed to the fact that after 4 years of OPA, scarcity and famine stalked through the richest agricultural and the greatest industrial country of the world. Poultry and livestock were dying because of the lack of necessary food. The health and lives of the American people were threatened because of the lack of food and other necessities. I am receiving daily pleading wires and letters from the people and businessmen of my district stating that workers were forced to quit their employment because of the lack of food, and they also stated that poultry and livestock were dying because of the lack of feed.

It was claimed that the OPA would prevent the rise of prices, black markets, and inflation. We all know that prices have rapidly and steadily risen. Many commodities have increased from 25 to more than 200 percent. Black markets have increased by leaps and bounds, so that today it is generally admitted that 75 percent of the transactions are handled in some form or another of the black market and, of course, the threat of inflation has steadily grown stronger. There have been appropriated by the Congress and made available approximately $4,500,000,000 in the way of subsidies which the OPA insisted was necessary to help keep down prices. The Congress has appropriated hundreds of millions of dollars to provide the salary and other expenses of more than 60,000 office holders. The OPA has had almost unlimited power over the American people and all of their activities for approximately 4 years and yet we find this country in the worst condition it has ever been in.

Literally millions of people have been insisting that there must be a change. They say the OPA has failed to realize the purposes for which it was set up. To wit: Keep down prices, prevent black markets, provide for an equitable distribution of available supplies, and prevent inflation. To this appeal those engaged in industry, agriculture, and commerce, as well as the American people, the President, Chester Bowles and his crowd have insisted that the Congress extend the life of the OPA with all of its war powers and with billions in subsidies and more than 60,000 office holders. The House and Senate decided to make a thorough investigation of the whole subject and to that end bills were introduced in the House and Senate to extend the life of the OPA. These bills were referred to the Banking and Currency Committees of the House and Senate. Chester Bowles and his associates and others who insisted on an extension with no change and the representatives of agriculture, industry, and business and others who insisted there must be changes, and many of the very best experts in the land on this subject testified before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House and the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate. I know of no other proposed legislation that has been given more thorough hearings than these bills. It turned out on cross-examination Mr. Bowles and others, that they each and every one admitted that OPA had not achieved its objectives. They admitted that there should be changes.

The Banking and Currency Committee of the House, made up largely of Democrats, reported favorably a bill which provided for many changes to the OPA. This bill came to the House. It was debated and considered for many days where additional amendments were adopted by an overwhelming majority and the bill, as finally amended, was approved by a vote of 265 to 105 and as we have pointed out, an overwhelming majority of Democrats and a very substantil majority of Republicans voted for the bill. It then went to the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate. That committee held exhaustive hearings and all groups were given the fullest opportunity to appear and give their views, that committee, controlled by the Democrats, made other substantial changes and reported the bill favorably to the Senate. In the Senate the bill was debated and considered at great length. The Democrats have a very substantial majority in the Senate as well as in the House. The Senate passed the amended OPA bill by a vote of approximately 3 to 1. As there was some difference between the Senate bill and the House bill it was necessary for them to go to conference. The conferees, made up of Republicans and Democrats of the Banking and Currency Committees of the House and Senate, spent about 2 weeks in considering the two bills and finally the conferees agreed upon a compromise bill and submitted in their report to their respective Houses, this compromise bill. The compromise bill came up in the House and was debated and considered and was adopted by an overwhelming majority. The compromise bill was taken up in the Senate and discussed for some days and the Senate adopted it by a vote of more than 2 to 1.

When the compromise bill was up in the House Speaker RAYBURN, Democratic Leader MCCORMACK, and our colleague, Mr. SPENCE, chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, took the floor and urged the House to adopt the conference report, the compromise bill, and stated unless the compromise bill was adopted there would be no OPA extension bill passed. The ranking Republican of Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] on the Banking and Currency Committee of the House and other Republicans stated that they fully concurred in what Speaker RAYBURN, Mr. MCCORMACK, and Mr. SPENCE had said. The records show that Senator BARKLEY and other leading Democrats in the Senate told their colleagues that if this conference report, the compromise bill, was defeated it would mean the death of the OPA and there would be no OPA legislation. With all the statements and consideration the House and Senate, by an overwhelming majority, adopted the conference report containing the compromise bill and it then went to the President. Speaker RAYBURN, Democratic Leader MCCORMACK, Senator BARKLEY, Democratic leader in the Senate, Senator MCKELLAR, Democrat, of Tennessee and President pro tempore of the Senate, all of them able men and strong friends of the President, called on him and urged him to approve the bill that was so strongly supported by the House and Senate, but Mr. Bowles and some others urged the President to veto it and we have his veto now before us. He urges the House and Senate to sustain his veto. He and his administration have no doubt put plenty of pressure on Members of the House and Senate. Because of the pressure and influence of the administration we may not secure a two-thirds majority to override the President's veto, but I am quite certain that a majority of the Members of the House will vote to pass the bill over the President's veto. Quite a number of Members of the House, Democrats and Republicans, who are opposed to any extension or any form of OPA, of course, will vote to sustain the President's veto and the vote will not correctly reflect the true sentiment against OPA.

SUBSIDIES

We pointed out that Congress has, through the urgency of the administrations of President Roosevelt and President Truman, voted and made available approximately $4,500,000,000 for subsidies. This money was taken out of the tax and bond money of the American people. The OPA said that it was necessary to keep down prices. The way it was used to keep down prices was that we took the money out of the Treasury and paid part of the grocery and store-account bills of the Rockefellers, the Fords, the Morgans, and others of great wealth, as well as other people of little wealth. The price of their butter, meat, cheese, and other commodities was reduced by so much per pound—paid to the producers, processors, and distributors. Is it not strange indeed that our Government would borrow money, increase the national debt, to aid in paying the grocery bill of the American people and at a time when they had more money to spend than any other time in our history? Why was this? It was simply to fool the American people. They were getting a reduced price on the goods they purchased by the Government taking their own bond and tax money and paying part of their store bills. Of course, this borrowed money will bear interest, and they and their children, and children's children will have to pay interest and the principal.

The vetoed bill provides for the gradual elimination of these subsidies. Our Government has been going into the red for the last 15 consecutive years. We cannot balance the budget or reduce the tax burden of the American people so long as we indulge in deficit financing. But with all the subsidies prices have gone up, and up all the way from 25 percent to more than 200 percent on many of the articles of necessities. The OPA has not kept down prices. The black markets have increased by leaps and bounds. Every American housewife, as well as our citizens generally, now know that by some scheme or other the OPA prices are disregarded either in actual price or in quantity or quality of goods. The American people generally know that black markets have been produced through the unwise policies, the Executive orders, directives, rules, regulations, and interpretations, and other onerous conditions imposed upon legitimate business in this country by OPA. Some of the Federal judges who have been trying the OPA cases have declared that scarcely any business could remain in business and live up to the onerous conditions placed upon legitimate business by the OPA. It is a sad commentary when a great people in a great country with the greatest agriculture, and the most efficient industries of any people in the world are forced to indulge in black markets or be driven out of business. Hundreds of thousands, large and small, business concerns have been driven out of business and destroyed by the OPA. It has caused millions and millions of decent American people to resort to practices that are entirely foreign to our country and to our people. There must be some changes in the OPA to correct these conditions. Our own Federal Government has encouraged the black markets. The OPA put a ceiling on wheat, corn, and other grains. The Government came along and offered a bonus of 30 cents more a bushel on corn and wheat to the owners of these grains who would make their wheat and corn available for the Government to give away in foreign lands.

In other words, the Government paid 30 cents above ceiling price, with the result that the wheat and corn were turned over to the Government. Our processors of corn and wheat could not pay more than the ceiling price with the net result that 90 percent of our mills processing corn and wheat have been forced to close down and we have a great shortage of meal and flour, and with the further result that we are without feed for our livestock, dairy cattle, and poultry, and yet we have persons who say there must be no change in the OPA.

The Federal Government, with its excessive borrowings and its deficit financing, has contributed more to inflation than all other causes. The $4,500,000,000 of subsidies adds fuel to the flame of inflation. The sale of tens of billions of bonds and the printing and distribution of paper money adds to the threat of inflation, and now this administration proposes to sell $3,750,000,000 worth of bonds for a loan of that sum to Great Britain. The Government, as we have pointed out, bought hundreds of billions of bushels of grain and millions of tons of various other commodities and paid for them through the sale of bonds and shipped these grains and commodities to foreign countries. These transactions, of course, cut down the amount of consumer goods—food, clothing, and so forth. These, of course, added to the flames of inflation.

A few years ago our New Deal administration was killing millions of cattle, hogs, pigs, and sheep, burning millions of bushels of grain, plowing under crops to bring about a scarcity. They adopted a new technique and that was to establish the OPA under Leon Henderson and Chester Bowles. Through their oppressive and unwise policies they have destroyed hundreds of thousands of productive enterprises. They have been the greatest enemies of private competitive business. This cut down production. We now have great scarcity in 2,000 or more necessary commodities of every kind. The answer to high prices, black markets, inflation, and scarcity is plenty. We cannot have plenty without full production. There cannot be full production under the blighting influences and the strangling directives, regulations, and rules imposed upon agriculture and industry. If this administration will give proper consideration to the needs of the American people, encourage production, and will quit deficit financing and the increase of taxes, prices will soon be brought under control, black markets will disappear, and inflation will no longer disturb us.

Bowles and company have tried to have private enterprise and full production go forward by fixing prices less than cost of production. This is one of the main causes of scarcity in this country. We cannot expect people on the farms or in industry to receive less than their cost of production. This bill on that point merely provides that the producers shall receive the actual cost of production, plus a reasonable profit based on the 1941 prices. Producers are entitled to a price that will cover the actual cost of production and a reasonable profit. The failure of the OPA to recognize this great fundamental American principle of right and justice has discouraged production and intensified scarcity. It is now agreed that 75 percent of our commodities and consumer goods are handled in the black markets. A careful check-up shows the American people, on an average, pay 25 percent above the OPA price in black markets. The American people have nearly $150,000,000,000 of liquid assets to buy what they want. If they cannot get it at OPA prices, then they get it in the black markets.

The OPA must be modified so as to restore legitimate and honest business, increase production, and give to the American people consumer goods of ascertained quality and honest prices. The OPA has helped to establish the reputation that was declared by one of our distinguished colleagues some time ago—that this is a government of tyranny, oppression, favoritism, and corruption. If we listen to the Bowles and other radicals we shall never get from under the oppressive wartime controls and our free economy will be destroyed.

This is Saturday afternoon, June 29. The Congress does not meet on Sunday. The OPA Act expires tomorrow night, Sunday, June 30. The President, at this late hour insists that the Congress now pass a resolution extending the OPA as is, in the face of the fact that it has not accomplished either one of its purposes. The House and Senate and its committees considered this whole subject with very great care for 4½ months. The Members of the House and Senate are quite as anxious as anybody to protect the people in their own districts and in their own States and the American people as a whole. The President has cut down with a stroke of his pen and thrown out the window the result of their labors and cast upon us at this late hour, only a few hours, to get through a resolution extending this OPA as is, when nearly everybody believes there must be substantial changes. His leaders and friends in the House and Senate advised him correctly when they told him that if he vetoed this bill it would mean the death of the OPA.

Under the rules of the House and Senate there would be no way to get through such a resolution today or even if the House and Senate worked until midnight tomorrow night. We have heard today that a number of the President's leaders and friends in the Senate would not give consideration to any such resolution. No such resolution could be passed in the House today.

I am voting to override the President's veto so that the bill as passed by the House and Senate may become law. I am unwilling to vote to sustain the veto, which means that there would be no price control whatever after June 30. The President must assume full responsibility for killing the OPA. Mr. Bowles has spent billions in subsidies, and he has spent millions in propaganda. He has deceived millions of good Americans. He has from day to day misrepresented the facts, grossly and wilfully, and deceived many American people. If the President wants to listen to Mr. Bowles instead of the elected representatives of the districts and the States and his own leaders in the House and Senate, he will have to bear the blame for destroying this agency at this time. I certainly would not vote for the continuance of the OPA without substantial changes to protect the rights and interests of the American people.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I have consistently voted for the extension of OPA without crippling amendments. The bill providing for the extension was introduced in the House on April 8, 1946, so that it has now been under continuous consideration for approximately 3 months. When the report of the conference committee was before this body several days ago the managers on the part of the House stated that the bill then presented was the best that could be agreed upon by the Senate and the House. In view of this fact I voted for the bill although it contained objectionable provisions.

The same bill is before us again under similar conditions. I am convinced that it is the best bill that we can get. If the President's veto is sustained there is at least a grave danger that all price controls will end tomorrow at midnight. This bill is preferable to none at all and if it is enacted it can be subsequently amended as circumstances may require.

I am unwilling to cast a vote which may result in killing the OPA. I shall, therefore, vote to override the President's veto.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, today on this floor someone asked the question, "What is new in this matter of OPA?" And I welcome the opportunity to answer: There is one thing new that should give heart to the people, and that is the veto of the President of the United States, wherein he declares to the world that he has the intestinal fortitude to be the defender of the rank and file of the American people.

Mr. Speaker, it was on June 15, after listening to the Senate debate and the roll call on the OPA in the Senate Chamber, I phoned the White House and expressed my opinion that what had taken place was terrible. I further said the measure should be vetoed, and that I did not feel that any Representative, regardless of his party, having the best interest of the people at heart, would dare to return to his home and face an electorate under a situation so brazen in its attempt to abandon the best interests of the Nation.

Today the Members of the House, as well as the Senate are confronted with that very proposition. And while there has been much talk setting forth arguments, eloquently phrased but void of reason, why no change could be made in the law as passed, nevertheless the very apprehension voiced on the occasion is significant of the guilt attendant to such utterances, for a designed delay of 4 months on the part of Congress, now presents itself in all significance.

Let the country realize that the bill was presented to the President by a dilatory Congress in its dying twilight hour; and in my opinion designedly so. Where, I ask, were the friends of the Chief Executive of this Nation to permit this situation that has come to pass? He surely must have been regarded as one unfamiliar with delays and procrastination. Now he has risen to the occasion, exercising his prerogative of veto-champion of the people, protector of their resources, a devotee to the veteran and his GI rights, and a defender of those with set incomes.

In my opinion, the President's stature mounted this day, while the chicanery and subterfuge of the would-be champions of OPA dwindled to dwarf proportions. His voice was mild but he carried the big stick.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, every time they have had the same old compromise under the same conditions, and you extend OPA. It is the same old baloney. OPA has gone on and on producing less and less and less until today they are even killing the little chickens so that they can feed the American people the chicken feed.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. In the President's veto message he manifests a great interest in efficient price control. If he were interested in efficient price control he could have discharged or fired Chester Bowles months ago, could he not?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Yes; when we first started calling him Bottleneck Bowles.

This is not a Republican fight nor a Democratic fight nor a personal fight, this is the same fight that is going on all over the world, from Chiang Kai-shek and all around the world and back to Stalin. The fight is totalitarianism against freedom, and OPA is totalitarianism.

The wartime of Council of Defense, using American taxpayers' money, got out a book, presumably given to them by the inside Nazi officials, showing that the way they destroyed free enterprise in Germany was to sing paeans of praise for private enterprise. The key to the program was price control, confiscatory price ceilings, and enslavement through subsidies.

The American system that grew to be so successful is too complicated for free men with all their energy to be controlled by any one person or group of persons. The good Lord himself could not control it successfully, and the Lord would know better than to try.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, I share the feeling of my chairman, the feeling of disappointment that the President did not sign this bill. I voted for the conference report. I also appreciate the position taken by my good friend the ranking minority member of the committee [Mr. WOLCOTT], whom I respect very much, as we all do. I am sorry that we are confronted with this decision. I am not sure that I can help anyone. I can only offer my reasons for following the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] in voting to sustain the veto in this case, although I do not always agree with the President, and have demonstrated that on previous occasions when our responsibility, as I viewed it, was to override a veto. But in this instance in a very solemn situation one has to do what he thinks is his own duty, and I shall not question the attitude of any other. I shall appeal, however, to the gentleman from Michigan, in case we could pass this brief extension of 2 weeks—I believe he will do this—to go into this problem and to help present to the President a bill that we can convince him he can live with, one he can accept and administer.

The gentleman from Michigan will remember when the President of the National Association of Manufacturers appeared before our committee I commented upon our dilemma and pointed out that there was something to be said for his position, which was, "Let us do away with controls altogether." I responded rather sympathetically to his appeal that we could outrun inflation. It was a bold thing which he suggested and we were not bold enough to do it. I personally would not be quite willing to do it. Yet, between his position and the position of those who favor this bill as it is, in spite of the President's objections, it seems to me there is much to be said for the position of the manufacturers for lifting all controls. I am afraid that if this bill becomes law, we will simply have a continuing harassment of our businessmen with none of the benefits of a sound price-control law. So I shall vote to sustain and then for a 2 weeks' extension. We should then make an effort to work out a constructive measure upon which we can agree without reference to partisan politics. The decision is between that course and a bill that will prove ineffectual and will please no one and I fear will actually force us into an inflationary situation.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, when I came to the office this morning, I felt there was something in the atmosphere around Capitol Hill which had not been here before. I felt that there was an increased confidence, and a renewal of courage, and an obvious determination to return this Nation to the position of strength and security which the powers of production have always assured it in the past.

It was the custom, in earlier days, on momentous occasions, that poems should be written, commemorating those occasions. So, Mr. Speaker, I wrote a poem and this is it:

The buyers cheer,
The farmers shout,
Production's near,
For Bowles is out.

Mr. Speaker, I was one of those who voted against the conference report. I voted that way because I wished to do away with the deceptive, disastrous subsidy policy which was imposed upon this country. I wanted other changes. I wanted foodstuffs in the hands of people who understood farm production and distribution. I wanted Mr. Bowles' political ambitions transferred to some other field.

Today my choice is between the bill the President vetoed, or no bill at all. I am not at all sure that we would not be better off without any bill at all, and thus no OPA. However, I have consistently held out for the transfer of food control to the Secretary of Agriculture, and for industrial decontrol in some orderly fashion. I have particularly felt that rentals should be decontrolled carefully, perhaps through local authorities, which now have that right.

With these points in mind, Mr. Speaker, I am today voting to override the veto, and I think other Representatives from the farm areas, where we do not like the administration of OPA, will decide to vote to override, even though we voted against the conference committee report, desiring further consideration then. However, Mr. Speaker, I want no misunderstanding on the matter of a temporary extension. I shall not vote to extend the OPA, under its present administration and present regulations, for 3 weeks, nor for 3 days, nor for 3 minutes. The Congress sent an extension bill to the White House. It may not have been a perfect bill but it was infinitely better than the present situation in OPA. The President chose to veto that bill.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GALLAGHER].

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the conference report with great misgivings, hoping that the President could find something that would save it. I want to print in the RECORD these two articles regarding the largest renter of apartment houses in Minnesota, together with a letter to one of his tenants. This letter concerns one particular tenant, but he has many of them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR AND INDUSTRY,
INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION OF MINNESOTA,
St. Paul, June 3, 1946.

Hon. WILIAM J. GALLAGHER,
House of Representatives Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Enclosed find copy of letter served on me by registered mail June 1, 1946. The paragraph referring to my personal attitude toward Harold Warner is difficult to understand. I saw him 7 years ago when I first rented the apartment and have never contacted him personally or by telephone since that time. Nor have I ever interviewed any of his tenants on any of his affairs.

The Warner Holding Co. is one of the largest apartment-house owners in the Twin Cities, the apartment in which I reside alone containing about 70 rental units. I am in no position to comment on either the profits or losses of this concern, except to know that during the last 3 years not one dollar has been expended on my apartment in the way of painting, papering, decorating, or for any other purpose.

There is no doubt that most of us are becoming irritated by too much Federal interference in our daily lives. However, if only a few real-estate operators in Minnesota adopt policies similar to those indicated by the Warner Holding Co. it would result in a chaotic condition all over the State. Owners of property may be and probably are entitled to increases over the 1942 rental basis, but some reasonable limitation should be placed on such increases.

As far as I am personally concerned the threats of Mr. Warner do not bother me any. Fortunately I am so situated that I can take care of an emergency if he creates one for me. There are thousands of people in the Twin Cities alone, to say nothing of many other communities in the State, who are not that fortunate.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,
Yours respectfully,
J. D. WILLIAMS.

WARNER HOLDING CO.,
Minneapolis, Minn., May 29, 1946.

J. D. WILLIAMS,
Minneapolis, Minn.

DEAR MR. WILLIAMS: Our real estate operations for our fiscal year just concluded show that we lost over $10,000.

You must have known for many months that you have been getting your apartment at least 25 percent cheaper than it should have been because it was frozen by arbitrary action of a Federal Government bureau. You must have known that your individual other costs have increased greatly. Ours have also in the same if not greater proportion.

Your rental terms as frozen are $55 per month less $5 discount if paid on or before the fifth. In all these months that our income has been rigidly held at the March 1942 rate, you could have voluntarily withheld paying your rent until the sixth of the month and then tendered us the gross rate of $55 had you chosen to do so. In this manner you could have shown us that you realized that we had been victimized for these many months and signified your sympathy in a tangible form; however you chose to selfishly pay your rent before the lapse of the discount date.

Apart from the above, during your tenancy you have been uncooperative and arbitrary in your attitude, and in addition, interviewed other tenants and caused us a lot of trouble.

As it now stands, the Emergency Price Control Act will expire June 30, 1946. Minnesota law requires 30 days notice of intention to increase rent. You are therefore hereby notified that in the event the Emergency Price Control Act is not renewed nor extended after June 30, 1945, your rent for the premises you now occupy from and after July 1, 1946, will be $120 per month with a $5 discount, if paid on or before the 5th of the month, making net $115.

Yours truly,
WARNER HOLDING CO.,
By H. L. WARNER.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

THE PRESIDENT'S VETO MESSAGE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the conference report on the price-control bill with reluctance. Had I had the information before me that was given to us by the President this morning, I would have been obliged to vote against it. I believe he knows more about the needs of the entire Nation than any one of us here. He is interested in the people, not in a few of the manufacturers or beneficiaries that have spent millions in trying to defeat this legislation.

It seems to me that the people who have been trying to kill price control, and who have done most to bring about the bill which the President, as the Chief Executive of the Nation, was forced to reject, are speaking for only a small number of speculative industrialists, financiers, and merchants. These men, and it distresses me to have to say it, seem to have no thought except to reap a quick profit. Their philosophy is that of boom and bust; they are one with the French tyrant who said grandiosely, "After me, the deluge."

NO ONE WINS

The truth is that no one wins in this kind of a race with inflation. There are vast forces in motion which, left to the winds of chance, can but blow up a storm that may destroy all chance of peace and prosperity for our time.

Our only chance to win out, at home and abroad, is to control these powerful forces as well as we are able by laws and regulations self-imposed. It is, Mr. Speaker, and I say it sadly, too late to do more than put a heavy brake on these runaway prices; for already the cost of living, in spite of the best efforts of this administration, has gone up and up and up, 40 percent, 50 percent, 60 percent, above prewar prices. Some items are selling at double their 1940 price today.

PRODUCTION IS UP 69 PERCENT

We hear that production is the answer; yet Federal Reserve Board and Civilian Production Administration reports show that in mid April—less than 9 months after VJ-day—civilian production was higher than ever before in our history. Civilian production at that time, Mr. Speaker, was 69 percent higher than in our last prewar years—1935 to 1939—and rising. In April 52,000,000 people were at work producing goods and services. That was more than ever before worked and produced in peacetime.

The "shortages" are in lines of high demand. More people have more money to buy more things than ever before in American history; spendable income of the average family is twice as great as in 1939, I am very pleased to be able to say; and there are, of course, some particular items which are in short supply as compared with prewar.

THIS IS NOT A PARTY FIGHT

This is not just a Republican fight, or a Democratic fight.

It is a fight between the people, the national interest, and the greed and avarice of big business which has misrepresented the issue for the sake of bigger and bigger profits—while they last.

It is a struggle between the desire of the people to make a living, and the desire of selfish interests to make a killing.

CORPORATE PROFITS ARE HIGH

Mr. Speaker, I have before me a graph published in the Survey of Current Business, an official and authoritative publication of the Department of Commerce. That graph shows that even after taxes corporate profits have been maintained at practically 1929 levels for 4 years, from 1941 through 1945.

And still they cry for more and more profit.

INFLATION WILL NOT HURT THE RICH

Mr. Speaker, I have here also a report from the Treasury Department, which I ask unanimous consent to insert, which shows that here in the United States there are 620 men and women who receive incomes in salaries and bonuses amounting to more than $75,000 a year. In the highest brackets some of these people received almost a half million dollars in 1945.

The end of price control will not hurt them, Mr. Speaker, but these are the high-paid servants of the financial powers of Wall Street who have demanded the end of OPA for the greater profit of Big Business, who have hoodwinked the small retailers into making the same demands, and who have carried on a long and expensive and bitter campaign to get rid of OPA, or to strip OPA of all effective powers to save us from a ruinous inflation.

ENEMIES OF FREE ENTERPRISE

They have not hesitated to carry their campaign into the very halls of Congress, Mr. Speaker. The Washington Daily News spoke strongly yesterday in its editorial. The News is not a radical paper; and its warning is not to be taken as any liberal outpourings; in fact, this is not a question of liberalism or conservatism, of Democrats or Republicans. It is a question of saving America from another 1929.

Let me read from the final paragraph of that editorial, which so clearly explains the stake of business in price control:

90 PERCENT OF PEOPLE WANT OPA

Any manufacturer or merchant who sees the present situation as an opportunity or excuse for profiteering is an enemy of the free-enterprise system. There never was a time when voluntary restraint in pricing was more necessary, or more certain to pay big long-run dividends.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, 90 percent of the American people plead and beg with us to save OPA.

Among the hundreds of letters I have received pleading for extension of a strong price-control act—letters from workers, from businessmen, from dentists, and lawyers, and housewives, and plumbers, and workers, from stenographers, and annuitants and school teachers, letters from American citizens who have to make every dollar count—there is one that stands out, and which should open the eyes of all those who refuse to see.

TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS FOR A $5 DRESS?

Coming from an outstanding Chicago businessman, it makes clear what the end of OPA will mean as he says, "We do not want to pay $25 for a $5 dress, nor $125 for a $30 suit of clothes."

This letter is from Mr. Allison Waugh, head of the Allison Waugh Financial Development Co., at 105 South La Salle Street, Chicago. I desire to call special attention to Mr. Waugh's warning that our returned servicemen are finding out that their GI loans at 4 percent are no bargains if they have to pay that rate on a 100-percent inflation of the real value.

This is the text of Mr. Waugh's letter:

JUNE 20, 1946.

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SABATH: We folks back "in the provinces" are beginning to feel more and more that in the political game too much attention is being given to pressure groups and too little to "the common peepul." We begin to realize that the manufacturers, processors, and other suppliers on the one side and labor, big business, etc., on the other side, exist solely because of some 140,000,000 men and women and youngsters who buy merchandise, build homes, save money, and seek the famed Four Freedoms for themselves as well as for other peoples.

Increasing thousands are dismayed at the prospect that the National Legislature will remove the only protection available against inflation, against an increasing rise in all prices which cannot be adjusted until panic ensues. We do not look with favor on rents going to a 200-percent increase. We do not want to pay $25 for a $5 dress nor $125 for a $30 suit of clothes. We do not want stocks to rise to those levels which they will reach in this approaching inflation, to crash once again as they did, to the ruination of millions of us.

We do not want the floods started down as a mountain torrent to the sea of oblivion, with only a large mesh net attached to the sides of the stream so as to permit the saving of the largest fish, our millionaires, permitting all of us small fry to be swept away.

Certainly OPA has its faults; so does everything worth-while and good, even our Supreme Court, but OPA is the only thing which can save us. Organized pressure groups, big business, NMA, and those in the favored class insist on our being almost destroyed in this campaign to destroy OPA.

Thousands are talking buyers' strikes, defeats of our Senators and Congressmen who permit this destruction. We have heard even worse. We are not organized, we have no voice, but we do buy the merchandise, and we do pay the bills. We do not want OPA so emasculated as to be impotent. We want OPA to function. We do not want a recurrence of that period from 1929 to 1934. We are going to vote against the men in Congress who will not support us who elect and maintain those men.

We know we are giving the veterans nothing, when we offer GI loans at 4 percent, because a loan for $5,000 (the real value of the home) at 5 percent would be infinitely better than a loan at 4 percent on a $10,000 inflated valuation. These boys are beginning to know it, also.

Cordially yours,

ALLISON WAUGH.

Consequently, there is nothing else for me to do but to vote to sustain the President, believing that he is sincere, that he is honest, and that he desires to save the Nation from inflation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a report from the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington.

The Secretary of the Treasury today made public, in accordance with a provision of the Internal Revenue Code, a list of individuals receiving from corporations compensation for personal services in excess of $75,000 for the calendar year 1944 and fiscal year ending in 1945 as well as a supplemental report for the calendar year 1943 and fiscal years ended in 1944.

The Secretary of the Treasury is required by section 148 (f) of the code, as amended by section 407 of the Revenue Act of 1939, to make public the names of such individuals as were reported by employing corporations in their income-tax returns. The list compiled shows the amounts paid to officers and employees by reporting corporations in the form of salary, commission, bonus, or other compensation for personal services.

Section 148 (f) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended by section 407 of the Revenue Act of 1938, is as follows:

"Compensation of officers and employees: Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, every corporation subject to taxation under this chapter shall, in its return, submit a list of the names of all officers and employees of such corporations and the respective amounts paid to them during the taxable year of the corporation by the corporation as salary, commission, bonus, or other compensation for personal services rendered, if the aggregate amount so paid to the individual is in excess of $75,000.

"The Secretary shall compile from the returns made a list containing the names of, and the amounts paid to, each such officer and employee and the name of the paying corporation and shall make such list available to the public. It shall be unlawful for any person to sell, offer for sale, or circulate, for any consideration whatsoever, any copy or reproduction of any list, or part thereof, authorized to be made public by this act or by any prior act, relating to the publication of information derived from income-tax returns; and any offense against the foregoing provision shall be a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That nothing in this sentence shall be construed to be applicable with respect to any newspaper, or other periodical publication entitled to admission to the mails as second-class matter."

The names of the corporations and of the officers and employees who received compensation in excess of $75,000, as reported to the Secretary by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, are as follows:

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I am speaking this morning as one of that group of fair-minded Republicans, those people who feel that they are here representing the public, neither big business nor labor to the exclusion of all others.

May I say, on behalf of the public, I will vote to override the President's veto and sustain the modified OPA bill as the best price control we can get under present conditions. I believed on June 25 that the position unanimously taken by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], who is the senior Republican member of the Banking and Currency Committee; the majority leader of the House, Mr. MCCORMACK; the Republican minority leader of the House, Mr. MARTIN; and by our eminent Speaker, Mr. RAYBURN, was correct. I disagree with my friend, the distinguished gentleman and Democratic Representative from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY], who states that he feels he voted for an unworkable and inconsistent bill when the compromise OPA bill was before us.

I believe the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE], chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, was correct when he said on June 25 he felt the bill was workable. I am also pleased to agree with this statement of our Speaker on the floor of the House. He said clearly on that date:

Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a moment. We have in this Chamber this afternoon a most peculiar situation.

And, I might add, we have it again this afternoon, 5 days later.

Two elements are warring against this conference report. One of those want no price control at all. If this conference report is voted down, they will have their way. Others say that they want more control than is contained in this bill. If this conference report is voted down, they will get nothing, because there will not, in my opinion, be any price-control legislation at all.

We have not heard any variation from that statement of the Speaker that there will be no price-control legislation at all if this bill is not enacted.

If this House will not vote up this conference report, it will certainly not vote for a continuing resolution, continuing the law as it now stands. Even though the House were to pass a continuing resolution, the leadership of the Senate is doubtful if it has a chance on earth to pass there. So if we want to control any kind of food prices, if we want to control rents and not have people turned out in the streets, as they will be turned out, the only alternative is to vote for this conference report. The responsibility is here. I will not, as far as I am concerned, by my vote this afternoon, shoulder the responsibility of killing all price control.

I also say that as the representative of the people of the southern part of Pittsburgh and Allegheny County, constituting the Thirty-first District of Pennsylvania, I will not shoulder the responsibility of killing all price control, and will therefore vote to sustain the present compromise OPA bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY].

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I was for the strongest possible price control bill we could get in both the committee and the House and I voted against all crippling amendments. After taking part in the conference and studying both bills then before us, I am convinced this is the strongest possible bill we can get. It is far stronger than either the House or the Senate bill.

Those who refused to sign the conference report did so because the bill was too strong.

To state my beliefs in this 1 minute is difficult, I believe sincerely that if we sustain the President's veto we will get no legislation at all for at least some time after the act expires, and chaos will occur during that period at least.

If we override the President's veto, if we take this bill, there is no reason in the world why the Banking and Currency Committee cannot meet again and consider an additional bill or amendments to this bill. There is no law against that. If we pass this bill we have got something in spite of the amendments which I opposed. I do not like the Taft amendment. It is bound to increase some prices, but there is not a single ceiling taken off anything under this bill as it now stands and it will not cause uncontrolled inflation which will happen if we have no bill at all.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday as follows. This is a part of the statement made in the other body by the majority leader. This is what he said:

> This morning the President of the United States called to the White House the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the majority leader of the House, and the distinguished President pro tempore of the Senate and the majority leader of the Senate, to discuss this legislation.
> With all the force that we could command, in view of the situation which presents itself to us and to him, we urged him to sign the bill when it reached him, on the same ground that I urge that we adopt it here, because the choice is between this bill and nothing. To hope that a joint resolution continuing price controls after next Sunday will be adopted by the two Houses of Congress is an idle dream.
> So I say that in voting on the conference report no Member of the Senate should vote under the delusion that if the bill is defeated we can get another one. The choice is between this bill or nothing at all. It is a choice which we do not like to make, but we have to make it, because it is here before us.

We heard our Speaker in the well of this House say it was this bill or nothing. The committee and the House gave long, careful attention to this bill. What could be accomplished by another resolution extending it 3 weeks? Nothing. You would come back with something, but perhaps something worse. The President is asking for the same OPA bill of the past year and without amendments. I voted against the conference report and would like to see OPA end now on everything except rents and the most essential items of living. It should be ended on meat and dairy products now because more cattle roam our ranges than ever before with less meat on the table. The OPA is directly responsible for this condition.

My colleagues, please consider that the leadership of this House and Senate yesterday called upon the President urging him to approve the conference report. They told the President that it was the best bill he could expect and it was workable and that a continuing resolution could not be passed by Sunday night. Indeed it might not be passed, and the responsibility was the President's. The President refused to follow the good advice of the Democratic leadership of the House and Senate. It is now quite evident that he cleared with Sidney and not with ALBEN BARKLEY and SAM RAYBURN.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, if there be faltering hearts over what to do about the veto message and a possible continuing resolution, let me advance two suggestions that may clarify the condition and that serve as reasons for overriding the President's veto. In the first place, as indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY], I believe we can substantially comply with the President's request for a short period of further study by accepting the conference bill and then having the committees proceed to a reexamination of the matter. Such a course would provide an interim price control under the new bill and still permit an exploration of any new proposal which might be suggested. This certainly meets in large part the President's hopes and desires. Why not override the veto and let this measure go into effect while the search for what the President refers to as a more workable bill is made.

The second reason is that there will be no continuing resolution today. That may sound presumptuous, but let us see. If anybody walks over to the hopper and introduces a bill and asks for its immediate consideration there will be objection. You can be sure of that. It must then go through the regular course to the Banking and Currency Committee. If they get a rule it will require a two-thirds vote on the floor of the House to get consideration of the rule. There will be only one other way to do it, and that is wait until next Tuesday when it can be entertained under suspension. But price control dies when that clock says midnight tomorrow night. Tomorrow, however, is a nonlegislative day.

You therefore have this choice and I think those reasons are very persuasive, in my judgment, under the very rigidity of the rules under which we operate. There can be no continuing resolution for one thing and, secondly, we can satisfy the President of the United States by giving consideration to what the President calls a workable bill in the 15 days that may elapse and still put this on the books.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that most of us are impressed with the statement of the President in the veto message just read. We now have over $29,000,000,000 in circulation with billions more to be poured out by the Treasury as a result of the tremendous spending program that has been authorized by the Congress. Not only have we authorized huge cash outlays for domestic purposes, soldiers' mustering-out pay, veterans' unemployment relief and now soldiers' terminal-leave pay. In addition to these huge flows of money into the channels of trade and business, the money we are lending England and foreign countries will come back to make heavy drafts on the things produced for the sustenance of the people of this country.

Mr. Speaker, the country is facing a desperate situation. I shall vote to sustain the President's veto and I shall vote for a continuing resolution. It is the only solution under the circumstances.

With the assurance that a continuing resolution can be passed in time to prevent the collapse of the OPA price control I shall vote to sustain the President's veto.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, we have been told repeatedly on this floor that the cure for inflation is production. We have given the President all the power that he requires to fix those prices which would bring about production. Now, after all of this period, let us see where we are so far as the question of scarcity of goods is concerned.

The country is short of meat, maple sirup, lemons, bread, butter, cheese, milk, barley, ice cream, candy, pie, cake, fruit sirups, onions, bacon, sugar, fats, doughnuts, molasses, coconut oil, olive oil, cottonseed oil. There is a shortage of salesmen, of train seats, of plane seats, of pharmacists, of hotel rooms, of veterinarians, carpenters, piano makers, gardeners, telephone linemen, painters, cooks, and parlor maids.

Nine months after the fourth consecutive biggest wheat crop on record was raised a cold spring wind was blowing through hundreds of empty grain elevators throughout the Midwest. There are shortages of X-ray tubes, dental gold scrap, burlap bags, Pliofilm, manila cordage, bulldozers, quinidine, power cranes, laboratory and medical instruments, fractional-horsepower motors, circular saws, solder, natural resins, road rollers, electrocardiographs, roofing material, greenhouses, plumbing supplies. Paper is short. Artists cannot buy sable-hair paint brushes. There is a shortage of spare parts, and of theaters.

The country is short of lumber, coal, steel, tin, lead, antimony, textile piece goods, shellac, glass, lead pipe, paint, copper, mercury scrap, platinum scrap. The country is short of men's suits, children's clothing, film, cameras, lenses, towels, sheets, pillowcases, automobiles, trucks, tractors, tires, chewing gum, soft drinks, white shirts, pianos, radios, washing machines, refrigerators, work clothing, maple for high heels, shoe tacks, telephones, and female attire, of which I shall not give a bill of particulars.

And, Mr. Speaker, there are 2,000 more items that are short. That is why we have inflation.

Let us take off the strangle-hold of business and let it produce.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote to override the President's veto and it seems to me that everybody in this House who feels that we should keep some kind of OPA regulations and some kind of rent control, rather than opening the doors sky wide for whatever the fates might have in store for us without even the safeguards of an orderly and planned liquidation of OPA, must support the motion to override the veto.

I comend to you the argument advanced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. It seems to me both arguments are logical, irrefutable, and compelling; because if we fail to override the President's veto today every Member of this House knows that even if a continuing resolution should get over to the other body those who are die-hard opponents of OPA would filibuster it beyond the hour of midnight tonight and on Monday morning OPA controls of every kind would be off.

We retain for ourselves by overriding the President's veto, on the other hand, any of the effective arguments contained in the President's veto message because if certain changes are actually necessary to make OPA legislation workable and administrable, as he insists, we still have the 15 days or the 16 days or the 19 days or the 27 days or whatever time is necessary for the Banking and Currency Committee to come back with corrective amendments so we can correct and improve any administrative problems which may arise.

Mr. Speaker, let us approach our decision in this important hour calmly and dispassionately. Let us examine carefully the situation in which we and the country find ourselves and let us explore thoroughly the possible effects of whatever action we may take this afternoon.

Suppose, Mr. Speaker, that we vote to sustain the President's veto. What then will happen? We must anticipate that all price controls depending upon the authority of Congress will become inoperative at midnight tomorrow and that the country will face the confused situation Monday morning certain to arise from such an abrupt, unanticipated, and disorderly discontinuation of all price and rent controls. In my opinion, it is this that will happen. I cannot believe that the other body will act promptly enough today to avert this situation. In that body any one Senator can block action today. In fact, he can block action for several days. From what we have seen at that end of the Capitol the past few days it seems certain to me that if we vote to sustain the President's veto today we are going to have to depend upon such a slender reed of hope for action continuing OPA today that only the giddiest of optimists can believe it will eventuate. If I am wrong, and a measure continuing the OPA on a tentative and temporary basis is approved today as recommended by the President, we still face the fact that it will be many long days before the many minds of both Houses of Congress and the executive departments can be brought into agreement on OPA legislation. Who can predict accurately what will be the legislative result when and if that meeting of minds does occur? It may be a better OPA bill than the one the President vetoed and it may very well be a much less desirable piece of legislation.

Suppose on the other hand, Mr. Speaker, we vote today to override the President's veto. What then will happen? Chester Bowles will remain out of office as Stabilization Director, to be sure, but few will mourn his passing and most will agree that OPA under some other director is bound to do a better job than it has done under his inept and tomtom pounding guidance. Regardless of how we finally write the law, it is well that Mr. Bowles will no longer be around to pervert its purposes and to stifle production while stimulating propaganda.

What else will happen if we vote today to override the President's veto? In his veto message, President Truman has criticized certain phases of the OPA bill approved in Congress and accepted by both Houses of Congress. He has commended other phases of the bill. Perhaps the President is right and perhaps he is wrong in contending that certain changes in the law and certain phases of the new bill make for unworkability and uncertainty in price control. Time alone can determine that. However, if we override the veto this afternoon and keep OPA in operation we shall have the time and the testimony—the experience and the opportunity—to observe the consequences and to take further congressional action to correct any injustices, inequities, or any unworkable features of the newly rewritten OPA legislation.

Congress will still be here. The Banking and Currency Committee can meet any day. Both Houses of Congress have demonstrated their capacity to act promptly when necessity requires. By retaining OPA as a going concern through overriding the President's veto we also retain the power and the opportunity to refine and improve it as experience dictates. If the President appoints as a successor to Chester Bowles a man of experience and capacity in whom the country and the Congress has confidence, we shall have the benefit of a fresh viewpoint from the administrative angle. The recommendations of this new director will be listened to attentively. Any desirable changes which he can substantiate by convincing evidence can rapidly be written into corrective legislation. Legislation approved today can be changed tomorrow. On the contrary, an OPA set-up which is destroyed today by the Presidential veto may be permanently impaired. It seems to me that we are indeed gambling with fate if we refuse now to override the President's veto and fail to retain OPA controls and keep them operating while we review the situation in the light of the President's arguments and in cooperation with a new and better administrator than the loquacious Chester Bowles.

Mr. Speaker, today's vote just as Tuesday's vote on the final approval or disapproval of the only OPA legislation upon which we then had an opportunity to vote is likely to find Members with directly conflicting points of view voting on the same side of the question. Arrayed against the overriding of the veto we are likely to find not only those who insist that OPA should continue as it is, with no changes, no amendments, no improvements, and no new steps to stimulate production while controlling prices but we are likely also to find on that side Members who are utterly opposed to any further OPA controls of any kind even for the purpose of bringing about an orderly liquidation and discontinuance of OPA. In favor of the motion to override the President's veto we shall find many who believe that some price control is better than none, that under a new director the true purposes of OPA can prevail instead of the political purposes which Mr. Bowles has so largely emphasized, and that a systematic, orderly, planned transition from OPA as it is, to the free economy most of us desire as an eventuality is better by far than an abrupt, unanticipated, unplanned stoppage of OPA next Monday morning as a result of the President's petulant veto.

I do predict, however, that out of the confusion of votes this much will become clear. None of the enemies of price control and OPA will vote to override the President's veto. All those voting to override will be Members who desire some type of controls of rents and prices and who desire to retain the legislation and the set-up we have as a going concern upon which, if necessary, to make new correctives and helpful amendments. All those opposed to OPA and to retention of further controls will be voting to sustain the President's veto even though they will be joined by many who may dramatically proclaim that by such a vote they hope to get a better OPA. They may get a better OPA and they may get none at all. But they take a great and unnecessary gamble with the public's welfare and the veteran's future when they vote to sustain the veto and to stop OPA at midnight tomorrow night in the hope that by so doing they will force their particular price-control philosophies through Congress. If they fail, they and President Truman will be the real executioners of OPA. They must accept the responsibility. They are the ones who have elected to gamble all on this one reckless toss of the dice.

As for me Mr. Speaker, I refuse to gamble so prodigiously with the public's welfare. Let us vote today to override the veto. Let us retain what we have and strive for something better. Let us rescue the President from the angry advisors with whom he has counselled. Let us protect the country against the abrupt shock which may well come from ill-considered action today. Let us continue OPA by overriding the President's veto and if experience and/or evidence then warrant corrective changes and helpful amendments we shall be in position to act intelligently with the assurance that in the meantime none of the controls will have been vacated and we shall not face the possibility of moving from OPA controls to an entirely control-free rental and price situation on a minute's notice and without the benefit of orderly decontrol procedures.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

OPA SCUTTLED BY BOTH HOUSE AND SENATE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, this House passed a bill to extend OPA. The bill, when it left this House, was a scuttled OPA bill. It was absolutely worthless, so far as price control was concerned. Crippling amendments had destroyed it. It went to the Senate, and it did not fare well in the Senate, and when it left the Senate it was more of a scuttled bill, if such a thing was possible.

CONFEREES

The Presiding Officer of the Senate and the Speaker of the House appointed conferees to represent their respective bodies for the purpose of meeting in an effort to iron out the differences between the two Houses. We, the conferees, had two scuttled bills to work on. We were the agents of the House and the Senate. It was our duty to reconcile those differences as well as we could reconcile them. We had a duty to perform. Some of the members of the conference, and I was one of them, were approached and the suggestion was made, "Just let them go ahead and write their own bad bill; make it so bad that the President can easily veto it." We turned that down. It was not the right thing to do. We should work honestly and conscientiously and bring back to you the best bill we could bring back. That is exactly what we did. We voted for the conference report and we voted for the bill. If we had not voted for the conference report we would have been stymied. We would have been right up against the dead line and Congress would have been accused of killing OPA. We had to legislate. How do you legislate? Pass something if you cannot get what you want, and every major law that has ever passed represents a compromise of view or a sacrifice of opinion on the part of practically every Member of this body and the other body.

We were willing to try to compromise, but we had to do something. We had to pass a law and we passed it. The President has vetoed it, and it is not inconsistent for those of us who voted for the best thing we could get to sustain the President's veto, and that is exactly what I am going to do.

The President's message concerning one amendment in this bill is absolutely unanswerable, and that is the Taft amendment. There are several good amendments in that bill—amendments that I would like to vote for in any bill—but you cannot justify the Taft amendment and say that you will have price control. If you vote for the Taft amendment, you vote against price control.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. On the question of voting for the conference report, the gentleman's statement is absolutely correct. The problem today is entirely different than it was the other day. Those who are opposed to it have a perfect right to exercise their judgment today. We voted for the conference report to conclude the legislative process and send the bill to the President of the United States for him to exercise his constitutional duty and responsibility.

Mr. PATMAN. The majority leader is exactly right.

If we were to enact this Taft amendment, it would cause a race between wages and prices. That is exactly what causes inflation in every country on earth. They first have an increase in prices, then the workingmen cannot live on their wages because the prices are too high, and the workingmen get an increase. Then, of course, there has to be an increase in prices, and there is a race between wages and prices. The result is ruinous inflation. A vote for the Taft amendment would be a vote for ruinous inflation.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I wonder whether or not the gentleman subscribed to that administration viewpoint which started out by saying that wages could be raised as much as 50 percent without increasing prices, and if that did not have much to do with the present difficulties?

Mr. PATMAN. I never said that. Nobody on this floor said that. I never heard anyone in a responsible place say it.

Mr. HALLECK. Did not the gentleman hear Mr. Davis say it?

Mr. PATMAN. No; I did not hear him say it.

Mr. HALLECK. Did not the gentleman read in the paper that he said it?

Mr. PATMAN. I did not agree with it if he said it, because I do not believe that way. Anyway, we know that the Taft amendment is a legislative mandate for inflation. That is exactly what it is. It forces inflation. As between this bill as it is now with the President vetoing it and no price control at all, I am willing to risk no price control at all—absolutely. I have thought this question through to the best of my knowledge and ability, and I am ready to have no price control at all rather than have one that absolutely forces ruinous inflation upon this country.

This bill involves the value of the dollar. During the war prices were fixed, and by reason of prices being held down the price of steel, for instance, a commodity that went more into the war machine than any other one commodity, was not increased one penny a ton for five long years, or during the war. By reason of the fact that the prices of the materials that went into the war machine were held down our national debt today is $100,000,000,000 less than it would have been without the OPA. That is an enormous amount. Our tax burden would be increased, our debt would be $100,000,000,000 larger today had it not been for OPA holding down prices during the war on the cost of the war machine alone. On the war cost alone there is $100,000,000,000 saved.

Now we are in the reconversion period. We should take off controls as quickly as possible—no one will dispute that. But as long as commodities and goods are scarce, can we properly protect the public unless we have some way of controlling these scarce goods and commodities? We have voted for generous appropriations for veterans of this war. Of course, we should have done that. We have voted to allow them pensions and compensations and retirement benefits and insurance. Now, then, will we permit the only agency that stands between them and a worthless dollar to be killed? That is the question involved here today. We have 15,200,000 veterans who served during this war. We voted terminal leave for them of three to five billion dollars in addition to all the other benefits. Will we turn around now and permit the only agency that keeps the value of the dollar which is worth 76 cents to be destroyed and thus permit the value of the dollar to go down to nothing? That is also the question involved here today.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I am very strongly in favor of trying to control inflation. As I understand the parliamentary situation, if the President's veto is sustained, we have nothing at all left which we can amend or work on. Is that right?

Mr. PATMAN. That is exactly right. We must pass a continuing resolution.

Mr. MAY. Can we pass it?

Mr. PATMAN. That is not my responsibility. I have made up my mind that I prefer no price control, no controls at all, in preference to a legislative mandate to force ruinous inflation upon the country. I am not going to vote to give these veterans and their widows and children this money and then turn around and vote to destroy the agency that keeps that money valuable. You know and I know that if we kill this agency the value of the dollar will not be 76 cents as it is today, as low as it is, but will not even be worth 50 cents. It will not be worth 25 cents. It will be practically worthless so far as buying many of the goods and commodities that people will have to buy. That is the question involved here today. Let us think about it and vote for an effective price-control law and not one such as we have here that would be wholly ineffective. As for me, I am not criticizing any Member as to the way he votes. That is his prerogative. I shall not criticize any Member, but if I were to vote to kill the OPA I would feel as though I was personally stabbing in the back 15,000,000 of our veterans of this war to whom we all owe a duty and an obligation.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARRY. Does an "aye" vote mean to pass the bill, despite the President's veto?

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Under the Constitution, the vote must be determined by the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 173, nays 142, answered "present" 1, not voting 116, as follows:

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have a live pair with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. HARTLEY, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. SLAUGHTER. I voted "No." I withdraw my vote and answer "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The message and bill, together with the accompanying papers, are referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

The Clerk will notify the Senate of the action of the House.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I introduce a House joint resolution, which I sent to the Clerk's desk, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended

Resolved, etc., That section 1 (b) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by striking out "June 30, 1946" and substituting "July 20, 1946."

SEC. 2. Section 6 of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by striking out "June 30, 1946" and substituting "July 20, 1946."

SEC. 3. The last paragraph of section 2 (e) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended by the Stabilization Extension Act of 1944, shall not apply with respect to operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation until July 20, 1946: Provided, That no new subsidy or purchase and sale operations shall be undertaken under the authority of this section, and no change shall be made in the basis of any operations existing on June 29, 1946, for which funds are made available under this section which will increase the rate of any subsidy or the rate of loss incurred with respect to any commodity.

SEC. 4. The provisions of this joint resolution shall take effect as of June 30, 1946, except as to offenses committed subsequent to June 30, 1946, and prior to the date of the enactment of this joint resolution, and no suit, action, or prosecution shall be instituted with respect to any such offenses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the parliamentary situation, if objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution which the gentleman from Kentucky introduced, the resolution will be immediately referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency; is that correct?

The SPEAKER. A bill cannot be introduced from the floor of the House. The gentleman from Kentucky has not dropped this resolution in the box.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood the gentleman from Kentucky made the statement that he was introducing it. May we be advised of the situation at the present time? Has or has not the resolution been introduced?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky can answer that question.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. SHORT. I withhold my objection.

The SPEAKER. The only resolution the Chair knows anything about is on the reading clerk's desk and it is not in the box.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then it has not been introduced?

The SPEAKER. Not unless the gentleman from Kentucky cares to do that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HÉBERT (at the request of Mr. LARCADE) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Frank R. Schwengel, president of the Distilled Spirits Institute.

Mr. LARCADE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by Frank A. Godehaux.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mrs. DOUGLAS of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. ALMOND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by Hon. Clifton A. Woodrum, a former Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include three editorials.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS—PERMISSION TO FILE REPORT

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight Monday, July 1, 1946, to file a report on the bill (H. R. 6911) to amend the Social Security Act and the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes; and that the same privilege may be extended to those desiring to file minority views, if there be such.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6837) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. KERR, Mr. MAHON, Mr. NORRELL, Mr. HENDRICKS, Mr. KIRWAN, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. RABAUT, Mr. CASE of South Dakota, Mr. TIBBOTT, and Mr. TABER.

J. B. McCRARY CO., INC.—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval the bill (H. R. 3494) for the relief of J. B. McCrary Co., Inc., and for other purposes.

The bill provides for the payment of the sum of $75,829.16 to J. B. McCrary Co., of Atlanta, Ga., in full settlement of its claims against the United States for losses alleged to have been sustained by it in the performance of a contract for the construction of the Warner Robins housing project near Atlanta, Ga.

It appears that the Federal Public Housing Authority advertised for bids for the construction, on a lump sum or fixed-fee basis, of 65 brick buildings for a war housing project at Warner Robins, Ga. The specifications required that the work be performed within 60 calendar days from the date of notice to proceed and contained a provision for liquidated damages of $500 per day for each day's delay. It also provided that wages paid for labor performed under the contract would not exceed the minimum wages fixed for that area by the Secretary of Labor under the Davis-Bacon Act, as amended (40 U. S. C. 276a). The claimant was the low bidder and its bid was accepted. A contract was entered into and notice to proceed was given on February 4, 1943. The work was not completed by April 6, 1943, 60 calendar days after notice to proceed, nor was it finished until October 23, 1943. By a change order dated November 5, 1943, the contracting officer granted the claimant an extension of sufficient time to avoid the payment of any liquidated damages.

The claimant asserts that it sustained an out-of-pocket loss of $75,829.16 in the performance of the contract due to first, the failure of the Government to provide roughing-in measurements for material and equipment when needed; second, delays by the Government in delivering material; and third, the impossibility of securing sufficient bricklayers, resulting from the fact that the maximum wage permitted to be paid under the contract was considerably less than that being paid to bricklayers on other construction jobs in the area.

The United States has waived its immunity to suit on claims for damages arising out of contracts, express or implied, and the Court of Claims has been designated as the forum to hear, determine, and render judgment on such claims (U. S. C. 250). Although the claim covered by the bill under consideration is of the type cognizable by the Court of Claims, the record in this case fails to disclose that the claimant has taken any action to avail itself of its right to sue the United States in that court.

Since relief by private act of Congress should be granted only when no remedy is provided by law, and since the claimant has failed to pursue the remedies afforded it by general law, I am constrained to withhold my approval from the bill.

HARRY TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 29, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal, and the message and accompanying bill referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

LAWRENCE PORTLAND CEMENT CO.—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning without my approval the enrolled enactment, H. R. 3391, for the relief of Lawrence Portland Cement Co., of Thomaston, Maine.

H. R. 3391 is in effect a retroactive subsidization of costs which were incurred prior to the time such costs became eligible for subsidy payments, and it cannot, therefore, be said that the costs would not have been incurred or that the production would not have been achieved except for the subsidy.

In authorizing payment of subsidies the Congress has enunciated the policy that subsidy payments for excess wartime costs are to be made only to achieve the maximum necessary production of commodities which might not be achieved in the absence of the subsidy. The various executive agencies and departments functioning the subsidy programs have consistently followed this policy.

If this bill should become law, the Government must necessarily anticipate a large volume of demands of a similar character, the effect of which, if granted, would be to extend the various subsidy programs far beyond their original scope and purpose.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

The WHITE HOUSE, June 29, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal, and the message, together with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

SALISH AND KOOTENAI TRIBES OF INDIANS—VETO MESSAGE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval the bill (H. R. 2678) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in any and all claims which the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of Indians of the Flathead Reservation in Montana, or any tribe or band thereof, may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

This bill proposes to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to adjudicate any and all legal and equitable claims which the Confederated Salish (or Flathead) and Kootenai Tribes of Indians of the Flathead Reservation in Montana may have against the United States, including any claims arising under the treaty of July 16, 1855 (12 Stat. 975), or any subsequent treaty, agreement, act of Congress, or Executive order. The jurisdiction thus to be conferred, it is provided, would extend to claims arising by reason of any lands taken from these Indians, including lands lost by erroneous surveys, or lands opened to settlement, lands used for dam, power, and reservoir sites or irrigation projects, or lands lost by submergence resulting from the erection of reservoirs, without compensation and without the consent of the Indians given in the usual manner. The bill declares that any taking of the lands of the Indians by the United States, without compensation and without their consent, or the reservation thereof, for any of the above purposes, to be sufficient grounds for suitable relief, and the court would be required to award the Indians just compensation for such lands as for a taking under the power of eminent domain.

In addition to other objectionable features of the bill, an attempt is made in its provisions to define the "grounds for equitable relief" and the basis upon which the court shall render judgment in favor of the Indians and award to them just compensation "as for a taking under the power of eminent domain." It is possible that under the provisions of the bill the use by the United States of any lands "formerly * * * possessed" by the Indians even though the Indians were without any recognized title would constitute a sufficient basis "for equitable relief" and "for a taking under the power of eminent domain." Thus the bill does not merely waive the statute of limitations and laches, and provide a forum for the adjudication of any preexisting claims which the Indians may have against the United States, but it seeks to create liability against the Government which would not otherwise exist. Moreover, by providing for the payment of just compensation, the bill would probably require the Government to pay interest, for a period of more than 30 years, on a claim that did not even exist prior to its passage. Neither on legal nor moral grounds would there seem to be any justification for legislation of this kind.

For these reasons, I am constrained to withhold my approval from the bill.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 28, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

The message together with the accompanying bill, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TRANSMITTING ANNUAL REPORT OF RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk, and together with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

In compliance with the provisions of section 10 (b) (4) of the Railroad Retirement Act, approved June 24, 1937, and of section 12 (l) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress, the report of the Railroad Retirement Board for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1945.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6056) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and the Judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, submit the following report in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The conferees are agreed that items of appropriation for the Department of State include $19,284,778 for the information and cultural program, $3,659,806 for the intelligence program, and $1,148,707 for the foreign economic liquidation program. The first and third of the foregoing sums are contained in the bill as passed by the Senate. The second program, approved by the Senate in the amount of $4,150,326, is reduced by the conferees, as follows: Transportation, Foreign Service, $88,120; Foreign Service quarters, $60,000; cost-of-living allowance, Foreign Service, $40,000; miscellaneous salaries and allowances, Foreign Service, $259,000; contingent expenses, Foreign Service, $43,400. The conferees are further agreed that publication of the magazine Amerika may be continued since it has been represented to the conferees that the publication is practically self-sustaining.

Amendment No. 1, relating to departmental salaries: Appropriates $23,600,000, instead of $23,861,000, as proposed by the Senate and $17,400,000, as proposed by the House; the reduction in the amount as passed by the Senate to be applied to the regular activities of the Department.

Amendment Nos. 3 and 4 relating to contingent expenses: Places in parentheses the words, "foreign or domestic," and limits expenditures upon the purchase of broadcasting time, all as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 5, relating to contingent expenses: Increases the limitation for purchase and exchange of books, maps, and periodicals, newspapers, teletype rentals, and tolls, to $525,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $300,000, as proposed by the House. This increase is in conformity with the added amounts approved for the information and cultural program and the intelligence program.

Amendment No. 6, relating to contingent expenses: Appropriates $10,221,221, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $6,100,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 7, relating to printing and binding: Appropriates $1,433,900, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,000,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 9, relating to transportation, Foreign Service: Appropriates $1,915,700, instead of $2,003,808, as proposed by the Senate and $1,875,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 10, relating to Foreign Service quarters: Appropriates $5,219,000, instead of $5,279,000, as proposed by the Senate and $4,750,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 11, relating to Foreign Service quarters: Eliminates the Senate provision exempting Egypt, Great Britain, Spain, Brazil, Panama, Cuba, Turkey, Switzerland, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Venezuela, and the Netherlands Possessions from the monetary limitation for quarters, and restores the cities of Cairo, London, Ankara, Madrid, Rio de Janeiro, Panama, and Habana, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 12, relating to cost of living allowances, Foreign Service: Appropriates $3,360,000, instead of $3,414,600, as proposed by the Senate and $2,900,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 13, relating to representation allowances, Foreign Service: Appropriates $800,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $902,400, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 14, relating to salaries of clerical, administrative, and fiscal personnel, Foreign Service: Appropriates $10,200,000, instead of $10,576,380, as proposed by the Senate and $8,600,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 15, relating to miscellaneous salaries and allowances, Foreign Service: Appropriates $5,996,000, instead of $6,255,480, as proposed by the Senate and $4,600,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 16, relating to Foreign Service, Auxiliary: Appropriates $3,300,000, instead of $3,656,913, as proposed by the Senate and $2,400,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendments Nos. 17 and 18, relating to contingent expenses, Foreign Service: The first changes spelling of one word, and the second appropriates $9,100,000, instead of $9,171,890, as proposed by the Senate and $8,000,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendments Nos. 19, 20, and 21, relating to contingent expenses, Foreign Service: Provide limitations for the purchase of automobiles abroad; amendment No. 21 eliminates balance of the paragraph, after the word "to" on line 19, as follows: "replacements, and such replacements shall not be chargeable against the numerical limitations hereinbefore set forth," as proposed by the Senate, and in lieu thereof includes "replacement of an equal number of automobiles of the same general type and class."

Amendment No. 22, relating to emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service: Appropriates $9,000,000, instead of $9,500,000, as proposed by the Senate and $8,500,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 23, relating to United States contributions to international commissions, congresses, and bureaus: Includes the amount of $800 for Cape Spartel and Tangier Light, Coast of Morocco, and the amount of $1,722.57 for the International Bureau of Permanent Court of Arbitration, both in conformity with existing treaties, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 24, relating to United States contributions to international commissions, congresses, and bureaus: Corrects total for the paragraph to include amounts added under amendment numbered 23, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 25, relating to United State participation in United Nations: Clarifies authority for attendance at meetings.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Amendment No. 27, relating to the offices of the Attorney General, etc.: Appropriates $667,250, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $633,250, as proposed by the House. The added sum of $34,000 is required for Federal-State relations activity carried on heretofore in the War Division which was abolished on December 28, 1945.

Amendment No. 28, relating to the Administrative Division: Appropriates $1,190,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,150,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 29, relating to the Criminal Division: Appropriates $898,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $840,000, as proposed by the House. The added sum of $58,000 is required for the execution of responsibilities imposed on the Attorney General by the Foreign Agents' Registration Act of 1938, as amended. This activity was carried on heretofore in the War Division.

Amendment No. 30, relating to contingent expenses: Provides a limitation for miscellaneous expenditures, including newspapers, of $850, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $350, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 31, relating to salaries and expenses, Antitrust Division: Appropriates $1,900,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,700,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendments No. 32, relating to salaries and expenses, Lands Division: Appropriates $2,650,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,500,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 33, relating to salaries and expenses of district attorneys, and so forth: Appropriates $4,560,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,530,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 34, relating to salaries and expenses of marshals, and so forth: Appropriates $4,642,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,570,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 35, relating to the Immigration and Naturalization Service: Appropriates $25,500,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $24,500,000, as proposed by the House. The added $1,000,000 is required for the maintenance and transportation of alien enemy detainees. No funds were included in the Budget for this program because it was anticipated that all alien enemies in detention would be deported or released prior to the close of fiscal year 1946.

Amendment No. 36, relating to construction of buildings and facilities, Federal Prison System: Provides that $635,000 of the amount transferred to the appropriation, "Construction of buildings and facilities," by the Navy Department, under the authority contained in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1943, shall be available for the construction of dwellings at existing institutions, as proposed by the Senate. The above amount is part of the sum of $1,500,000 transferred to the Federal Prison System as payment for a penal institution taken over by the Navy as a war emergency measure.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Amendments Nos. 37 and 38, relating to technical and scientific services: Increases the limitation for printing and binding from $105,000 to $130,000, as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates $3,800,000, instead of $4,000,000, as proposed by the Senate and $3,400,000, as proposed by the House.

Amendments Nos. 41 and 42, relating to compiling census reports and so forth: Appropriates $12,000,000, instead of $13,000,000 as proposed by the House, and $11,000,000 as proposed by the Senate, and restores the House provision requiring functions necessary to the compilation of foreign-trade statistics to be performed in New York, N. Y., amended to make the effective date October 1, 1946, and limiting expenditures to $950,000.

Amendments Nos. 43, 44, 45, 47, 48, 49, 51, and 52, relating to the Office of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics: Appropriates for general administration, Office of the Administrator, $4,353,102, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,000,000, as proposed by the House; appropriates for establishment of air-navigation facilities $19,622,200, instead of $18,100,000, as proposed by the House, and $20,812,200, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $36,544,418 for maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $35,541,000, as proposed by the House; appropriates for technical development $875,000, instead of $750,000, as proposed by the House, and $1,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, and continues available ($120,000) the 1946 unexpended balance, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $7,075,000 for enforcement of safety regulations, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $6,200,000, as proposed by the House, and provides for certain transfers to other appropriations, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates for maintenance and operation of aircraft $1,593,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,200,000, as proposed by the House; appropriates $2,975,000 for preliminary planning and surveys, Federal Airport Act, instead of $3,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, limiting, however, the number of passenger automobiles to be purchased to 19 instead of 38, and omitting authority to purchase any aircraft; and appropriates for the Federal-aid airport program, Federal Airport Act, $45,000,000, instead of $52,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, with approximately proportionate reductions in amount limitations, and provides for the purchase of 83 passenger automobiles instead of 167, and eliminates authority to purchase aircraft.

Amendments Nos. 53, 54, and 55, relating to the Coast and Geodetic Survey: Appropriates for salaries and expenses, departmental, $3,014,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,000,000, as proposed by the House; appropriates for salaries and expenses, field, $4,800,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $3,800,000, as proposed by the House, and restores the House provision providing for reimbursement of officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for extending aid in needy cases.

Amendments Nos. 59, 60, and 61, relating to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: Appropriates for departmental salaries and expenses $4,900,000, instead of $4,600,000, as proposed by the House, and $6,157,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates for field office service $4,750,000, instead of $2,500,000, as proposed by the House, and $6,500,000, as proposed by the Senate; and appropriates for export control $500,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendments Nos. 62, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68, and 69, relating to the Patent Office: Appropriates for salaries $5,620,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,800,000, as proposed by the House; appropriates for photolithographing $660,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $350,000, as proposed by the House; appropriates for miscellaneous expenses $147,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $77,000, as proposed by the House, and appropriates $952,000 for printing and binding, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $800,000, as proposed by the House, to be apportioned as proposed by the Senate.

Amendments Nos. 70, 71, and 72, relating to the Weather Bureau: Appropriates for salaries and expenses $17,500,000, instead of $16,303,000, as proposed by the House, and $18,338,000, as proposed by the Senate; establishes the amount limitation upon expenditures for personal services in the District of Columbia at $1,525,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,485,000, as proposed by the House; and authorizes the Navy Department to transfer without charge equipment and supplies for upper air soundings, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendments Nos. 75, 76, 77, and 78, applying to miscellaneous provisions, Department of Commerce: Extends the authority of the Secretary to delegate to subordinate officials the power to authorize payment of travel and incidental expenses to include expenses of transportation of the immediate families of personnel, as proposed by the Senate; and restores the House provision making certain appropriations available for supplying medical services to personnel in Alaska, providing for their subsistence upon a reimbursable basis, and for travel expenses of personnel, upon appointment, from place of residence to points outside the continental limits of the United States or in Alaska, amended to permit of an expenditure of not exceeding $20,000, upon a reimbursable basis, for relieving distressed persons in remote localities.

Amendments Nos. 79 and 80, relating to the Judiciary: Appropriates for salaries, United States Supreme Court, $598,590, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $591,200, as proposed by the House, and appropriates for salaries of judges $3,200,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,000,000, as proposed by the House.

AMENDMENTS IN DISAGREEMENT

No. 2, relating to an informational program outside continental United States, Department of State. The House managers will move to recede and concur.

No. 8, relating to surplus property disposal, Department of State. The House managers will move to recede and concur with an amendment reducing the amount to $6,000,000.

No. 26, relating to the termination of the employment of personnel by the Secretary of State when deemed necessary or desirable in the interests of the United States. The House managers will move to recede and concur.

No. 39, relating to a census of business, agreement.

No. 40, relating to a census of manufactures. The House managers will insist upon disagreement.

No. 46, relating to the maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities (Executive Order 9709). The House managers will move to recede and concur with an amendment, reducing the appropriation proposed from $2,874,000 to $2,500,000.

No. 50, relating to warehousing for airplane parts, Civil Aeronautics Administration, and limiting the amount to be expended for the repair or overhaul of aircraft. The House managers will move to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, increasing the amount limitation upon the repair or overhaul of airplanes from $100 to $200, and including labor as a cost factor.

No. 56, relating to the transfer of seven vessels from the Navy Department to the Coast and Geodetic Survey. The House managers will move to recede and concur.

No. 57, limiting departmental salaries of Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce at seat of government and making an amount thereof available for Office of Small Business. The House managers will move to recede and concur with an amendment reducing the amount proposed.

No. 58, broadening the scope in specified respects of the appropriation of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce for departmental salaries and expenses. The House managers will move to recede and concur.

No. 65, establishing under the Patent Office a charge of 10 cents per copy for design patents and certificates of trade-mark registration. The House managers will move to recede and concur.

No. 73, relating to the conduct by the Weather Bureau of meteorological investigations in the Arctic region. The House managers will move to recede and concur.

No. 74, relating to the maintenance and operation of meteorological facilities (Executive Order 9709) by the Weather Bureau in foreign countries and in Territories and possessions of the United States. The House managers will move to recede and concur.

No. 81, relating to limitations on expenditures of funds to pay salary and wages of anyone who engages in a strike against the Government, or who is a member of an organization that asserts the right to strike against the Government, and so forth. The House managers will move to recede and concur.

LOUIS C. RABAUT,
BUTLER B. HARE,
J. VAUGHAN GARY,
KARL STEFAN,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. RABAUT (interrupting the reading of the statement). Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the conference report and statement were printed in full in the RECORD of yesterday I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the statement may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this conference report for the following more objectionable reasons: $19,284,778 have been allowed by the conference committee for the State Department to carry an information and cultural-relations program throughout the world; $3,659,000 have been allowed to be appropriated for an intelligence program for the State Department, and the third item involves a ninefold increase in the field service of the Department of Commerce. In general, the bill appropriates too much money in nearly every paragraph.

These three outstanding items are particularly objectionable, it seems to me. I was against them when the bill was before the House formerly, at which time we allowed nothing for intelligence and we allowed approximately $10,000,000 for an informational program.

I merely want to make my views clear for the RECORD. We are taking a step in the wrong direction by commandeering all the information that leaves the United States of America through the ether, through the telegraph wires with the thoughts of hired Government-paid employees of the State Department. This conference report will set up as a propaganda agency for the United States to the exclusion of private news-reporting services.

To illustrate and emphasize what I mean, I call attention to amendment No. 4 on page 2 of the bill which deals with broadcasting time provided for in this appropriation bill. That is a limitation on the $19,000,000 information program of the State Department. It is a limitation inserted by the Senate which, of course, is retained in this bill by the conference report. The Senate amendment states:

> Except that funds herein appropriated shall not be used to purchase more than 75 percent of the effective daily broadcasting time from any person or corporation holding an international short-wave broadcasting license from the Federal Communications Commission without the consent of such licensee.

There are some six or seven international broadcasting licensees in the United States. This amendment had to be put in by the Senate. Part II of the Senate hearings shows that unless the amendment were inserted the State Department would insist on 100 percent of the broadcasters' time. With this amendment they can only use 75 percent of the time of any international broadcasting licensee.

Mr. Speaker, this proves to you the extent to which the State Department intends to blanket out and blacken out all private news agencies on the wire and in the air. I am against that in principle and I am against it as far as spending Federal money is concerned.

The conference report contains $453,330,612, as compared with the House version of the bill, which provided for $365,166,758; both Senate and House versions included $15,000,000 for a census of business and manufactures. These items are in disagreement and will be voted upon separately after we dispose of the conference report. The rest of the figures are comparatively correct.

The conferees have allowed an increase of $88,000,000 for carrying on the functions of the State, Justice, and Commerce Departments in the executive branch of the Government, and the Judiciary.

When we are staggered with a $1,900 per capita debt, I think this is a wholly unwarranted increase in public expenditures for the fiscal year 1947 for these departments of Government and the judiciary. Trouble seems to increase throughout the world in proportion to the increased funds we give the State Department every year. There was provided $15,000,000 for 1 year for the State Department when I went on this committee in 1941. Instead of $15,000,000 in the fiscal year 1941 we are now spending the colossal sum of $128,636,572 for that one agency alone during the fiscal year 1947.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HAND. I merely want to say that I am glad the gentleman is continuing his good work on this fight. I opposed the bill before and I am still against it and I hope we will have a chance to express our opposition here today.

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman. I intend to vote against the conference report for those reasons.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important conference report. It deals with the appropriations for the Department of State, the Department of Justice, the Department of Commerce, and the Federal judiciary. I am supporting the report with the exception of two items on page 55 dealing with the census. You will recall that when we brought these two items here the House overruled my amendment. When the bill went to the Senate the Senate struck out both items, and these two items come back to you in disagreement.

There will be preferential motions offered by me and my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES] to eliminate these items and proceed to concur in the Senate amendment. In this way you can save $15,000,000 or more.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I want to inquire about this item for international short-wave broadcasting. I know the gentleman has done some effective work in that program during the war, but this is a postwar program. We were told when this bill was before this body that the State Department was planning a long-range program which would meet the objections of some of us that it was at present a monopoly program.

Mr. STEFAN. I can explain that to the gentleman to his full satisfaction. The gentleman will recall that the people who own the radio station in Boston were interested in securing 25 percent of the time. An amendment has been placed in the bill, and both sides are agreeable to it. I am sure the people who own that radio industry in Boston are satisfied, and I am sure the gentleman from Ohio, who has worked so hard to get this into the bill, will also be satisfied. Seventy-five percent Federal time and 25 percent private-industry time is the way it is now arranged.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I thoroughly approve of this as a stopgap measure, but I wonder whether, during the conference or otherwise the gentleman has heard about the long-time plans.

Mr. STEFAN. I understand a study is to be made.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HORAN. I wonder if the gentleman would comment on those items for the census in the light of the fact that the House earlier this week rejected a bill out of the Committee on the Census.

Mr. STEFAN. Yes; the House overwhelmingly defeated that authorization bill. They apparently wanted some basic law. You will find these two items on page 55. They are items in disagreement—amendments numbered 39 and 40. We bring these items back in disagreement and ask that you sustain the minority when we offer these motions.

The total amount for the four departments carried in this bill as it passed the House was $365,166,758. The bill as it passed the Senate carried $453,330,612. You will be interested to know, however, that the increase of $88,000,000 in the Senate bill as compared with the House bill will be found mainly in the item implementing the Federal-State-aid airport program, which has been authorized and signed by the President. It is implemented with funds in this bill. I know every one of you that has an airport in your district will be interested to know that appropriations are contained in this appropriation bill to implement the Federal-State-aid airport program.

The other items which bring this increase up to $88,000,000 are increases in the information service of the Department of State, and also the Intelligence Service, which the House left out. These items are now in the bill and agreed to.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HENRY. I have two questions to ask. First, referring to page 70 of the bill, line 17, will the gentleman tell me what the conference agreement was as to the total amount?

Mr. STEFAN. The committee allowed for additional field offices in the Department of Commerce.

Mr. HENRY. But the dollars-and-cents amount is what?

Mr. STEFAN. The Small Business Office was reduced in the conference with the Senate.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Like other agencies, the State Department is leading people to think that all they need to do is get more people in order to improve their policies, which are having such disastrous consequences, but it seems to me that what we ought to do is to make a stern fight against these increases and these policies that are bringing about such disasters. They are occurring at the top. It is a matter of quality, not quantity.

Mr. STEFAN. I explained that the major increase in the bill is not in the Department of State. The major increase is in the Department of Commerce.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. There is a $30,000,000 increase in the State Department; is that not right.

Mr. STEFAN. Approximately that.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Their policy abroad is to finance conflict between England and Russia and give the Communists the Spanish and Argentine Governments.

Mr. STEFAN. Of course, we are not a policy-making committee—we are an appropriations committee.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. But this is a chance to stop the policy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

In order to keep the matter straight about the census, I will quote from Thirteenth United States Code, page 217:

> Census of manufacturing industries, collection and publication: The Director of the Census is authorized and directed to collect and publish for every second year after 1927 statistics of manufacturing industries, and the Director is hereby authorized to prepare such schedules as in his judgment may be necessary.

Regarding the census of business, we find the following to be the law in Thirteenth United States Code, page 201:

> The above reference contains authority for the taking of a census of distribution of business in the year 1930 and every 10 years thereafter.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. As I understand it, there was a provision in the bill that would allow the State Department to remove certain objectionable persons who they felt had very strong communistic feelings and who should be removed from the State Department. Is that correct?

Mr. RABAUT. The gentlewoman will find the language in amendment No. 26.

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. In connection with your statement relative to the manufacturing census, it will be taken this fall as I understand it, but how long will it take before industry may have some benefit of that census?

Mr. RABAUT. The Census Bureau will take care of that. What we are talking about here is the funds to take the census.

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. I understand that we are providing for funds to take the census but when will get the benefit of the census—next year, or the year after?

Mr. RABAUT. I imagine it would take 6 or 8 months to arrange it into statistical form.

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts. How about the penalty clause for failing to file a report?

Is that still in the bill?

Mr. RABAUT. No; that is not in this bill. This is the appropriation bill. That was in the legislative bill.

AVIATION AMENDMENTS DISCUSSED

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I have requested this time to ask several questions of the Chairman and members of the subcommittee. In the first instance, I inquire if the $100,000 passed as an amendment in the House for an air marking program, to help the constantly expanding private flying field, is included in the conference report and in the bill as it comes before us this afternoon.

Mr. RABAUT. That was not in disagreement but some restorations have been made to it, as I understand. Presumably, it is still in the bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That provision should be retained. The second question relates to the amendment which would give the fixed base operators and airport repair shops the opportunity, by contract, to repair CAA aircraft rather than the CAA doing that job.

Would the gentleman explain exactly what was done in the conference between the Senate and the House, and if agreement has been reached on an acceptable amendment?

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, with reference to that amendment, the Senate struck out the language used by the House in the gentleman's amendment and inserted new language. The new language reads as follows:

> That no funds in this paragraph shall be expended for the pay of any employee of the Civil Aeronautics Administration for the maintenance of more than one major parts warehouse, or for the repair or overhaul of aircraft when such repair or overhaul cannot be peformed by the Civil Aeronautics Administration through exchange or substitution of parts or materials maintained by the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and the cost of labor, parts, and materials not maintained in stock would be in excess of $200: Provided further, That all repair and overhaul of aircraft of the Civil Aeronautics Administration which cannot be performed within the foregoing limitation shall be done on contract after submission of bids.

The subcommittee argued that question for about 2 hours and finally we inserted the words on page 61 of the bill, "The cost of labor, parts, and materials not to exceed $200." So that the result of the amendment is that they can perform repairs where the cost of parts and labor does not exceed $200.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think the conference agreement is preferable to the Senate language and it does partially embrace the thinking of the House. We desired that there not be conflict between the private fixed base operator in the repair of aircraft, and the jurisdiction of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, which we thought that agency should not enter, because private enterprise would be curtailed.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. Has the gentleman listened to the explanation of the amendment given to you by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY]?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I listened very carefully. I appreciate also the courtesy of the gentleman from Virginia in discussing this matter with me earlier this afternoon.

Mr. STEFAN. What does the gentleman think about the words "and cost of labor, parts, and materials"?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think, as I indicated earlier, that this is an improvement and more nearly effectuates the action of the House than did the Senate votes in passing the language which was put in the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I think it covers the same purpose that the gentleman had in mind when he presented the amendment in the House, which limited the cost of the labor to $100 per airplane This includes labor, parts, and materials, and raises it to $200, but gets at the same purpose.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman.

There is one additional question which I feel is important. I note that when the Senate had this appropriation bill, the amount of $52,000,000 was placed in the measure for carrying out the purposes of the Federal Aid Airport Act. Of course we have not had such legislation before us until today. I ask if the $52,000,000 remains in the compromise or whether another figure was substituted.

Mr. RABAUT. There is substituted a figure of $45,000,000.

Mr. RANDOLPH. And then this final inquiry: That amount of money would be available until 1953, which would be the date on which the 7-year authorization act of $500,000,000 would run, is that correct?

Mr. RABAUT. That is correct.

Mr. RANDOLPH. And this airport fund could be supplemented by other amounts during the first year, if the Congress so desires?

Mr. RABAUT. If the Deficiency Committee is in session.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am grateful for that assurance and I thank the gentleman, and desire also to state my belief that it will be necessary for Congress to provide additional matching money during the coming fiscal year. If I felt it more practical, under our parliamentary situation, I would urge my colleague to support an increase to at least $70,000,000. We must avoid unnecessary delay in construction and improvement of necessary airport facilities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has again expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 2: Page 2, line 10, after the word "through", insert "individuals, including aliens, or."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 8: Page 5, line 23, insert the following:

"Surplus property disposal: For all expenses necessary to enable the Department of State to carry out its functions and activities relative to disposition of surplus property pursuant to the provisions of the Surplus Property Act of 1944 (Public Law 457), as amended, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and employment of persons outside the continental limits of the United States without regard to civil-service and classification laws; travel expenses, including attendance at meetings of organizations concerned with the activity for which this appropriation is made; transportation of prospective customers (not to exceed $9,000); cost of living and living quarters allowances and transportation of families and effects including cost of living allowances for military personnel assigned or detailed to the Department, all under such regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe; stenographic reporting, translating, appraising, and other services in foreign countries by contract, all without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; payment of rent in foreign countries in advance; purchase and exchange of books, maps, periodicals, and newspapers; printing and binding, including printing and binding outside the continental limits of the United States without regard to section 11 of the act of March 1, 1919 (44 U. S. C. 111); entertainment (not to exceed $50,000); hire, maintenance, operation, and repair of passenger automobiles; advertising without regard to section 3828 of the Revised Statutes; maintenance and operation of aircraft; $7,000,000."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RABAUT moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$7,000,000" named in said amendment insert "$6,000,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 26: Page 35, line 11, insert the following:

"Nothwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 555), or the provisions of any other law, the Secretary of State may, in his absolute discretion, on or before June 30, 1947, terminate the employment of any officer or employee of the Department of State or of the Foreign Service of the United States whenever he shall deem such termination necessary or advisable in the interests of the United States, but such termination shall not affect the right of such officer or employee to seek or accept employment in any other department or agency of the Government if declared eligible for such employment by the United States Civil Service Commission."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 39: Page 55, line 7, strike out all of lines 7 to 13 inclusive.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JONES moves that House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and concur in the same.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, this amendment concerns the census of business.

The census of business was initiated in 1929. Thereafter such censuses were taken covering the years 1933, 1935, 1937, and 1939, when the last one was taken. The censuses of 1933, 1935, and 1937 were taken by order of the Secretary of Commerce—at that time Secretary Roper—under authority of section 8 of the organic act of the Department of Commerce. The censuses of 1937 and 1939 were taken under authority of Public Law No. 13 of the Seventy-first Congress. We think these censuses should be continued. I quoted a moment ago from the law covering the census—Thirteenth United States Code, page 201.

The disruption caused by the war make it very necessary that the Government and the agencies of the Government have the facts so that they may become known to the Government through the taking of these censuses. If we propose to abandon the census in these times when we have had both the war period intervene and the reconversion period at our door, I feel we would be doing an injustice to the business of the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Obviously a quorum is not present.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call, 296 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KNUTSON (at the request of Mr. REED of New York) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, JUDICIARY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947—CONFERENCE REPORT

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES] is recognized.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, before the quorum call which, by the way, I did not request, we had before us for consideration Senate amendment No. 39, which would strike out, as the Senate did, $10,000,000 for a business census.

You will remember that by a narrow margin we passed a business census appropriation for $10,000,000 when this bill was before the House in the first instance. The Senate, however, struck out this provision and here is what the Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations had to say about the business census:

It is recommended by the committee that the following paragraph be stricken from the bill:

"Census of Business: For the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing (including printing and binding) the census of business or distribution, as authorized by the act of March 14, 1903 (5 U. S. C. 604), including the employment by the director of personnel at the seat of government and elsewhere without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, $10,000,000."

The committee goes on to say:

The committee can find no specific authority in 5 U. S. C. 604 for collection of statistics dealing with business or manufactures and have, therefore, deleted the paragraphs mentioned above.

The committee does not condone and will not abet the practice of extending the scope of statutory authority by administrative determination to cover functions not within the reasonable intent of the Congress in framing the statutes.

If you will look at title 5, section 604, you will find no authority for a business census whatsoever. The nearest language relied upon is as follows:

He—

shall from time to time make special investigations and reports as he may be required to do by the President or by either House of Congress, or which he himself may deem necessary and urgent.

This language does not authorize a business or distribution census. "Investigation" and "reports" are not "censuses."

There is authority for a business census, however, as the chairman pointed out, under title 13, section 201. Under authority of this latter section of law the original census was taken in 1930 and adtional censuses are legal only every 10 years thereafter. That would mean that a distribution census might be taken in the year 1951 for 1940 business and distribution facts; but for this appropriation bill which provides funds for the fiscal year 1947 there is no authority in law. This amendment covering the taking of a census of business, and appropriating $10,000,000, does not cover the total amount for the taking of the business census—it will be much more than that. This amendment is only for the purpose of providing work, in my opinion, during the 9 years while there is no authority for census taking and keeping an army of employees on the pay roll for 9 continuous years instead of for 1 year in 10.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. Is not this the same sort of stuff that I will call alfalfa that the House rejected the other day?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. PITTENGER. There was an amendment offered then.

Mr. JONES. Yes. On page 1021 of the hearings the gentleman's position is borne out when Mr. Grieves testified before the committee as the Chief Economist of the Bureau of the Census and was asked by Mr. Sourwine:

Is the same thing true with the business census?

Mr. GRIEVES. Yes, sir; except that under the present law that would not be taken until 1951.

This official of the Census Bureau does not contend there is authority in law for a business census.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the House has passed on the question of whether it wants a census of business earlier this week when it turned down the legislative authority for a business census, which legislation provided penalties in case businessmen would not answer the questionnaires. The House turned down that legislation.

Insisting on House disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 39 is an attempt to put in an appropriation bill legislation legalizing and appropriating $10,000,000 for a census of business and distribution when there is no basic authority in the law in the face of defeat of the basic legislation this same week. There is no authority whatsoever except as appears in this language. The proof of the pudding is that if this business census had been authorized by law, by basic authority, this amendment would not appear technically in disagreement. It would have been put in the conference report and would have been adopted with the rest of the conference report.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. This is the same proposal we had before the House when the gentleman offered a motion to strike it out and it lacked 1 vote of carrying in the committee when the thing was considered?

Mr. JONES. That is right. It carried on a voice vote and was defeated on a record vote.

Mr. REES of Kansas. And it was the gentleman from Ohio that proposed the motion to strike out the $10,000,000.

Mr. JONES. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I submit this amendment should be defeated for the further reason that never before in the history of any nation has the Government known more about business and private enterprise, never has the Government known more about distribution, because it has had this information tied up through complete and arbitrary control in the Civilian Production Administration, the Office of Defense Transportation, and the Office of Price Administration.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, so that the memory of the Members of the House may be brought to date on this census matter, the conferees are simply upholding in their position in this conference, the action of the House which approved the appropriation. When you go to a conference and you do not defend the House, you are criticized. When you go to a conference and you defend the House you are criticized. So where are you?

If there was ever a time that a business census should be taken, it is right now. We have had the war period with many, many businesses discontinuing operation. We have the reconversion period at our door as well as the legislation of the Congress of the United States giving assistance to GI's to go into business all over the Nation.

Mind you, you are underwriting all of them. When they go into business they want to find out something about it, and you do not want them to go into business and lose their money without having the facts at hand. My colleagues, what are we thinking about? Let us look at the hearings, not before the Senate, but before your own committee; hearings of this size (indicating a volume). It covers several pages. Here is what it says:

It provides Government and business with a complete picture of the distribution operation of the country, especially the size and location of markets. It establishes a number of bench marks by which the businessman who is selling may gage the success of his efforts in his usual field, as well as his prospects in going into new lines or new locations. It is an essential part of the planning of a marketing operation. Mr. Chairman, on the part of people who are searching for markets, and who wish to judge their size and character as for instance, between the east coast and the west coast. Furthermore, it provides the raw material necessary for an intelligent review of the cost of distribution as a whole, as well as the cost of operating individual business establishments. It would provide the first comprehensive information of the kind since 1939.

What are we thinking about? Are we just on the rampage against any kind of progress? Is this another attack? Is this another wreck, ruin, and delay program? I am asking you.

This amendment should be supported and the position of the House should be sustained.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE].

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I gather from the remarks that have been made on this provision that the bone of contention is whether or not there is authority in law to gather these statistics by the Bureau of the Census in the Department of Commerce. I reach that definite conclusion from the statement just made by my genial and close friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES], when he said that if there had been authority in law and it had been embodied in the bill, it would have been included in the report of the committee.

I would like to submit for the consideration of the House as to whether or not there is provision in law for this, and I am going to quote from the act of March 14, 1903. The act reads as follows:

He—

The Secretary of Commerce—

shall also from time to time make such special investigations and reports as he may be required to do by the President or by either House of Congress, or which he himself may deem necessary and urgent.

Is that not authority in law for the Secretary of Commerce to collect information or statistics regarding the business of the country, regarding production of the country, or regarding statistics on any other subject which he may think is urgent?

Let me go just a little further and see whether or not this is the first time this authority has been exercised. I want to read again from one of my great friends of the past.

I find here a photostatic copy of a directive from the Secretary of Commerce to the Director of the Census, dated May 11, 1921. It is as follows:

In conformity with the authority contained in section 8 of the act of Congress approved February 14, 1903, I hereby authorize and instruct you to collect statistics concerning stocks, production, prices, and other data that will form a part of an efficient report on the business movement of the country. These statistics are now deemed necessary and urgent.

It is signed, "Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman understands that none of these statistics would be available for anybody who would use them for about 18 months from the day they are taken. Of what value could they possibly be under those circumstances, with conditions in the state of flux they are in now?

Mr. HARE. I stated at the outset that the issue involved here is whether or not the Bureau of the Census has the authority or the right under the law to collect these statistics. My friend admitted that, if there were specific authority of law, they would be included in this report and the report of the committee would have been adopted. I am not undertaking to discuss the value of these data. That question has not been raised, except by the inquiry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. In fact, the real value of the statistics is virtually admitted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES].

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman is reading from Thirteenth United States Code, page 201, is he not?

Mr. HARE. No; I am reading from the act of February 14, 1903.

Mr. STEFAN. What code section is that?

Mr. HARE. Fifth United States Code, page 604. The statistics referred to in that act are the same kind of statistics we are trying to provide for in this bill, the same kind that were asked for by Secretary Hoover in 1921.

Then on March 19, 1927, Secretary Hoover said, addressing a communication to the Director of the Census, I quote:

In conformity with the authority contained in section 8 of the act of Congress approved February 14, 1903, I hereby authorize and instruct you to collect statistics and other information concerning business cycles that are essential to a proper understanding of the business movement of the country, which is referred to in my order of May 11, 1921.

What better authority do you want than the original act I quoted at the outset and the exercise of that authority by Secretary Hoover in 1921 and in 1927? But we do not stop there. We go just a little further and find that the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Lamont, on March 18, 1929, issued the following directive to the Bureau of the Census, and said:

In conformity with the authority contained in section 8 of the act of Congress approved February 14, 1903, I hereby authorize and instruct you to collect statistics concerning distribution, stocks, production, prices, and other data that will form a part of an efficient report on the business movement of the country.

Now, gentlemen, it seems to me that it is perfectly absurd to say that the authority was not specific.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Can the gentleman advise the House if the census were taken under this provision and business people failed to comply or reply, then the heads of those businesses could be penalized according to the law which we rejected this week.

Mr. HARE. I hope the gentleman will understand. I am not questioning what was done then. I am replying to the arguments made here in opposition to this item.

Mr. JUDD. I am asking for information on that one point.

Mr. HARE. I am replying to the arguments made here in opposition to this item as to whether there is authority in law. If my friend will bear with me I will give him the advantage of my considered judgment that no authority could be any more specific.

Mr. JUDD. I thought you had completed your argument on that. I was asking for information on this one point.

Mr. HARE. There is nothing in this bill about the penalties or anything of that nature whatsoever.

Mr. JUDD. Then no businessman would be fined or sent to jail if he failed to reply to the questionnaires?

Mr. HARE. Not under this bill; no.

Mr. JONES. Mr, Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman quoted the authority for this amendment in Fifth United States Code, page 604, which was passed February 16, 1903. If that was reliable authority, then it certainly would not have been necessary to have passed title 13 of section 201, which provides specifically for a census of distribution in 1930 and every 10 years thereafter. The Commerce Department in seeking legislation and asking for title 13, section 201, as a provision of basic law, must have thought that they did not have the authority to take a distribution census until they had this law passed on May 17, 1932.

Mr. HARE. I am speaking of the general authority of law to the Secretary of Commerce. If the Secretary of Commerce does not see fit in his judgment to collect statistics that Congress feels are necessary, then the Congress has the right by statute to authorize specifically that such information shall be gathered. In other words, and I am reading from the act of March 14, 1903:

The Secretary of Commerce shall also from time to time make such special investigations and reports as may be required of him by the President to do or by either House of Congress.

That gaves the specific authority referred to.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. If that is true, why then did the chief economist of the Bureau of the Census testify before the Senate committee as follows in answer to this question:

You have a bill pending in both Houses of Congress to change the basic statutes so as to give you authority to do that?

That is, authority to do what—to take this business and manufacturing census. And what was the answer that the chief economist gave? He said:

That is right.

In the Senate and among the members of your committee here there is great doubt as to whether or not there is authority in basic law to do the work for which you are asking that these amendments be approved.

Mr. HARE. I am not prepared to deny the statements made by my good friend, the gentleman from Nebraska, but I am emphasizing that there was not any doubt in the mind of Herbert Hoover in 1921 and there was no doubt in his mind in 1927 and there was no doubt in the mind of the Secretary of Commerce in 1930 that definite authority had been provided under the act of March 14, 1903—Fifth United States Code, page 604—and my contention is that since the authority has been exercised from time to time, there is sufficient authority to justify the action of this committee some few months ago and was affirmed by the action of the whole House when it formally approved this provision when it passed the House in early April of this year.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the preferential motion which I have offered to recede and concur, if adopted, will result in a $10,000,000 saving?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what is in the bill. The gentleman does not state a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I too would like to save the membership a great deal of time. I have a preferential motion on the Speaker's desk to move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment on the item of business manufactures. I wonder if we could not consider both of these at the same time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will object to that.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES) there were—ayes 86, noes 62.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 143, not voting 139, as follows:

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 40, page 55, strike out all of lines 14 to 20.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STEFAN moves that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 40.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House long on this motion for the reason this amendment is similar to the one you voted on just a little while ago with the exception that this is for the census for manufactures and an appropriation of $5,000,000 is sought. The Senate struck this out and it is being brought to you here on the motion of the chairman of the subcommittee to insist on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment, thus keeping this in the bill. The committee was not unanimous on it. The committee divided 3 and 2. The Senate insisted on leaving it out on the ground there is no basic law for this particular census. I personally feel we should save expenses now. Only a few days ago the House voted definitely against continuing certain censuses and I feel that in view of the fact time is so precious today and that a vote has already been taken on a similar measure, I ask that you vote for my amendment to recede and concur in the Senate amendment. This work can be done later if it is needed and at a time when there is more labor available.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY].

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, the question for consideration now is similar to the one that we have just acted upon. The House included in the bill provisions for a business census and also a provision for a census of manufactures.

The facts are that these census surveys were made regularly every 2 years until 1939. We have not had a census either of business or manufactures since that date because of the war. We are therefore without statistics at the present time for our reconversion and other essential postwar programs in which the people of the United States and the Government are interested.

Moreover, both the business and manufacturing censuses will be of tremendous help to small business, and particularly to veterans who are coming out of the Army and are considering entering the manufacturing business.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. This has nothing to do with business We just voted that down.

Mr. GARY. I said it was similar. Manufacturing is a very substantial part of business. It has been my privilege on numerous occasions to use statistics that have been compiled in the census reports. They have been invaluable in numerous research projects. The House included the provision in the bill. The Senate struck it out. We are simply asking that it be retained.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

This census will perhaps receive the same consideration across the aisle that the census of business received a moment ago. This comes in spite of letters from chambers of commerce all over the United States that have practically flooded the Membership of Congress. It comes as a direct rebuff to the business houses that have written us telling the necessity for this census. It comes from the small business people all over the Nation.

I am not going to detain the House and hold them for another roll call, but I am going to ask for a standing vote in order that we may have a count on this census that is now before us and place the blame for its failure where it belongs.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RABAUT) there were—ayes 79, noes 84.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. STEFAN and Mr. RABAUT.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 111, noes 97.

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 46: On page 59, line 3, insert the following:

"Maintenance ond operation of air-navigation facilities (Executive Order 9709): For all necessary expenses of maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities, by contract or otherwise, in foreign countries and in territories and possessions of the United States, in accordance with Executive Order 9709, dated March 29, 1946, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $2,874,000, of which not to exceed $200,000 may be transferred to the appropriation "General administration, Office of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics", for necessary expenses in connection with the general administration of the program."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RABAUT moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum "$2,874,000" named in said amendment, insert the following "$2,500,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 50: On page 61, strike out all lines 13 to 17 inclusive and insert the following: "That no funds in this paragraph shall be expended for the pay of any employee of the Civil Aeronautics Administration for the maintenance of more than one major-parts warehouse, or for the repair or overhaul of aircraft when such repair or overhaul cannot be performed by the Civil Aeronautics Administration through exchange or substitution of parts or materials maintained by the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and the cost of parts and materials not maintained in stock would be in excess of $100: Provided further, That all repair and overhaul of aircraft of the Civil Aeronautics Administration which cannot be performed within the foregoing limitation shall be done on contract after submission of bids."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RABAUT moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "That no funds in this paragraph shall be expended for the pay of any employee of the Civil Aeronautics Administration for the maintenance of more than one major parts warehouse, or for the repair or overhaul of aircraft when such repair or overhaul cannot be performed by the Civil Aeronautics Administration through exchange or substitution of parts or materials maintained by the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and the cost of labor, parts and materials not maintained in stock would be in excess of $200: Provided further, That all repair and overhaul of aircraft of the Civil Aeronautics Adminstration which cannot be performed within the foregoing limitation shall be done on contract after submission of bids."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 56: Page 68, line 14, insert:

"The Navy Department is authorized to transfer without charge to the Coast and Geodetic Survey two AGP seaplane tenders, two PCS submarine chasers, and three SC submarine chasers from the reserve or surplus to the needs of the Navy Department, each of the seven vessels equipped with the necessary launches and ship's outfit."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 57: Page 69, line 17, after the matter stricken out, insert "(not to exceed $5,757,000, $1,557,000 of which is to be exclusively for the Office of Small Business at the seat of government)."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RABAUT moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 57 and concur in the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(not to exceed $4,500,000, $500,000 of which is to be used at the seat of government for aids and services to small business)."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 58: Page 69, line 22, after the word "law" insert "including the purchase of commercial and trade reports; employment of aliens; temporary employment of persons or organizations by contract or otherwise without regard to the civil-service and classification laws (not exceeding $50,000)."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 65: Page 72, line 2, after the word "patents" insert "and 10 cents per copy for design patents and certificates of trade-mark registration."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 73: Page 79, line 17, after the word "soundings" insert the following: ": Provided further, That in the conduct of meteorological investigations in the Arctic region, pursuant to Public Law 296, approved February 12, 1946, the funds herein appropriated shall be available for the appointment of employees at rates to be fixed by the Chief of the Weather Bureau without regard to the civil-service laws and classification Act, but the maximum base rate of pay shall not be in excess of $7,500 per annum and at no time more than three employees shall be in a pay status at such rate of pay, and no other employees shall receive in excess of the base rate of pay of $5,000 per annum; the furnishing of food, shelter, and protective clothing and equipment, without repayment therefor, to employees of the Government assigned to Arctic stations; and the War and Navy Department are authorized in the fiscal year 1947, subject to the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to transfer without charge to the Weather Bureau materials, equipment, and supplies, surplus to the needs of the War and Navy Departments and necessary for the establishment, maintenance, and operation of Arctic weather stations: Provided further, That the unexpended balance of the amount appropriated for Arctic weather stations under authority of said act for the fiscal year 1946 is hereby merged with this appropriation and continued available for the purposes thereof until June 30, 1947."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 74: Page 80, line 18, insert:

"Maintenance and operation of meteorological facilities (Executive Order 9709): For all necessary expenses of maintenance and operation of meteorological facilities, by contract or otherwise, in foreign countries and in Territories and possessions of the United States, in accordance with Executive Order 9709, dated March 29, 1946, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $2,000,000, of which not to exceed $40,000 may be expended for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RABAUT moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and concur in the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$2,000,000" named in said amendment insert "$1,750,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 81: Page 95, line 24, strike out lines 24 and 25, and on page 96 strike out lines 1 to 17 inclusive and insert:

"SEC. 501. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law."

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the several motions was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5990) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, for the consideration of Senate amendment No. 1.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Senate amendment No. 1: Page 2, line 1, strike out "$6,000,000" and insert "$10,000,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARY) there were—ayes 98, noes 6.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 195, nays 100, not voting 137, as follows:

The doors were opened.

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House agree to the further conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. COFFEE, GARY, FLOOD, O'NEAL, STEFAN, HORAN, and CANFIELD.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL ACT AND STABILIZATION ACT

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 689, Rept. No. 2444), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That notwithstanding the provisions of any other rule of the House immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 371) extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and all points of order against said joint resolution are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the joint resolution for amendment the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK AND HOUR OF MEETING ON TUESDAY

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition in order to inquire of the majority leader as to the program for tonight and next week.

Mr. McCORMACK. So far as the rest of the afternoon is concerned, I do not know that I can give much information to the House. I do not know of any conference reports. Would the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] inform the House as to the situation?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We have no further conference reports and there will be no more conference reports ready tonight. We will have conference reports ready on Monday.

Mr. McCORMACK. That being the case, that gives the House very essential and valuable information.

Mr. TABER. Would it not be proper at this time perhaps to have arrangements made so that conference reports on Monday might be taken up on Monday even though they were not filed until then? Perhaps we ought to cover that tonight.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is an excellent suggestion.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to consider conference reports on Monday which are reported on that day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. With reference to the program for next week, of course, on Monday the joint memorial exercises will be held for our late President, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Will any legislative business be taken up after the holding of the memorial exercises?

Mr. McCORMACK. Then the OPA extension bill on which a rule has just been reported will come up. Then, of course, conference reports will be considered. In other words, we will have a legislative day on Monday after the exercises are over.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. How long will the memorial exercises last?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am unable to state exactly, but probably an hour and a half.

On Tuesday there is the Consent Calendar and the Private Calendar to be taken up. The bill H. R. 6811 will be taken up under suspension. There is the railroad retirement bill, which I have kept on the calendar for the next legislative order of business. That will be continued Tuesday and Wednesday until disposed of. Of course, conference reports will take preference.

Calendar Wednesday has been dispensed with. If on Wednesday the railroad retirement bill is completed and other legislation is out of the way, and if we can consider another bill, I have put down the Reed bill, H. R. 5924.

On Thursday there is no business.

On Friday and Saturday we will have general debate on the British loan.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I wonder if the leaders would consent to an agreement. The Committee on Military Affairs has been considering the atomic-bomb legislation and has been handicapped very much during the past week or 10 days due to difficulties in the committee, plus the fact that the House has been meeting at 10 o'clock on several days, which is the hour that the committee meets. Yesterday the committee found itself without a quorum and was unable to proceed, and the committee therefore recessed until 10 o'clock Tuesday.

Now, if it is not too much of an upset of the leader's program, I wish we could agree to set aside the previous agreement and let the House meet at 11 o'clock at that time so that we may have 1 hour for the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think that is a proper request.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous order entered that when the House adjourns on Monday next it adjourn to meet on Tuesday at 10 o'clock be vacated, and in substitution thereof I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Monday next it adjourn to meet on Tuesday at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand that on Tuesday a bill reported from the World War Veterans Committee will be taken up for consideration, the bill that provides for not cutting the single men while hospitalized, and also a 20 percent flat increase in all compensation.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is H. R. 6811, I believe. That is the bill I had in mind. If that is not the correct number, the bill I have in mind is the one to take care of veterans in the hospitals.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. To not cut the single men in the hospital. It was a very cruel provision that cut them in the beginning.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is the bill I had in mind.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There will be 16 hours' general debate on the British loan bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is true.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That means it will go into the following week?

Mr. McCORMACK. In all probability, yes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. At what time do we convene on Wednesday morning?

Mr. McCORMACK. It is all according to the status of the railroad retirement bill at that time. If it appears we should come in at 11 o'clock, I will confer with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]. As it now stands, it will be 12 o'clock. In any event, it would not be before 11 o'clock.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. I wonder if the distinguished majority leader will look at that paper and see if he can see any sign of hope for bringing up the water pollution control bill in which a great many of us are interested.

Mr. McCORMACK. To be frank, this particular piece of paper is vacant on that bill. However, I want to say the House has done a remarkable job. This House has done a month's work this week. I want to express my gratitude. The gentleman realizes the situation I am in regarding next week. If the gentleman will confer with me the latter part of next week, I will do everything I can. If we can see things ahead I know there will be cooperation, where we can meet at 10 o'clock and call up legislation, with a view to as early an adjournment for the summer as possible.

Mr. MUNDT. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] has expired.

COAST GUARD APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6428, an act making appropriations for the Coast Guard, Treasury Department, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. D'ALESANDRO, Mr. KOPPLEMANN, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. TABER, Mr. KEEFE, and Mr. CANFIELD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Hon. James A. Farley.

Mr. PRICE of Florida asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two letters.

Mr. VURSELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

SPEAKER AUTHORIZED TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS NOTWITHSTANDING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House the Speaker be authorized and empowered to sign any enrolled bills found duly enrolled.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAGEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article entitled "The Fence That Made Cattle History."

Mr. PATTERSON (at the request of Mr. HEALY) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. DOYLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by the president of the Association of World War Pilots II, and also an editorial from the Compton Herald.

Mrs. LUCE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include several newspaper editorials.

Mr. MUNDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DAY NURSERY SCHOOLS

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5933) to authorize and direct the Board of Education of the District of Columbia to establish and operate in the public schools and other suitable locations a system of nurseries and nursery schools for day care of school-age and under-school-age children, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. McMILLAN of South Carolina, HEALY, and BEALL.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. OUTLAND] is recognized for 30 minutes.

PROGRESS IN THE CALIFORNIA PHYSICIANS' SERVICE

Mr. OUTLAND. Mr. Speaker, more than 2 years ago, on March 20, 1944, to be exact, it was my privilege to discuss on this floor the background, development, and achievements of the California Physicians' Service. I pointed out at that time that this whole subject of group medical care and health insurance seemed fated to always be discussed with a maximum of heat and a minimum of light. I mentioned that it was my firm conviction that the leaders in the medical profession of this country should be taking an active lead in the planning for more adequate health facilities for our people.

This afternoon I want to discuss some of the progress that has been made in the work of the California Physicians' Service, as well as mention other developments in different parts of the country. I emphasize today, as I emphasized 2 years ago that my remarks have no connection whatsoever with any legislation that has been proposed either in this House or in the Senate; I am not here to comment upon the merits or the demerits of the many suggested health bills with which all of us are somewhat familiar. My remarks are to be directed solely to what I personally believe to be a genuine contribution to health planning in America, and especially to the outstanding achievements of the doctors of my own State of California.

Two years ago in my discussion of California Physicians' Service I pointed out that the doctors of medicine in California had banded together voluntarily to offer to the people of the State the opportunity of budgeting their medical, surgical, and hospital costs. While the entire operation of California Physicians' Service is not actually an insurance business there are some of the same elements about it that we generally look for in insurance. Principal among these is the element of a pooled fund. The subscribers to the service—the patients—put in their monthly contributions and the doctors render the service and agree to take as their payment only that amount which is actually earned. The doctors are the underwriters of the fund; if there is not enough money to pay them what their services would normally command, they take what is available and accept that as full payment for their services.

This type of underwriting is designed for only one purpose and I believe we should pay tribute to that one underlying motive. It is a motive of public service, regardless of the financial return to the doctors.

While we must admire the unselfishness of these doctors in their willingness to provide professional service and think about financial return later, we must also look at the practical side of what this attitude means.

In the case of California Physicians' Service it means that we have in one group a large number of doctors—more than 7,000 in this one State—who have established a system of service which is available for public as well as private bodies. This group has already entered into two contracts with departments of the Federal Government—the Federal Public Housing Authority and the Farm Security Administration. These contracts have meant a cooperative working agreement between Government on the one hand and private professional men on the other. While I would not venture to say that these contracts have been 100 percent satisfactory in all respects, I am thoroughly satisfied that the net result of these agreements has been the provision of high quality medical care which otherwise would not have been available. Both Procurement and Assignment Service and the Federal Public Housing Authority have gone on record as commending California Physicians' Service for providing a needed medical service in the housing projects in California during the emergency.

The point is that where you have a cooperative group of doctors banded together in their own organization you can deal collectively with this group for the provision of needed medical services which otherwise might not be furnished. And it is a big step in the right direction.

The finest example of such dealing that has come to my attention for many months is the contract recently executed between California Physicians' Service and the Veterans' Administration for the provision of medical care for service-connected disabilities. The new Administration of the Veterans' Administration found itself confronted with a tremendous accumulation of service-connected disabilities which could not possibly be handled in the hospitals and facilities now operated by the Administration. Greatly to the credit of General Bradley and his chief medical officer, General Hawley, the Veterans' Administration acted without delay to see to it that the veterans received their out-patient care. Contracts were signed with California Physicians' Service and Michigan Medical Service, and other State-wide groups of doctors organized on a similar basis. Under these contracts the doctors in the organized group provide the medical services authorized by the Veterans' Administration and the Administration takes care of the payment for such services.

The net result of this agreement is that the veterans are receiving the care to which they are entitled—and they are receiving it at home from their own family doctors. They need not be institutionalized. They need not travel to veterans' facilities which may be inconveniently located both for the veterans and their families. They need not undergo any great measure of restrictive paper work. They merely go to their own doctors on proper authorization and receive the care they need and to which they are entitled.

This phase of the program is new. It has been in existence for only a few short months, but it has already proved itself capable of meeting this pressing problem and of assuring our returning veterans that their medical problems will be promptly, adequately, and efficiently handled.

When the program was first put into effect, Gen. Omar Bradley paid tribute to the doctors of California for their part in making this care available to the veterans. He said, and I quote:

> I want to congratulate the physicians of California on the excellent manner in which the medical profession of California is cooperating in rendering care to the veterans.

After the program had been in effect for a short while, Gen. Paul R. Hawley, chief medical officer of the Veterans' Administration, paid a further tribute to the doctors and to the entire program. He said, and again I am quoting:

> I heartily approve of the care that is being rendered to California veterans by the medical profession in that State. I believe that California Physicians' Service, as an agency of the California medical profession, has made possible in a very short time immediate and efficient medical care to the veterans of California.

From the veterans themselves we have had similar expressions of approval. I will quote only one at this time, but similar statements have been made elsewhere and they all add to the growing volume of evidence of the effectiveness and practicality of furnishing medical service to the veterans on this hometown basis. The man I am now quoting is Dr. Burthel Henning, of San Francisco, a private practitioner, who serves as chairman of the medical advisory board of the California State Department of the American Legion. Dr. Henning says, and again I am quoting:

> The agreement between California Physicians' Service and the Veterans' Administration is a forward step in prompt care of veterans with service-connected disabilities. The Veterans' Administration cannot maintain doctors and hospitals in every community in the State, but this agreement makes it possible to extend medical and hospital service to these veterans in their own towns. The advantages to the veteran and to his whole community are obvious.

Without elaborating further, I believe we have here ample evidence that this form of cooperative action by the doctors of California has gone a long way toward meeting a serious problem for the returning veterans to whom we all owe so much. I will add only one more thought before going on to another subject. The doctors of California have met the challenge of medical service to the returning veterans in splendid fashion. More than 1,000 doctors have joined California Physicians' Service in the past 6 months, many of them being veterans themselves. All of them have agreed to take care of the veterans under this new program. To me, this is a wonderful example of forward-looking planning in the health field.

Now, on another front—the farm front—we find this same cooperation acting for the health interests of our citizens. We have often heard it said that our rural residents are so far removed from the metropolitan centers that they cannot secure adequate medical care. We have heard our farm neighbors referred to as the forgotten men in an economy which centers around our large cities. True, our farmers are removed from some of the facilities of the cities but in the matter of medical care I am proud to state that California Physicians' Service has again shown itself interested in and willing to provide adequate medical, surgical, and hospital care for the farmers.

Within the past 6 months there has been signed a contract between California Physicians' Service and the State Grange of California for the provision of this care. The contract is a practical document, based on a progressive 3-year program, to start with medical services on a moderate supply basis and to increase the scope of the coverage as time goes on, as experience is gained, and as the farmer members become accustomed to the high quality of medical service they will receive under this plan.

Our farmers have long since gathered together in producer cooperatives. Now they are contracting with another producer cooperative—this one operated by the doctors, for the benefit of the grange members. This is the first exampe to my knowledge of such a contractual arrangement. Time alone will tell the story of its success but I am sure that where two cooperative groups such as the farmer and the doctors agree on the basic principles of service, the program must push ahead. I can see no failure in a plan of this kind; only success for all concerned.

Indicative of the reception of this program by the grange, let me quote you from the message of Mr. George Sehlmeyer, master of the California State Grange, to his members. Mr. Sehlmeyer said, and I quote:

> We urge that you and your grange give this plan immediate consideration * * * it should not only result in building our membership but at the same time will bring medical care and hospital service to our members at reasonable cost.

At a grange meeting in one California county, Mr. Sehlmeyer expanded on his previous statements and pointed out how the freedom of action of the indivi-ual members would be preserved under this cooperative movement:

> The hospital and health care plan worked out between the State grange and California Physicians' Service would be * * * a purely voluntary group contract. Our grange members would be free to subscribe to * * * the system or not. There would be no involuntary assessment of the entire membership.

> In the second place, this plan does not limit its beneficiaries in their selection of physicians or hospitals but gives them free choice of more than 7,000 physcians and surgeons in every part of the State and of any licensed hospital in the State.

Recently Mr. Sehlmeyer stated that—and I quote:

> This is the first time in California, or any other State I know of, that a cooperative arrangement has been made providing for a prepaid medical service to farm families over the area of an entire State. We have high hopes for its success.

In publishing that statement, the editor of the Grange News added his own editorial comment, stating that—

The eyes of the Nation are on California again. That the California State Grange is again about to set the pace for others to follow is shown by requests received by the Grange News from the National Grange Monthly and other Grange publications in the East and Midwest, asking for news releases on the progress the prepaid medical plan is making here.

These statements are sufficient to show the interest in this program by the farmers of California who are affiliated with the State grange. There are about 30,000 of them, and together with their families they make up a group of about 75,000 people. Their medical care and hospital service contract with California Physicians' Service indicates once again how the problems of furnishing prepaid medical and hospital care can be met on a group basis and on a voluntary basis. If this plan is successful, and I believe firmly that it will be, I anticipate that it will spread to many other States.

I could go on at great length with similar examples of the progress of California Physicians' Service. For instance, one of the large oil companies of California which has long maintained its own medical care program for its employees, has recently arranged with California Physicians' Service to provide medical and hospital care for the families of these employees. Here again we see a group movement made possible by an organization of professional men on one side anxious to provide the best in medical care for the people and willing and able to deal intelligently with an employer who is likewise anxious to provide for the health care needs of his employees and their families.

I need not go any further on this line. There are many examples that could be given but I think the ones mentioned are sufficient to indicate the pioneering spirit of the doctors of California.

These are some of the new developments in prepaid medical care in California. It is worthwhile also to look at the progress of the regular program, the prepayment program that has been operating since 1939. In my address to this House 2 years ago I dwelt particularly on this regular program and I would like now to bring that information up to date. In the past 2 years California Physicians' Service has doubled its membership. Today it is serving more than 228,000 beneficiary members. This number is still too small for a State the size of California but this rate of growth, which has come about despite the heavy labor turnover during the reconversion period, indicates that this prepayment medical care service is really geared up to go places today.

The initial period of groping and feeling the way has passed. The trial and error experiments of the early days are over. Today California Physicians' Service has a workable program, beneficial to the public and acceptable to the physician, a program which is daily demonstrating its value in terms of increased enrollment.

Before closing I want to point out that California is not the only State where progress of this type has been made. We know that there are similar medical cooperatives in 29 States today. Some of them are still in their infancy but all of them are dedicated to public service and all of them command our respect and admiration. California is by no means the largest of these. The largest is doubtless the Michigan Medical Service, which has long served the people of Michigan and which today has enrolled in its service about one person out of each six in that State. In Massachussetts we have the Massachusetts Medical Service, a thriving and lusty infant which has captured the public mind and is spreading rapidly in that State. We have other plans in New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio—the list is too long to read here. In some of the more sparsely settled States we also have prepayment medical care plans. One was recently started in Montana, another in New Mexico.

Today there are more than 3,600,000 people enrolled in the voluntary sickness-insurance plans. This is just about double the number enrolled a year ago and the rate of growth of these plans is now assuming large proportions. In fact, these medical cooperatives have grown more in their early years than the Blue Cross plans, with which we are all familiar, grew in a comparable period at their inception.

I should point out that it is a tribute to the doctors of several of the larger States that they have given freely of their time, their money, and their experience to help out their smaller neighbors. This is true with California Physicians' Service and it is likewise true with Michigan Medical Service, Massachusetts Medical Service, and others. The movement toward cooperation exists not only within State borders but crosses over State lines to effect a national cooperative movement which is snowballing right now and from which we will hear much more in the future.

A few months ago I read with interest of the national medical-care program sponsored by the American Medical Association and its constituent State medical associations. It proposes that the 48 State medical associations take the lead in establishing their own State-wide programs of prepaid medical care insurance, and then, through the central office facilities of the American Medical Association, put into effect a reciprocal agreement between the State plans for the benefit of the members, the public. This plan allows each State to develop its own program on the basis of the actual needs and requirements in that State. When this is done, there is provision for the interchanging of membership benefits between the States, so that the member from California who is injured in New Jersey will receive the same medical and hospital care there that he would receive if he were at home.

This movement is still new but I believe it indicates a real desire on the part of the medical profession to serve the public. As an example of this desire, may I quote briefly from an address given in Los Angeles on May 7 of this year by Dr. Philip K. Gilman, president of the California Medical Association? Doctor Gilman said, and I quote:

Today medicine realizes that the public is the master of us all and that what is good for the public is good for medicine.

That statement points the way toward improved medical-care plans for the benefit of the public. Further, it shows an attitude on the part of the medical profession which of necessity must lead to an even greater public service by doctors of medicine than we have witnessed in the past. It is unfortunate that a few medical men have sometimes given a different impression to the American people.

It is under a policy such as Doctor Gilman has outlined that the State medical associations, acting through the American Medical Association, have set up their Nation-wide pattern of prepayment medical service.

This service has two primary functions. One is to aid and assist in the establishment of prepayment medical-care plans in all those areas where such plans do not already exist. The other is to serve as a clearinghouse between the various State or regional programs. Under this project a member of a State prepayment plan in California would be honored as a member of the Michigan plan if he happened to be in Michigan and to require medical, surgical, or hospital service there and then. This type of reciprocal agreement will be spread from State to State, from region to region, resulting eventually in what will actually be a Nation-wide service operated on State or regional lines for the benefit of the people in that State or region.

We cannot hope to achieve immediately uniformity between widely separated States in the matter of the health-care needs of their people. But we can achieve a working arrangement such as associated medical-care plans, is developing, so that our people may move around as freely as they desire and may count upon receiving the same benefits away from home that they would expect in their own front yards.

I salute this Nation-wide movement of the American Medical Association and its constituent State medical associations and I salute particularly the part the physicians of my own State of California have had in helping to develop this movement. It is through organizations such as this that the benefits of modern medical science can and will be applied to all of our people. It is through organizations such as this that our people will become educated to the availability of high-grade medical service on a budget basis. And, finally, it is through organizations such as California Physicians' Service and its fellow State-wide plans, together with their own national organization, that the best in medical science will be brought to all of our people under a cooperative, voluntary plan.

I have always contended that the medical profession has a responsibility, a serious responsibility in leading the way toward an America where health care is available to all citizens. Without criticizing any other suggestions, without even commenting on other plans, I do believe that such work as is now being done by the California Physicians' Service is a bright beacon. The progress already made is a most hopeful sign of what we can expect in the future. I am proud to call to the attention of Congress and the American people this excellent work that is going on in California under the leadership of the medical men and women in my State.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OUTLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. What is the method used in entering into those contracts with the United States Housing Authority? How is it done? Is it a voluntary proposition?

Mr. OUTLAND. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. What part, then, does the Government play in that contract?

Mr. OUTLAND. The Government plays no part at all.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. It is with the people living in these houses?

Mr. OUTLAND. Oh, I misunderstood the gentleman. The Government plays no part as far as doctors are concerned. It is the California Physicians' Service which enters into that type of contract. The Government plays an indirect part inasmuch as it assists with its own agency.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I did not understand that.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OUTLAND. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. I want to commend the gentleman from California for bringing this to the attention of the House. I believe the answer to the admitted inequity in the distribution of medical care is to be found along the lines of the experiments in the gentleman's State, and the experiments in Michigan and in my own State as well as several others. By your experiment in California and our experimenting in Minnesota and others in Michigan with voluntary systems, we can develop experimental data on which we can work out a sound actuarial program of medical care which I believe will give a better way of solving the difficulties that we all know we face than any other system I have seen. I congratulate the gentleman.

Mr. OUTLAND. I thank the gentleman very much. In view of the gentleman's wide experience in the medical field I should like to make an additional comment. Does not the gentleman from Minnesota feel that the experience which is being gained through what may be termed "the trial-and-error method" in California, in Michigan, in the gentleman's own State, and in other places there is being laid the basis for what will eventually be an increased health service for the American people on a sound basis, cooperatively worked out between groups and individuals on the one hand and the medical profession on the other?

Mr. JUDD. Yes; because the practice of medicine is so personal and intimate that if there is not the wholehearted cooperation of the doctor—I do not care what the system looks like on paper—it will not work. If the doctors, the community, and the Government organization work together in formulating the plans and it is mutually agreeable, it has a good chance of being successful.

Mr. OUTLAND. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. JUDD. In my experience the system will work if a doctor is working for the patient. If the doctor is working for the Government, then it does not work. For some reason or other there is not the incentive, there is not the intimate personal relationship when a doctor is working for the state and gets paid by the state as is the case when the doctor is working for the patient even though he is paid through the patient from this mutual-insurance fund.

Mr. OUTLAND. While the experience we have been getting in California and elsewhere is probably not the complete answer, at the same time it is furnishing data and background on which future plans can be made to increase the medical service to the American people.

Mr. JUDD. That, I think, is the single greatest value of it. Some people look at the admitted inadequacy of medical care to some group under our system and they say, "Scrap it." I do not think that is the answer. If a system has good points, hang onto them, and modify them and correct them, in order to work out a system to provide adequate medical care.

Mr. OUTLAND. I will say this to the gentleman that it has always been my contention that in the long run the providing of adequate care for the American people will have to be worked out not by forcing some type of plan on our doctors, but through asking their cooperation in meeting that problem. In California, it seems to me, our physicians have worked out what at the present time is probably the best plan in the United States. It has not gone far enough. It does not cover enough people. There are many inequities to be corrected, but it is a big step in the right direction.

Mr. JUDD. If the gentleman will yield further, I want to make this observation. What I have felt we ought to do in this whole problem is do the thing that a scientist or a physician does when he makes a new discovery. He has a remedy that he is convinced is good and it will cure this or the other disease, but he does not try it out on himself. He first tries it out on the guinea pigs and the rabbits and the monkeys, and then he gets some volunteers before he tries it out on himself. I do not know whether this system will work. So we should try it out in some county or some municipality rather than in one fell swoop try it out on the country as a whole.

Mr. OUTLAND. I agree with the gentleman, but I trust that he does not place the citizens of California in the category of guinea pigs.

Mr. JUDD. But if it was not done from the outside and superimposed on them in that manner it would ultimately lead to the correct solution.

Mr. OUTLAND. I want to say one thing further. When I was in California I was a member of the Health Service which was rendered by the California Physicians Service, and to me it was an excellent way by which I could budget monthly to take care of the health needs of myself and my family, including an emergency, such as hospitalization. There were additional provisions in the California Physicians' Service for it, and I am sure the gentleman knows that this movement has already spread to a great many other States outside of California. I think there are about 20 now that have various plans.

Mr. JUDD. To me this is one of the genuises of this form of government. It should not be imposed from the top. In all of the 48 States you can have trial and error, and until we know what is sound and what is unsound, as in education and as in medicine, we ought by all means to keep decentralized the system where we can carry out such experimenting in order to make sure that the ultimate system adopted for the country will be sound. I thank the gentleman for bringing this to the attention of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, as I understand this program is expanding; it is growing.

Mr. OUTLAND. That is correct. It is expanding and growing, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, not only in California but other States are experimenting along the same line as I have tried to point out.

As I said in response to one of the statements of the gentleman from Minnesota, to me it is a very healthy omen, a very good sign that the medical profession itself is waking up to its responsibility in regard to more decent care for the American people.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OUTLAND. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell me what the plan is called?

Mr. OUTLAND. California Physicians' Service.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very much interested because we have a low-cost plan in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. OUTLAND. Yes. I am familiar with the plan to a very limited degree.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL ACT AND STABILIZATION ACT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 29,1946.

Memorandum for the Speaker:

On page 10 of the Message of the President returning to the House of Representatives today, without approval, H. R. 6042, "An act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes," the date October 1–15, 1946 appears incorrectly in the next to the last paragraph. This date should read October 1–15, 1941 (instead of 1946).

Will you kindly have the official copy and the RECORD corrected accordingly?

CHARLES G. ROSS,
Secretary to the President.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PACE, for Tuesday and Wednesday, July 2 and 3, 1946, on account of urgent official business.

To Mr. SHERIDAN (at the request of Mr. GREEN), indefinitely, on account of official business.

To Mr. TOWE (at the request of Mr. EATON), for 4 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey (at the request of Mr. CANFIELD), from June 29 to July 5, 1946, on account of illness.

To Mr. HARTLEY (at the request of Mr. SUNDSTROM), for 3 days, on account of official business.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 2234. An act to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 1654. An act to provide for the registration and protection of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes;

H. R. 3517. An act to authorize the admission into the United States of persons of races indigenous to India, and persons of races indigenous to the Philippine Islands, to make them racially eligible for naturalization, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4512. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5244. An act to authorize the appointment of additional foreign-service officers in the classified grades;

H. R. 5716. An act to amend the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended;

H. R. 6335. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6429. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6516. An act to increase the salaries of the Metropolitan Police, the United States Park Police, the White House Police, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on the following dates present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following title:

On June 28, 1946:

H. R. 6042. An act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and for other purposes.

On June 29, 1946:

H. R. 1654. An act to provide for the registration and protection of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes;

H. R. 3517. An act to authorize the admission into the United States of persons of races indigenous to the Philippine Islands, to make them racially eligible for naturalization, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4512. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for research relating to psychiatric disorders and to aid in the development of more effective methods of prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of such disorders, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5244. An act to authorize the appointment of additional foreign-service officers in the classified grades;

H. R. 5716. An act to amend the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended;

H. R. 6335. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6429. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6516. An act to increase the salaries of the Metropolitan Police, the United States Park Police, the White House Police, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, July 1, 1946, at 11:30 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. FLANNAGAN: Committee on Agriculture. H. R. 6828. A bill to provide for continuance of the farm labor supply program up to and including June 30, 1947; without amendment (Rept. No. 2435). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. CHENOWETH: Committee on Claims. H. R. 4720. A bill to amend the act of December 7, 1944, relating to certain overtime compensation of civilian employees of the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 2436). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. RANDOLPH: Committee on the Civil Service. H. R. 4718. A bill to provide optional retirement for Government officers and employees who have rendered at least 25 years of service; with amendments (Rept. No. 2443). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. SABATH: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 689. Resolution providing for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 371, joint resolution extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended; without amendment (Rept. No. 2444). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. DOYLE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1351. A bill for the relief of Maxine Estelle Boyle, Max W. Boyle, and E. B. Rosegarten; with amendments (Rept. No. 2437). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PITTENGER: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1631. A bill for the relief of William Tolar Smith; without amendment (Rept. No. 2438). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CASE of New Jersey: Committee on Claims. H. R. 2850. A bill for the relief of Felix Napiorkowski; without amendment (Rept. No. 2439). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PITTENGER: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5874. A bill for the relief of Joseph Maezer; with amendments (Rept. No. 2440). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BARRETT of Pennsylvania: Committee on Claims. H. R. 4496. A bill for the relief of Anne Robinson Norwood; without amendment (Rept. No. 2441). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. COMBS: Committee on Claims. H. R. 6321. A bill for the relief of Dr. Theodore A. Geissman; with amendments (Rept. No. 2442). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BIEMILLER:

H. R. 6931. A bill to provide appropriate medals for mothers of members of the armed forces who lost their lives in action against an enemy of the United States in World War II; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FLANNAGAN:

H. R. 6932. A bill to provide for further research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to improve and facilitate the marketing and distribution of agricultural products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MAY:

H. R. 6933. A bill to change the name of the Chemical Warfare Service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BLAND:

H. J. Res. 370. Joint resolution granting certain property to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and relinquishing jurisdiction therein; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. SPENCE:

H. J. Res. 371. Joint resolution extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma:

H. Con. Res. 159. Concurrent resolution to direct the President to take the necessary action to prohibit the exportation of not more than 2 percent of all durable goods produced, processed, or sold under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and/or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mrs. LUCE:

H. Res. 688. A resolution for the development and control of atomic energy; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLOOM:

H. R. 6934. A bill for the relief of Avelino, Francisca, Stella, and Iris Iglesias and Avelino Iglesias, Jr.; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. EARTHMAN:

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII,

2048. Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON presented a petition of L. F. Varvel, Sr., route 1, box 120, Easterly, Tex., favoring House bill 6340; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

SENATE

MONDAY, JULY 1, 1946

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. Charles W. Flint, D. D., resident bishop, Washington area, Methodist Church, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, humbly yet boldly we approach Thee. We are of many minds, differing in judgment on many matters, even worshiping in divers manners, but just now we are one as we bow in reverence before Thee, the God and Father of us all. Our voices are stilled that we may hear Thy voice.

Reorient us. Our insights are so fragmentary; at best, they are but broken lights of Thee; give us of Thy wisdom that we may be wise. Each day, this day, trace Thy designs on the trestle board of our souls.

Not only enlighten, but also empower us, so that, day by day, we may nearer and nearer approximate the doing of Thy will on earth, even as it is in heaven.

We ask in the name of Him by whom we come to God, the Life, the Truth, the Way. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Saturday, June 29, 1946, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, and he announced that on June 29, 1946, the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

S. 896. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended," approved January 24, 1942, and for other purposes;

S. 2219. An act to extend for the period of 1 year the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, approved December 2, 1941, as amended; and

S. 2122. An act to facilitate the admission into the United States of the alien fiancées or fiancés of members of the armed forces of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5933) to authorize and direct the Board of Education of the District of Columbia to establish and operate in the public schools and other suitable locations a system of nurseries and nursery schools for day care of school-age and under-school-age children, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina, Mr. HEALY and Mr. BEALL were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 1 to the bill (H. R. 5990) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. COFFEE, Mr. GARY, Mr. FLOOD, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. STEFAN, Mr. HORAN, and Mr. CANFIELD were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6056) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and the Judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 26, 39, 40, 56, 58, 65, 73, and 81 to the bill, and concurred therein; and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 46, 50, 57, and 74 to the bill and concurred therein, severally with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6428) making appropriations for the Coast Guard, Treasury Department, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. D'ALESANDRO, Mr. KOPPLEMANN, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. TABER, Mr. KEEFE, and Mr. CANFIELD were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under authority of the order of the Senate of June 29, 1946,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced that during the adjournment he signed the bill (H. R. 6682) to amend sections 81, 82, and 83, and to repeal section 84 of chapter IX of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIMPLIFICATION AND IMPROVEMENT OF CREDIT SERVICES TO FARMERS—APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES

Under authority of the order of the Senate of June 29, 1946,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. STEWART, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. AIKEN conferees on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5991) to simplify and improve credit services to farmers and promote farm ownership by abolishing certain agricultural lending agencies and functions, by transferring assets to the Farmers' Home Corporation, by enlarging the powers of the Farmers' Home Corporation, by authorizing Government insurance of loans to farmers, by creating preferences for loans and insured mortgages to enable veterans to acquire farms, by providing additional specific authority and directions with respect to the liquidation of resettlement projects and rural rehabilitation projects for resettlement purposes, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

REPORT OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

A letter from the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, transmitting, pursuant to law, a full report of that Board covering operations during the year 1945 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REPORTS ON AUDIT OF UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION AND WAR SHIPPING ADMINISTRATION

A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, reports on audit of United States Maritime Commission and War Shipping Administration for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1944 (with accompanying reports); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

PETITIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate 18 telegrams in the nature of petitions from citizens of the United States praying for the continuation of the Office of Price Administration, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference and to have printed in the RECORD a telegram which has just reached me from the Wichita (Kans.) Chamber of Commerce concerning price-control legislation.

There being no objection, the telegram was received, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WICHITA, KANS., June 30, 1946.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Wichita Chamber of Commerce still favors principles embodied in OPA bill passed by House on April 18, H. R. 6042. We strongly oppose any effort to reinstate OPA for any considerable period of time in its recent form. We are sending following telegram to President Truman, which will also acquaint you more fully with our views: "Speaking the sentiments of many thousands of businessmen and other citizens of this city and area, the Wichita Chamber of Commerce most respectfully opposes your request that Congress pass price-control bill more stringent than vetoed bill. We have the firm conviction that OPA should be continued for a few more months in greatly modified form in order to encourage maximum production and help fight off inflation. We strongly favor the principles embodied in bill the House passed April 18. If Nation is to get full production and defeat inflation, and if the American people do not want Government to gradually take over and operate all business and industry, then price ceilings must cover increased costs and allow reasonable profits, and ceilings must be removed when supply and demand are balanced for any commodity or article. Complete elimination of Government subsidies must be accomplished as rapidly as possible, in the interest of economy and to be honest and fair to posterity. Reduction of customary discounts, which force smaller profits for dealers than the established practices have allowed in the various lines of business, must be prohibited, because the standard, prewar profit margins are fair, equitable, and necessary to sound business operation and to employment of returning veterans and war workers. These principles are recognized in bill passed by House in April. Government should not reach for more power or cling tenaciously to wartime powers. Unrealistic OPA policies have tragically delayed reconversion ever since VJ-day and have hindered production and seriously increased inflation. OPA must be greatly modified, or its continuance would cause untold injury to every person in the United States. It is vitally necessary that any price-control bill passed by Congress shall restrict OPA in very definite ways to accomplish the objectives mentioned and prevent the repetition of its foolish policies of the past."

LLOYD A. WILSON,
General Manager,
Wichita Chamber of Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

EXTENSION OF EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACTS OF 1942

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I offer for appropriate reference a joint resolution extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I object to the introduction of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the introduction of the joint resolution will be postponed under the rules for one legislative day.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARKLEY (for Mr. WHEELER):

S. 2396. A bill to grant to the city of Miles City, State of Montana, certain land in Custer County, Mont., for industrial and recreational purposes and as a museum site; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. McMAHON:

S. 2397. A bill to provide for the payment of a disability retirement annuity to Joseph J. O'Loughlin; to the Committee on Civil Service.

S. 2398. A bill for the relief of Senzo Usui; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. CHAVEZ:

S. 2399. A bill for the relief of Epifanio Lucero; and

S. 2400. A bill for the relief of Solly Manasse; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 2401. A bill to amend the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat. 369), as amended, to authorize the President to appoint 250 acting assistant surgeons for temporary service; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ANDREWS:

S. 2402. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the acquisition, establishment, and development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital," approved May 29, 1930; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

(Mr. BYRD introduced Senate Joint Resolution 171, extending the rent-control provisions of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, until June 30, 1947, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and appears under a separate heading.)

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. SMITH (for himself, Mr. BYRD, Mr. WALSH, Mr. WILLIS, Mr. HART, and Mr. McCLELLAN) submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the bill (S. 1850) to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, to secure the national defense, to advance the national health and welfare, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PUBLIC WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS—AMENDMENT

Mr. WALSH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6407) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PUBLIC WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS FOR FLOOD CONTROL—AMENDMENTS

Mr. WILEY submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6597) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR ACT OF 1937—AMENDMENTS

Mr. OVERTON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6689) to extend, for an additional year, the provisions of the Sugar Act of 1937, as amended, and the taxes with respect to sugar, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF EVENTS RELATING TO SETTLEMENT OF RAILROAD STRIKE—AMENDMENT

Mr. MORSE. I ask unanimous consent to submit a substitute for Senate Resolution 278 to investigate events leading up to the settlement of the railroad strike on May 25, 1946. The substitute resolution is identical with the original resolution save and except it adds subpena powers on the part of the committee, and an expense item of $10,000.

There being no objection, the amendment was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF REVIEW OF REPORTS ON THE MERMENTAU RIVER AND TRIBUTARIES, LOUISIANA (S. DOC. NO. 231)

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I present a letter from the Secretary of War transmitting a report dated April 16, 1946, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on a review of reports on and a preliminary examination and survey of the Mermentau River and tributaries, including Bayou Queue De Tortue, La., and of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway and connecting waters in Louisiana between Bayou Sale Ridge and the Calcasieu River, in the interest of navigation, flood control, irrigation and drainage, and for the prevention of stream pollution and salt water intrusion, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed as a Senate document, with an illustration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LABOR FACT-FINDING BOARDS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from the previous day which will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the resolution (S. Res. 215) proposing to discharge the Committee on Education and Labor from the further consideration of S. 1661, the Labor Fact-Finding Boards Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

REORGANIZATION OF THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the resolution (S. Res. 249) creating a special committee to consider matters relating to the reorganization of the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. That having been done, I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROPOSED EQUAL-RIGHTS AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, for the information of all Members of the Senate, a comprehensive legal opinion, with supporting statements, showing the serious legal implications of the so-called equal-rights amendment, the subject of Senate Joint Resolution 61, now pending on the Senate Calendar.

There being no objection, the opinion and statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

These lawyers and legal scholars regardless of party and regardless of political or economic views, oppose the so-called equal-rights amendment and endorse the statement set forth herein, on the legal implications of the proposed amendment, prepared by Prof. Paul Freund, of the Harvard Law School.

Frank Donner, counsel for the CIO, Washington, D. C.

E. Merrick Dodd, professor, law, Harvard Law School.

Harry Shulman, professor of law, Yale University Law School.

The following statement on legal implications of proposed federal equal rights amendment has been endorsed by deans and professors of 21 leading law schools and by eminent attorneys, jurists, and constitutional lawyers, including former presidents of the American Bar Association and the general counsel for the two great labor organizations:

"The proposed amendment to the Constitution reads as follows:

" 'That equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex. Congress and the several States shall have power, within their respective jurisdictions, to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

" 'This amendment shall take effect three years after the date of ratification.'

"If anything about this proposed amendment is clear, it is that it would transform every provision of law concerning women into a constitutional issue to be ultimately resolved by the Supreme Court of the United States. Every statutory and common law provision dealing with the manifold relation of women in society would be forced to run the gauntlet of attack on constitutional grounds. The range of such potential litigation is too great to be readily foreseen, but it would certainly embrace such diverse legal provisions as those relating to a widow's allowance, the obligation of family support and grounds for divorce, the age of majority and the right of annulment of marriages, and the maximum hours of labor for women in protected industries.

"Not only is the range of the amendment of indefinite extent, but, even more important, the fate of all this varied legislation would be left highly uncertain in the face of judicial review. Presumably, the amendment would set up a constitutional yardstick of absolute equality between men and women in all legal relationships. A more flexible view, permitting reasonable differentiation, can hardly be regarded as the object of the proposal, since the fourteenth amendment has long provided that no State shall deny to any person the equal protection of the laws, and that amendment permits reasonable classifications while prohibiting arbitrary legal discrimination. If it were intended to give the courts the authority to pass upon the propriety of distinctions, benefits, and duties as between men and women, no new guidance is given to the courts, and this entire subject, one of unusual complexity, would be left to the unpredictable judgments of courts in the form of Constitution decisions.

"Such decisions could not be changed by act of the legislature. Such a responsibility upon the courts would be doubtless as unwelcome to them as it would be inappropriate. As has been stated, however, the proposal evidently contemplates no flexibility in construction but, rather, a rule of rigid equality. This branch of the dilemma is as repelling as the other. It appears to be accepted by what is currently the most authoritative statement on this amendment—the report of the House Judiciary Committee (H. Rept. 907, 79th Cong., 1st sess., on H. J. Res. 49, dated July 12, 1945). The majority of the committee appears to recognize that under the amendment the many laws protecting the safety and welfare of women in industry would necessarily fall. The committee states: 'To say the least of the matter, many of the large organizations of women represented in hearings before the committee have expressed a sincere desire to waive the so-called preferential benefits now accorded to women by various laws so as to permit them to follow economic activities from which they are now excluded.'

"It would not be feasible to attempt to enumerate the wide variety of laws and rules of the common law which would fall under the impact of the amendment. Some conception of their scope may, however, be given by recalling the variety of relationships in which women stand in the community. These relationships may be summarized as (a) wage earner; (b) member of a family; (c) citizen; (d) individual. The law has recognized and attempted to deal with these relationships in a concrete way. Doubtless there are difficulties and anachronisms in the law which should be remedied. But the method adopted by the amendment is to ignore the basis for all that has been at the foundation of these measures, and to substitute an abstract rule of thumb. The practical effect of such a course can be suggested by referring briefly to each of the four categories mentioned above.

"(a) As wage earners: One of the most familiar forms of legislation is that which confers special protection on women in industry through the prohibition of employment in hazardous occupations and through regulation of night work and maximum hours of labor. Presumably the long struggle to place these protective measures on the statute books would be set at naught by the adoption of the amendment. Specifically, such statutes would apparently have to be held invalid as denying to women the equal right to work or as denying to men the equal right of protection under the law, for, it is be noted, the amendment requires equality of rights under the law, permitting either men or women to claim exact equality. How the problem would be met can only be left to conjecture. If a State legislature failed to revise the laws giving special protection to women in certain industries, it is left uncertain whether the entire pattern of industrial legislation would be torn apart by judicial decision or whether a court would undertake to legislate by raising the same protection for men. Surely the work of generations ought not to be left to this blind hazard.

"(b) As members of the family: Legislation in the latter part of the nineteenth and early part of the twentieth century commonly known as married women's acts fairly universally in this country removed the disabilities which the common law had placed upon married women with respect to the right to sue and be sued, the right to own separate property, and the right to engage in commercial transactions. It is true that in some States certain remnants of these disabilities have persisted. In a few States, for example, a married woman may not become a surety for her husband's debts on the theory that she might otherwise be imposed upon; if the reason which had led some States to retain this disability is not a sufficient one, the disability should, of course, be removed by further legislation.

"Similarly, in a few States a married woman's earnings, while belonging to her if they result from work outside the home, are held to enure to the husband if they are produced by working inside the home. Whether this is a fair adjustment in view of the husband's primary duty to support the family may be a fairly debatable question, which again can be resolved by further legislation if further reform is thought desirable. The proposed amendment would leave no room for legislative experiment along these lines, but would impose a requirement of absolute equality in the property rights of husband and wife.

"More seriously, it would presumably abolish the common rule whereby a husband has the primary duty of support toward his family, and whereby in many jurisdictions failure to render such support is a ground for separation or divorce. Precisely how the law of support is to be transformed as a result of the amendment is by no means clear. The concept of a primary duty does not lend itself to a rule of equality.

"The very least that can be said is that the complex and delicate field of marital relationships and divorce, into which Congress has sedulously declined to enter in the past, would now be gravely affected by the tangential force of a constitutional amendment, which would not even rest on a study of the manifold problems involved.

"It is worthy of note that the community property systems of eight Western States, which have evolved differently from the common law systems and which, in general, have recognized for a longer period the coordinate status of husband and wife, nevertheless contain inequalities which would doubtless be rendered invalid under the amendment. Thus, the husband is generally regarded as a kind of managing partner with special powers not possessed by the wife in respect of community property. Legislation would doubtless be required to produce conformity with the dictates of the amendment, and the ramifications of such legislation, particularly with respect to the special tax status of persons owning community property, cannot be predicted with certainty.

"(c) As citizens. While the suffrage amendment and other legislation have generally guaranteed to women an equality of civil and political rights, there remain some gaps which it is undoubtedly one purpose of the amendment to close. One of these is the distinction drawn in some States between the obligation of men and that of women for jury service. But whether the amendment would in fact require a change in this field is itself uncertain, since it is fairly arguable that jury service is not a right but a duty, and hence not within the scope of the amendment. Indeed, the amendment opens up a whole field of potential controversy turning on distinction between rights and duties.

"(d) As individuals. A common legislative difference in the treatment of men and women concerns the age of majority, which is generally lower for the latter. This difference has long been accepted as reflecting physical realities. Presumably the distinction would no longer be valid. But if a legislature failed to change the law, the outcome would present something of a legal puzzle. If the age of majority for men is 18 and women 16, it can hardly be foretold whether equality would require a lowering of the former or a raising of the latter. If the standard be that of the greater right, it could be asserted that the lower age for women provides a greater right to marry but at the same time a more restricted right to annul on the ground of minority. How a court would solve the conundrum is, like most problems created by the proposed amendment, a matter purely of speculation.

"The basic fallacy in the proposed amendment is that it attempts to deal with complicated and highly concrete problems arising out of a diversity of human relationships in terms of a single and simple abstraction. This abstraction is undoubtedly a worthy ideal for mobilizing legislative forces in order to remedy particular deficiencies in the law. But as a constitutional standard, it is hopelessly inept. That the proposed equal rights amendment would open up an era of regrettable consequences for the legal status of women in this country is highly probable. That it would open up a period of extreme confusion in constitutional law is a certainty.

"PAUL FREUND,

"Professor of Law, Harvard Law School."

Among the views expressed on the so-called equal rights amendment, the following are of special interest:

Joseph P. Chamberlain, professor of law, Columbia University Law School: "The passage of the amendment will create uncertainty and confusion in the wide fields of the law of property, of personal status, of marriage. It may destroy all labor legislation protecting women. Existing evils can and should be met by legislation aimed to cure them, such as the equal pay bill now before Congress. This proposal is a leap in the dark and has no place in the Constitution."

Silas H. Strawn, former president of the American Bar Association: "The amendment would inevitably invalidate many of the State laws protecting the American home and which protect women in industry."

E. Blythe Stason, dean of the University of Michigan Law School: "Physiological facts create the absolute necessity of numerous instances of differentiation in the law between the sexes affording protection for women not required for men. The proposed amendment would certainly throw the bulk of such legislation now on the statute books into a state of confusion and uncertainty, if it did not, in fact, result in complete elimination of such legislation from the statute books."

Judge William H. Holly, United States district court, Chicago: "If the proposed 'equal-rights amendment' to our Federal Constitution should be given the interpretation of which it seems capable, it would destroy the work of the years that have been given to secure the passage of the laws for the protection of women in industry. I fear that back of those who are openly advocating the amendment are the interests which desire to be rid of those laws."

Thurman Arnold, former associate justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia: "I am opposed to the so-called equal-rights amendment to the Constitution. There is no necessity for a constitutional amendment on this subject. The proposed amendment would confuse existing law to an intolerable extent and lead to endless litigation."

Judge Marion J. Harron, The Tax Court of the United States: "If adopted, the so-called equal rights amendment will cause chaos in 48 States in the status of all laws relating to women. It will wipe out many laws which have established standards for the employment of women in industry."

The following organizations oppose the equal rights amendment:

American Association of University Women; American Civil Liberties Union; Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America; American Communications Association; American Federation of Hosiery Workers; American Federation of Labor; American Federation of Teachers; American Federation of Women's Auxiliaries of Labor; Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders and Helpers Union; Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express, and Station Employees; Congress of Industrial Organizations; Congress of Women's Auxiliaries of the CIO; Food, Tobacco, Agricultural, and Allied Workers Union of America.

WARTIME PETROLEUM POLICY UNDER THE PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION FOR WAR

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that the sixth series of the hearings held by the Senate Special Committee Investigating Petroleum Resources entitled "Wartime Petroleum Policy Under the Petroleum Administration for War," at which time the Petroleum Administrator for War, the Deputy Administrator, and several principal members of the staff of the Petroleum Administration for War presented detailed testimony, is being released today for publication by the United States Government Printing Office.

Listed among the subjects included in this historical record are the following:

(a) Mobilizing the Oil Forces.

(b) Wartime Petroleum Requirements and Programming to Meet Them.

(c) Wartime Petroleum Production in the United States.

(d) World Production of Crude Petroleum in Wartime.

(e) Petroleum Refining in the United States During the War.

(f) World-wide Refining in Wartime.

(g) Natural Gas and Its Products During the War.

(h) Wartime Distribution and Marketing of Petroleum Products.

(i) Wartime Foreign Petroleum Supply.

(j) Wartime Petroleum Supply and Transportation.

This volume also includes a statement submitted by the Director of the Naval Petroleum Reserves with respect to the Navy's views regarding a national oil policy.

The Superintendent of Documents advises me that this book, containing approximately 300 pages, together with numerous colorful charts, will be placed on sale at $1.25 per copy.

Inasmuch as the committee is furnished with a limited supply, it would be advisable, particularly for persons desiring extra copies, to place their order with the Superintendent of Documents, United States Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C., immediately.

CONTROL AND DEVELOPMENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY—LETTER FROM THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a short note written to me by the Secretary of the Navy bearing upon the passage in the Senate of the atomic energy bill, Senate bill 1717. I think it is particularly appropriate to insert this letter in the RECORD now, because there seems to be some misapprehension as to the Navy's attitude regarding the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, June 4, 1946.

Hon. BRIEN MCMAHON,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR BRIEN: Please accept my congratulations on the passage Saturday of your bill for the control and development of atomic energy. It is well drawn and accomplishes what I know you were after from the beginning—a proper balance between civilian and military control.

This is not merely my own view but that of the professional people in the naval service.

Your long and painstaking work has not been in vain.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES FORRESTAL.

OVERSEAS OUTPOSTS—ADDRESS BY FOSTER HAILEY

[Mr. MURRAY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Overseas Outposts," delivered by Foster Hailey, member of the editorial board of the New York Times, before the National Security Committee of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, which appears in the Appendix.]

LET'S FACE THE FACTS—ADDRESS BY EDWARD R. PLACE

[Mr. WILEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Let's Face the Facts," delivered by Edward R. Place before the Washington (D. C.) Northeast Businessmen's Association, which appears in the Appendix.]

BIG BUSINESS, IT'S UP TO YOU—EDITORIAL FROM THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Big Business, It's Up To You!", published in the Philadelphia Record of June 30, 1946, which appears in the Appendix.]

EUROPEAN EXPERIENCES WITH INFLATION—EDITORIAL FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES

[Mr. TUNNELL asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a portion of an editorial entitled "Folding Money," published in the New York Times of June 30, 1946, which appears in the Appendix.]

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

CITATION CONFERRING DEGREE OF DOCTOR OF LAWS ON LESLIE L. BIFFLE

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on Saturday afternoon, at its annual commencement exercises, Dartmouth College conferred the degree of doctor of laws upon our good friend and able and devoted Secretary of the Senate, Mr. Leslie L. Biffle. I should like to read the citation conferring the degree. It is as follows:

Leslie L. Biffle, you, by the common consent of those best qualified to know, are the outstanding, nonelective servant of the legislative process of our Federal Government. For more than 35 years you have been associated with legislative affairs in the Nation's Capital and since 1923, first as secretary to the majority in the United States Senate and more recently as Secretary of the Senate you have rendered public service the effectiveness and fidelity of which are counted great by those of contrary as well as like political persuasion. In tribute to you and in recognition of the place of such largely unheralded service in the working of American democracy, Dartmouth confers upon you the degree of doctor of laws.

Mr. President, I am sure that I voice the sentiments of every Member of the Senate in warmly congratulating Leslie Biffle upon the receipt of this richly deserved honor. I rejoice that this honor has come to so loyal, so able, so faithful, so devoted, and so distinguished a servant of our country.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, after hearing the kind words just spoken of our Secretary, I am sure that all Senators on this side join with those on the other side in congratulating our good friend, Leslie. We also congratulate Dartmouth for having the good sense to confer this degree, doctor of laws, upon a real worker and a devoted public servant.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I wish to add a word of compliment and praise to what has been said by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] with respect to the recognition recently given Mr. Biffle, Secretary of the Senate, by Dartmouth College. Mr. Biffle is one of the most efficient and capable men I have ever known. With it all he is painstaking and courteous to each and every Member of this body, whether he be on the Democratic or on the Republican side of the aisle. I feel sure he has the respect and the affection of every Member of this body. I believe he is one of the few men I have ever known concerning whom those who know him have only words of praise to utter.

Leslie Biffle is a man of splendid intellect. He has unlimited energy. The honor which has been paid him by the great Dartmouth College is certainly highly deserved and most fitting.

I join the other Senators in saying that I am extremely happy that our Secretary, the kind, capable, courteous, upstanding young man, Leslie Biffle, has had bestowed upon him the great honor of which we were just informed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I take occasion to express my great pleasure on learning that Dartmouth College, of New Hampshire, has seen fit to honor Mr. Biffle, a distinguished son of Arkansas, by conferring on him the degree of doctor of laws.

Mr. Biffle has served as the Secretary of the Senate for a substantial time, and was associated with the Senate for many years before his elevation to his present office. He is amazingly alert mentally, he is indefatigable in the performance of his duties, is courteous always, is considerate, and he has a profound and intimate knowledge of the practices of both the House of Representatives and the Senate.

Mr. President, I am personally greatly indebted to Mr. Biffle for many courtesies, and I wish to express satisfaction that this New England college has seen fit to bestow its highest honor upon a worthy son of Arkansas. I extend to him my good wishes and my warmest congratulations.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1850) to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, to secure the national defense, to advance the national defense health and welfare, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. What is the present situation in the Senate? Has the Senate completed the morning hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has completed the morning hour, and, by unanimous consent, consideration of the calendar was dispensed with.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Do I understand, then, that the unfinished business before the Senate is the consideration of Senate bill 1850?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No. The unfinished business will not be laid before the Senate until the Senate reconvenes, after returning from the Hall of the House of Representatives. The Senator can move that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate if he wishes to do so.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENT OF LABOR AND FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, on Saturday the Senate passed the appropriation bill for the Department of Labor and the Federal Security Agency. At that time I had received a telegram from Hon. Millard F. Caldwell, Governor of Florida, who, up to 4 years ago had for a period of 3 or 4 years been a distinguished Member of the House of Representatives. I ask unanimous consent that the telegram may be printed in the RECORD at this point so that Senators may know the attitude of at least one governor on the question of the return of the employment service to the States. The governors have to look into these matters, shoulder these problems, and determine what they think is best to be done.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., June 26, 1946.

Hon. CHARLES O. ANDREWS,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Am informed that Labor and Federal Security appropriation bill passed the House providing return of employment service to States as of October 1, 1946, without Federal regulation and is now pending in Senate with action contemplated this week. Am extremely interested in early return of service unemcumbered with Federal regulations not in existence at time employment service loaned to Government at commencement of war. Your assistance in passage of appropriation bill with above provisions intact will be appreciated.

MILLARD F. CALDWELL,
Governor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to speak very briefly on the conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, inasmuch as the House of Representatives has asked that we be in the House Chamber at not later than a quarter to 12, if the conference report is to take any time it had better be passed over until we reconvene.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I will agree to confine myself to less than 5 minutes.

Mr. President, I raised no serious opposition to this bill while it was before the Senate. The House appropriated approximately $10,000,000 for the State Department's international short-wave broadcasting service. The Senate increased that amount from $10,000,000 to $19,000,000.

There is a serious question as to whether there is any legal authority whatsoever for what the State Department is doing. In my own opinion, for whatever it may be worth, there is no substantive law upon which the action of the House, the action of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, or the action of the Senate itself can possibly be justified.

Passing by this question, I wish to have it known that I think the whole procedure is utterly unwise. I think it gives promise of great difficulties and troubles for us if we turn the State Department loose to broadcast to the world the material which the State Department has indicated it is to make known to the world. I have before me a statement made by a representative of the Department who has urged this appropriation. What is the Department proposing to do? Let me read two paragraphs from the statement of Mr. William Benton, who is to have charge of this work:

> Hardly a day passes without some important decision or action being taken by Americans here or in London, Paris, Tokyo, Nanking, or elsewhere—and each individual action poses a problem in world information. Our actions and attitude toward Spain, the Balkan countries, Germany, Palestine, Japan, China, Russia, Indonesia, Siam, Iceland, and a host of other countries need to be known by the people of those and other countries not only in terms of current decisions, but in terms of reasons for them.

In further explanation of this program of the State Department it is stated:

> A strike in coal mines, an increase in living costs, a tornado in Kansas, a decrease in locomotive production, the color of the bread we eat—all have a direct impact on the economic and living conditions of other peoples.

It is perfectly obvious that it is the purpose of this agency of the State Department to present to the peoples of all the various nations such questions arising in the countries to which I have referred. It is desired to tell the people of the world about a Kansas cyclone, the color of the bread we eat, and various matters of one sort and another.

This is even more significant. Speaking of Liberia, the statement contains this language:

> The department considers this mission—

That is, the transmission of news to Liberia—> essential to the success of economic progress in Liberia. A broad program of political, social, and economic reform in Liberia is being supported by this Government, and this project is considered as of far-reaching importance to both governments.

It is perfectly clear that the State Department is to undertake to instruct the world with respect to social, economic, political, and governmental matters. I merely wish to say that we are asking for trouble all over the world, because no nation anywhere, to which the United States may send this information, will welcome within its borders the official pronouncements of the State Department of the United States as to social, political, economic, and governmental problems. I can see nothing but trouble. I can see nothing but friction. I can see nothing but resentment resulting from this effort of the State Department. I wish to have it known that I am definitely and affirmatively against it, and I wish I might speak at length on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 6056, which was read as follows:

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
June 29, 1946.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 26, 39, 40, 56, 58, 65, 73, and 81 to the bill (H. R. 6056) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and the Judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of $7,000,000 named in said amendment insert "$6,000,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of $2,874,000 named in said amendment, insert "$2,500,000";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert: "That no funds in this paragraph shall be expended for the pay of any employee of the Civil Aeronautics Administration for the maintenance of more than one major parts warehouse, or for the repair or overhaul of aircraft when such repair or overhaul cannot be performed by the Civil Aeronautics Administration through exchange or substitution of parts or materials maintained by the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and the cost of labor, parts, and materials not maintained in stock would be in excess of $200: Provided further, That all repair and overhaul of aircraft of the Civil Aeronautics Administration which cannot be performed within the foregoing limitation shall be done on contract after submission of bids";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert: "(not to exceed $4,500,000, $500,000 of which is to be used at the seat of government for aids and services to small business)"; and

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, to said bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of $2,000,000 named in said amendment insert: "$1,750,000."

Mr. McCARRAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 46, 50, 57, and 74.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

JOINT SESSION OF THE TWO HOUSES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, pursuant to the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution 152, I move that the Senate proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives; and the Senate reassemble upon the call of the Chair immediately following the ceremonies in the House Chamber.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate, headed by its Secretary, its Sergeant at Arms, and the President pro tempore, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 12 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m., and was called to order by the President pro tempore.

PRESIDENTIAL VETO OF OPA BILL—ADDRESSES BY THE PRESIDENT AND SENATOR TAFT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD the radio address delivered by the President on last Saturday evening, following his veto of the OPA bill.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My fellow countrymen, the crucial situation which confronts our country requires that I report to the people this evening.

Today I returned to the Congress without my approval the extension of the price control law which it presented to me for my signature.

I returned it with a long message stating my reasons. I hope that you will all read that message in your newspapers.

I assure you, my fellow countrymen, that before I vetoed this bill I gave the subject long days and nights of consideration. I consulted with practically every top official in the Government. Either personally or through representatives I obtained the views of people in agriculture, industry, and labor, as well as many others.

You have all heard a great deal about inflation. Its seriousness cannot be overestimated. It would affect every individual in our country. Inflation would cause an increase in the price of every article you buy. As prices soared with inflation, your money would buy fewer and fewer of the necessities of life. Your savings, your insurance, your war bonds—all would decrease in value.

For 5 years we have proved to this country and to the world that inflation can be prevented. Those of you who remember the First World War will recall the wild inflation and the collapse that followed. You will remember how farmers were ruined, how businessmen went bankrupt, how wage earners suffered.

This time we have succeeded in preventing such a calamity. We have done this largely through price control. It was not done by a miracle. It was done because the American people had the wisdom and the courage and the restraint to know that they had to submit to restrictions and controls or be overcome by the force of inflation. We must continue to prevent inflation. This is as important now and in the months to come as it was during the war. Time and again I have stated and restated this proposition.

I wanted to sign a price-control bill. I gave this bill long and careful study. I came to the conclusion that the bill which the Congress sent me was no price-control bill at all. It gave you no protection against higher and higher prices.

Having reached that conclusion I was faced with these alternatives. I could sign the bill on the plea which had been made to me that for the immediate present at least, it might be a little better than nothing. Or I could disapprove the bill, and call upon the Congress to give the American people a real, workable, price-control law.

If I had taken the first course and signed the bill I would have encouraged the false impression that you were going to be protected for the next year against excessive price increases. But, sooner or later, all of you would have awakened to a bitter realization of the truth.

You would have soon begun to see thousands and thousands of price increases, adding billions and billions of dollars to our cost of living. It is hard to see how people could continue to pay higher and higher prices without requiring higher wages or salaries. The tremendous advances that we have made toward the settlement of labor-management disputes over wages would have been wiped out. The mad chase to inflation would soon have been under way.

I could not permit that to happen.

I took the second alternative, knowing full well all the dangers which would come with it. I knew that there was danger that the Congress might not pass a resolution which would give us some kind of protection after midnight tomorrow, when the present price-control law ends. I knew, therefore, that it was very possible that for a few days at least we might be without any price-control law.

I could not bring myself to believe, however, that the Representatives of the American people—your Senators and Representatives in the Congress, would permit such a condition to continue long. And I was sure that when this issue was presented to the American people and to the Congress there could be only one answer. That answer is that the Congress should immediately pass a resolution continuing present price and rent controls until the Congress can pass a workable bill.

It would have been much easier for me to sign this bill. But the American people would have soon realized that real price control was at an end in spite of the law. If I had signed the bill the people would have seen their prices going up, day by day. You would have realized soon that the bill which had been passed and called a price-control law was not price control at all.

What I have done is to call a spade a spade. I must now rely upon the American people and upon a patriotic and cooperative Congress to protect us all from the great pressures now upon us, leading us to disastrous inflation unless we have the means to resist them.

I know how weary you all are of these restrictions and controls. I am also weary of them. I spend a good deal of my time listening to complaints. I know how eager everyone of you is for the day when you can run your own affairs in your own way as you did before the war. I know, therefore, how strong the temptation is to remove too quickly the safeguards which we have built up for ourselves and our children.

The bill which the Congress sent me yielded to that temptation.

It is certainly most unfortunate that the Congress kept delaying and delaying action on this bill for so many months when they knew that the price-control law was going to expire tomorrow.

I am sure that all of you know of the efforts which I made to get the Congress to act on a price-control extension far in advance of the date when the old law was going to expire. As far back as September, last year, in a message to the Congress, I urged it to pass an extension of the price control act at an early date.

I did not rest with that message of last September. In later communications to the Congress I repeated my request four times to extend price control. In addition to these direct communications, I stated publicly many times how important it was to our safety that a price-control extension bill should be passed right away.

"IMPOSSIBLE" BILL PASSED

But I could not persuade the Congress to act. Instead, just 2 days before the expiration of all price control, this impossible bill was sent to me.

In my veto message to the Congress which I sent this morning I discussed the various provisions of the bill.

I do not have time this evening to comment on all the provisions of the bill. There are many objections to it, but my most fundamental objection is to the price-raising amendment for manufacturers which was introduced by Senator TAFT.

Under this amendment there would be thousands of needless price increases amounting to many billions of dollars. The Taft amendment provides that the manufacturer shall receive for each article the profit which he made on that article in 1941 and that he may add to the 1941 selling price all increases in cost which have occurred since that time. In 1941 the manufacturer received a much greater profit out of each dollar of sales than at any time in the five preceding years or in any of the five following wartime years. In fact, profit margins in 1941 were 50 percent greater than in the banner year 1929.

Volume of sales is much greater today than in 1941, so that manufacturers would have received a bonanza. In addition, Senator TAFT'S fellow Republicans, Senator WHERRY and Representative CRAWFORD, put amendments into the bill which made sure that not only would the manufacturers' price increases be borne by the public but that such increases would be pyramided by generous wholesalers' and retailers' mark-ups.

As you sit in your homes this evening your interest in this bill and my interest in this bill are exactly the same. The question is: What effect would this bill have had on you—the people of our country.

I believe in the profit system and desire that profits should be ample to provide the incentive for full production. The Taft amendment, however, provides for higher prices and higher profits even where production is already going at full blast and profits are wholly satisfactory.

We have been through five difficult years. We are looking forward to buying the things we need. Let us examine this problem together.

AUTO-PRICE EFFECT STRESSED

Do you need a new low-priced automobile? If so, what effect would the Taft amendment have had on the price of your new car? It would have increased immediately the prices of the popular makes of automobiles by two hundred and twenty-five to two hundred and fifty dollars per car.

Are you a veteran planning to build a home for yourself and family? The Taft amendment would have added immediately a minimum of 20 percent to the cost of your building materials. The program recently approved by the Congress to provide veterans' housing at reasonable cost would have been completely disrupted by this Taft amendment.

Are you a housewife who has been waiting for years for that new washing machine or refrigerator? The Taft amendment would have made it cost one-third more right away.

Are you faced with the responsibility of clothing your family? Under the Taft and other amendments the already high clothing prices would have been increased 15 percent right away. For clothing alone the American people would have paid at least $3,000,000,000 more a year.

Are you in a business in which you need to buy steel? The price of steel would have gone up under the Taft amendment between $4 and $8 per ton right away.

Are you a farmer? Under this bill the price of farm machinery would have gone up 13 percent right away.

Those are only a few examples of the first round of increases the Taft amendment would bring. But that is only the beginning. Price increases in one industry are cost increases in another. By the time, for example, that the automobile industry had got its Taft increase based on present costs, it would be hit by the Taft increases in steel, tires, safety glass, and other materials. So automobiles would go up still more.

In this way increase would follow increase. The bill had no stopping place in it.

"CONSUMER WOULD PAY"

In addition, these increases would have been passed right down the line. You, the consumer, would pay it all.

All of us agree that what this country needs is production. Production brings jobs, good wages, moderate prices. Perhaps the most vicious effect of the Taft amendment would be to slow up production.

The only possible justification urged for all of these Taft price increases is the claim that they are necessary to encourage production. Even if they did encourage production, that would still be a terrific price to pay for that increased production—a price measured in suffering and distress among people of moderate and low incomes.

The fact is, however, that production would not be stimulated by the Taft amendment, but would be greatly impeded. Nobody wants to sell his goods this week if he can get a better price for them next week. This is no mere theory. You have seen it working day after day for the last month or so, as people began to believe that price control might soon come to an end.

CATTLE AND HOGS "HELD BACK"

People who had cattle and hogs to sell for slaughter for food have decided to hold them for higher prices. People who had clothing for sale have decided to do the same thing. So have people with innumerable other commodities which we all need so badly now.

Incidentally, I have asked the Attorney General to make an investigation of some of the factors involved in our present shortages to determine whether anyone is criminally responsible for them and to place the responsibility where it belongs.

These instances of withholding goods from the consumer would be multiplied thousands of times under the Taft amendment; production and deliveries would be slowed down waiting for price increases. This would create bottlenecks of essential materials and essential parts which would bring production lines to a halt. By the time they started up again there would be new applications for price increases and additional waiting for greater profits.

Labor would be penalized by loss of employment. Consumers would be penalized by lack of goods and ever-rising prices. Farmers would be penalized by higher prices for what they buy and reduced markets for the things they sell.

It is a cruel jest to say that the Taft amendment would aid production. As I also pointed out this morning in my veto message, the Taft amendment would wholly destroy our program of wage stabilization which has been built up since VJ-day. It would destroy the usefulness of the Wage Stabilization Board.

WARNS OF "INEVITABLE SPIRAL"

The result would be the beginning of an inevitable spiral of uncontrolled inflation—a race between rising wages and rising prices. Far-sighted leaders of both labor and management know that nothing can be gained—and everything lost—by simply letting prices and wages chase each other.

Despite the total impossibility of stabilizing other prices under this bill, I would have hesitated to disapprove it if I had thought it gave some real protection against soaring food prices and rents. We have learned, however, that higher prices for the things that farmers and landlords buy would inevitably force up food prices and rents.

In both instances, serious increases would be forced upon us by the hard facts of business and economics.

I realize that the great majority of our people do not have the facts and figures that must be considered in order to know what a bill like this would do. That is why I am speaking to you this evening. You are entitled to have the facts before you.

I want to make clear that my decision to veto this bill does not mean any lack of appreciation of the sincere and tireless efforts of the leaders and many other Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives to pass a workable price control bill. I know that many Members of both Houses who voted for the bill which was sent to me did so with regret and only because they had, at that time, no opportunity to vote for a good bill. Now every Member has a clear-cut opportunity to show whether or not he wants effective price controls.

PLAN SUGGESTED TO CONGRESS

I have submitted to the Congress in my veto message a plan for price control legislation for the comparatively short period of time that it is still needed. The will of the people is still the supreme law of our land. Your determination to retain price controls and so prevent inflation must be made known to the Congress. The Congress is the only branch of our Government which has the power to pass a law providing for proper price control.

Now because of congressional delay we are faced with a brief period in which legal restraints on price increases will be lacking. I have urged the Congress to act immediately and to adopt the kind of bill which can be made to work.

But, in the event of delay, I know that the United States can depend upon the patriotism and good sense of its citizens. Therefore, I call upon every businessman, every producer, and every landlord to adhere to existing regulations, even though for a short period they may not have the effect of law. It would be contrary to their own interest to embark upon a reckless period of inflation. It is to their own interest to exercise self-restraint until some action can be obtained from the Congress.

I also request every employee of the OPA to stay at his battle station. The fight is not over. I am counting on all employees of the OPA to continue to serve in the future as they have in the past and to finish the job. I urge these loyal civil servants and the thousands of volunteers who are giving their time to make price control a success to see this fight through.

And, finally, my fellow citizens, I say to you that we as a Nation have it within our hands to make this postwar period an era of the greatest opportunity and prosperity in our Nation's history. But if short-sightedness and impatience, if partisanship and greed are allowed to triumph over the efforts to maintain economic stability, this grand opportunity will have been sacrificed.

That must not happen.

With your help and understanding it will not happen.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I hold in my hand the original manuscript used by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] in his radio address last evening on the subject of the veto by the President of the OPA bill. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BROADCAST OF ROBERT A. TAFT, MUTUAL BROADCASTING SYSTEM, SUNDAY, JUNE 30, 1946

Yesterday President Truman vetoed the bill to extend his own power to fix prices and rents, so that OPA expires at midnight tonight. Last night he defended his curious action by what amounted to a long personal attack on me, because I had some part in drafting one of the various amendments to the bill. His whole broadcast had the aspect of a partisan political attack and apparently was drafted by the Office of Price Administration, the chief of which is Mr. Paul Porter who was the publicity chief for the Democratic National Committee in the last campaign.

Mr. Truman omitted to state that this bill was adopted by a Democratic Congress. There are 236 Democrats to 190 Republicans in the House of Representatives, and 56 Democrats to 40 Republicans in the Senate. He was strongly urged to sign the bill by the Democratic Speaker of the House, the Democratic floor leader of the House, the Democratic leader of the Senate, and the Democratic President pro tempore of the Senate. He disregarded their advice and followed the advice of Chester Bowles and the Political Action Committee. The personal attack on me is merely a smoke screen to conceal the real political reasons behind his action.

As a matter of fact, I have always supported price control as essential in the war period. I believe we would be better off to continue it for 6 months longer, although like every other person who believes in the American system, I think it should be ended at the earliest possible moment. I assisted in drafting the original Price Control Act and all the amendments.

I find a letter in my files from this same Chester Bowles, dated June 27, 1944, after a bitter fight on extension very much like the present one, in which he said, in part:

"DEAR BOB: I want to thank you for your courteous, friendly, and intelligent efforts to work out the Stabilization Extension Act. I know how hard it was and the amount of patience it required."

Only last week I argued strenuously for the passage of this bill against those who desired to end price control altogether, or at least end it with reference to meats, dairy products, and poultry.

No Price Control Act is an easy measure to pass through Congress, and I doubt whether any extension can now be put through again. The cross currents of economic interest from different sections of the country are almost impossible to reconcile. The vetoed bill was only put through Congress without specific decontrol of many important foods by the adroit management of Senator BARKLEY. A great majority of the people west of the Mississippi desire the immediate termination of price control, and so do their representatives in Congress. Many others east of the Mississippi are disgusted with the complete breakdown of OPA in meat control, lumber control, and a number of other vital commodities. They point to empty shelves, bread lines, butter lines, deserted production lines, and black markets and argue that anything is better than the kind of price control we have.

My own position and that of Congress is perfectly logical. We think the time has not quite come to take off basic price controls, but we do think the administration of OPA must be improved. The bill provides for the gradual liquidation of OPA over the next 12 months, the ending of subsidies on April 1, 1947, and reasonable pricing in the interval so that we can stimulate production and get rid of all the shortages and injustices that exist today.

The PAC really want price control continued indefinitely. It is in line with their idea of the totalitarian state. Apparently, the President now agrees with their philosophy. He objects in his message to the provision that there shall be decontrol of any commodity when the supply equals the demand. If we can't get rid of price control when a sufficient supply is produced, will we ever get rid of it? He wants subsidies continued until July 1, 1947. It would then be easier to renew them again at that time. He uses the price admendment as a whipping post, but he is really demanding the indefinite continuation of the whole outfit and every single power which he now has. He does not, apparently, accept in good faith the policy which is universally accepted in Congress by all parties and stated in the bill that "the general control of prices and the use of subsidy powers shall be terminated as rapidly as possible."

The President's attack on the amendment which I offered in the Senate is utterly unfair. All that the Taft amendment provides is that producers, including farmers, mining concerns, and manufacturers, shall be allowed to charge prices which reflect the increased cost of labor and material which they now have to pay. This is done by permitting them to charge for each major product a price equal to their 1941 prices plus the average increase in the cost of labor, materials, et cetera since 1911. After all, this is peacetime again. Why shouldn't the producer be placed in the same position he was in before the war? No producer is guaranteed any profit. There is no question of a freeze any more, because the OPA itself has put over 500 price increases into effect since March 1. All we want to prevent during the next 6 months are the speculative rises in price over and above the increase in costs. The danger I am concerned about is taking the roof off, as the President does by his veto. But how can anyone hope to get production if we don't allow the producers to charge enough for their products to pay for the increased cost of labor and material? Even the President admits in his message that this principle has a superficial reasonableness. There is nothing superficial about it except to the master minds among the New Deal economists at the OPA.

As a matter of fact, there is nothing new in the principle. The original Price Control Act of 1942 expressly provided that the Administrator should start with the prices prevailing between October 1 and October 15, 1941, and should make adjustments for general increases in costs of production, distribution and transportation, among other factors. The language was pretty general, and the OPA never paid any attention to it. Then, in 1944, we passed a law which expressly provided that "modification shall be made in maximum prices established for any agricultural commodity and for commodities processed or manufactured from any agricultural commodity" (and that means nearly all food and clothing) "in any case where, by reason of increased labor or other costs incurred since January 1, 1941, the maximum prices so established will not reflect such increased costs." As usual the OPA didn't pay much attention to Congress, but they did use almost exactly the formula of the Taft amendment in pricing canned vegetables in 1944 and 1945. Furthermore, the so-called Bankhead amendment for several years has compelled them to follow more or less the same formula as to all cotton textiles.

In many fields, however, the OPA has by express regulation, forced manufacturers to sell some products at cost or at a loss, because some members of the industry were making profits on other products. Of course, nobody makes the things which have to be sold at a loss. This is the reason for the shortage of butter, of many standard types of clothing, of building materials and many other articles. The President's figures on possible increases are wild guesses and for the most part dead wrong. I was called today by the Association of Washing Machine Manufacturers who said that the President's estimate of one-third more for washing machines was a gross exaggeration, that the manufacturers hoped there would be no price increase at all, even if price ceilings were removed entirely. Any steel increase would be less than half that stated by the President. You can judge from this how accurate his other figures are. Any increase in manufactured goods brought about by the Taft amendment would be of minor importance compared with the importance of actually being able to buy them.

Furthermore, the President deliberately misrepresented the effect of my amendment when he said six times that price increases would result immediately or right away. Under the amendment no increase can occur until the Industry Advisory Committee has presented complete figures to prove its case. This would take from 30 to 60 days. Then the Price Administrator is given 60 days in which to examine the figures and fix the amount of the increase. The burden of proof is on the industry. If the Administrator refuses to admit any increase, there is an appeal to the Emergency Court of Appeals, which would take several months more. Long before that, I hope we would be well on the way to the end of all price control. I hope the Administrator would act more promptly, but there is nothing immediate about it. Whereas the President's veto removes all controls of every kind at midnight tonight.

It is significant that the President admits that the Taft amendment would have no direct effect on food or rents. He argues that because other prices would go up food and rents would be bound to rise. I admit that ultimately there would be some effect if other prices rise, but the effect would be about one-tenth of the effect on food and rents of the wage increases already stimulated by the President. Of course, it was impossible to keep price control much longer after the President removed all wage control on VJ-day. Of course, an increase of about $10,000,000,000 in wages and salaries will produce billions of dollars of increase in prices. But the ultimate and unavoidable break-down of price control will result directly from the President's policy, not from act of Congress—certainly not from the minor requirement that manufacturers be allowed to reflect their increased costs in prices.

In short, in the act passed by Congress, the President received complete power to prevent speculation and speculative increases in price and all increases in rents. We merely reaffirm more vigorously the original principles of the Price Control Act to secure production, yet the President has chosen to plunge the economy of this country into chaos. In such a controversial field where feelings already run high, we cannot hope that the Senate will act without debate, and it should not do so, because the issues to be settled are vital to the welfare of the country. I hope price control will be continued, and I should vote to reenact the bill the President has vetoed, but I am afraid the bill which he will get the next time, if he gets any, may go further toward decontrol than the one he has vetoed. In the meantime there are no price controls. No businessman knows what he should do or what price he should charge. I hope that everyone will exercise the reasonable restraint which Americans always exhibit in a crisis.

The President had a choice between a reasonable transition from price control back to the free enterprise system, on the one hand, and the ending of all OPA powers by veto, on the other. He chose to take all the chances of chaos, followed by speculative rises in price. He chose this course, having been warned by his own Democratic leaders of the necessary result of his policy. He has repudiated their leadership and assumed to write a law for Congress, although the Constitution of the United States gives the Congress power to state the conditions on which price control shall be continued.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1850) to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, to secure the national defense, to advance the national health and welfare, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I had intended to let the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] proceed with the opening statement and explanation of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the importance of this bill and the Senator's explanation of it, we should have a quorum. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hawkes	O'Daniel
Andrews	Hayden	O'Mahoney
Ball	Hill	Overton
Barkley	Hoey	Pepper
Bridges	Huffman	Radcliffe
Brooks	Johnson, Colo.	Reed
Buck	Johnston, S. C.	Revercomb
Burch	Kilgore	Robertson
Bushfield	Knowland	Russell
Byrd	La Follette	Smith
Capehart	Langer	Stanfill
Capper	Lucas	Stewart
Carville	McCarran	Swift
Chavez	McClellan	Taft
Donnell	McKellar	Taylor
Downey	McMahon	Thomas, Okla.
Ferguson	Magnuson	Tunnell
Fulbright	Maybank	Wagner
George	Mead	Walsh
Gerry	Millikin	Wherry
Gossett	Mitchell	White
Green	Moore	Wiley
Guffey	Morse	Willis
Gurney	Murdock	Wilson
Hart	Murray	Young

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, Senate bill 1850, commonly called the scientific research bill, is now pending before the Senate.

I wish to invite attention of the Members of the Senate to the fact that the bill has received the endorsement of James B. Conant, president, American Association for the Advancement of Science, president, Harvard University; George F. Zook, president, American Council on Education; Morris Fishbein, editor, Journal of the American Medical Association; Thomas P. Cooper, president, Association of Land-Grant Colleges and Universities, dean, College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky; Isaiah Bowman, chairman, Committee Supporting the Bush Report, president, Johns Hopkins University; Boris Bakhmeteff, chairman of panel on science legislation, Engineers Joint Council for American Institute of Chemical Engineers, American Institute of Electrical Engineers, American Society of Civil Engineers, and American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers; Arthur A. Hauck, president, National Association of State Universities, president, University of Maine; Willard A. Givens, executive secretary, National Education Association; and Harlow Shapley, president, Scientific Research Society of America, and cochairman, Committee for a National Science Foundation.

These men, on behalf of their respective organizations, and after those organizations had held executive committee meetings, unanimously endorsed the pending bill. Their executive committees held conferences on the matter and thereafter, the endorsements were given. I say advisedly that this was done after the conferences were held, because since the joint endorsements were given I have received numerous telegrams from heads of various smaller groups within those organizations, one of which I should like to read. It is directed to me, and states:

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 26, 1946.

Hon. Senator HARLEY KILGORE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Referring to the joint statement respecting legislative bill, S. 1850, signed by Dr. Isaiah Bowman and other scientists and which Dr. Boris Bakhmeteff is signing as chairman of Engineers' Joint Councils Panel on Scientific Research Legislation: I wish to advise that this statement reaffirms the views of engineers' joint council respecting S. 1850 and the engineers' joint council maintains its attitude that passage of S. 1850 is urgent and of paramount national importance.

JAMES E. JAGGER,
Secretary, Engineers' Joint Council.

Mr. President, that is a sample of numerous telegrams which I have received, showing that the endorsements to which I have referred are not merely endorsements of individual heads of organizations, but that they are endorsements of the organizations themselves.

I have had the privilege within the past 12 months of being present at numerous of our great State universities, and other educational institutions, at all of which I have spoken personally with members of the faculty, and especially the members of the scientific groups of the faculties. They have all endorsed the principles embraced in the bill, and have stated that they would like to see the bill enacted into law in the form in which it is now before the Senate.

Mr. President, the bill is the outgrowth of more than 4 years of work. It started in the early part of the war when there was the utmost need for research. The research work then undertaken culminated in the atomic bomb, the proximity fuse, and various other inventions. However, in the use of those inventions, and in the research which was carried on in connection with them, we were merely applying the basic studies which had been made, some of them even prior to World War I, which were carried on by our laboratories and the scientists in our universities and elsewhere all over the world. All we did during the last war was to exhaust the reservoir which had been built up. If we will accept the word of many of the men who fought in the Pacific and in other places, we will know that many of the results of our research did not reach them until too late to be of the greatest effect. At that time we had no central body capable of carrying on and coordinating the necessary work involved.

During the Civil War there was created a national organization known as the National Academy of Sciences. As will be recalled, the Civil War was fought with probably a minimum of scientific effort on both sides. It is true that the ironclad ship came out of the Civil War. It is also true that, to some extent, balloons were used for observation purposes. But, in the main, the war was a rehash of the old war of man against man, with very little scientific ruffles added thereto. The Spanish-American War was a rehash of the same situation.

World War I eventually started and we had to create a new scientific organization in order to take care of this country's cause, and do the work which was originally outlined to be done by the National Academy of Sciences. The great difficulty with the National Academy of Sciences was, first, that it had no appropriations; second, it grew to be an honorary group, and, shall I say, self-perpetuating, because its membership, though appointed, had to be composed of men selected from the National Academy itself to replace those who had passed out of the Academy by reason of death or other causes. The work which was performed by the members was purely voluntary and—I say this in no derogation of the Academy—was naturally slow and somewhat cumbersome. So we created a scientific organization for World War I which was really the first scientifically waged war. Other nations built up scientific organizations. Germany had them. England attempted to build up one, and eventually even Russia started to build up a national defense scientific organization. None of those countries realized that the greatest defense of a nation lies in the welfare of the people of the nation. I care not how many generals and admirals the Nation may have; we cannot have an Army or Navy without men—seamen, privates, sergeants, warrant officers, and others. The strength of a nation lies in its manpower, and its will to accomplish the objective set forth by the nation. Therefore, one of the greatest defense measures which can be advanced is that of building up a strong manpower with the will to defend the country's institutions.

Finally there came World War II. On that occasion we set up several scientific agencies, the chief of which was the Office of Scientific Research and Development. In each case, however, all the scientific agencies were merely using the basic information which had been developed during time of peace.

Mr. President, allow me to suggest that we are going to hear a great deal about industry and its scientific research. Industry—I do not blame it—must look to returns in connection with scientific research from the sale of the results of such research. That naturally precludes many basic research problems which are taken up only by public institutions such as universities, colleges, and government laboratories of various types.

A private industry can only justify itself to its stockholders when it can show results from the research work it conducts. Therefore we have become the greatest nation in the world in applied research, which is the research relating to things which can be sold, but we have become a somewhat backward nation in the case of basic research. We have listened to the siren song, "Business will take care of this." We listened to that siren song in various other forms, and it led us to destruction in basic research lines.

It is my firm conviction that we can no longer afford to delay action on a national science program. The strength of a nation, for peace as well as for war, depends today as never before on the strength of its scientific resources. During the titanic struggle of the past few years, we learned well the lesson that modern warfare is a battle waged in the laboratory as well as in the field. Tanks cannot be met with bare hands; battleships and carriers and submarines cannot be met with rowboats; the atomic bomb cannot be met without scientific research, and, so far, the scientists say that they have not found any way to meet it. We must keep abreast and ahead of all such developments, and, above all, we must remember that it is impossible to have a nation without people. Some seem to think that this Nation of ours is a collection of corporations; some seem to think that it is merely an area of land; some seem to think that it is a group of farmers; some seem to think it is a collection of coal mines; but let me tell you, Mr. President, this Nation of ours is a collection of free individuals and their welfare is of paramount importance to the welfare of the Nation as a whole, because a nation which does not have strong individuals, healthy, well-nourished individual citizens, with something to look forward to, is a very poor nation.

We also know that in time of peace, science presents endless possibilities for advancing the health and welfare of our people. I call attention to the fact that penicillin was discovered 29 years ago, but no practical application was made of it because nobody had the financial backing to go ahead with it, until the war made something of that kind imperative. We have built up resistance to the sulfa drugs to such an extent that we had to have something else to go along with them. Not only must we have adequate research related to military defense, but we must assure a strong, healthy growth of scientific knowledge in all areas, particularly in fundamental research, which has too much been neglected in the United States. Military research cannot flourish alone. Neither can industrial or medical research grow in isolation. All must be based on a well-rounded development of scientific investigation in all fields. No area of science is unrelated to other fields, and out of seemingly useless, theoretical knowledge come the practical inventions of tomorrow.

The failure to have well-rounded research development was one of the difficulties of this war. I well remember one instance which was brought out before the committee. We were importing mica from India by airplane, at a cost of $3,500 a ton when we had thousands of tons of mica in the United States, which we could get almost for the cost of mining plus a little profit. That was because we had never related science to anything else. We developed machines in the course of 3 months to test spotted and clouded mica, and as a result it became unnecessary to import mica for electrical resistance purposes.

Moreover, I point out that we must not place undue emphasis upon military research. Research that might improve the eyesight of our young men is health research, and, as we found out in this war, it is also military research. Research that will develop their strength while we call it health research, is military research. Research that makes for strong groups of individuals is military research. We do not wish to be a Nation of soldiers, nor have we any desire but to live peacefully with our fellow nations of the world. Defense research is essential for our security. But the real purpose of the scientist is to bring our Nation peace and prosperity. Science has created new inventions and processes out of which have grown the great new industries which in turn have created more jobs, comfort and plenty. Science has brought medicine out of the dark ages of a hundred years ago with its ever increasing victories over disease and pain. This is the real task of science—to make a better life for all of the peoples of the world. But, unfortunately, there has been no coordination.

I well remember a surgeon, a friend of mine, who spent 5 years perfecting an operation on the spine for spinal meningitis, and just when the technique had been worked out he ascertained that a serum had been discovered which obviated the operation. Had there been a central agency of some kind with knowledge to advise others that work was going on in the other line, my surgeon friend might have contributed to that work instead of spending his time inventing instruments.

Our task here in the Congress is to provide the best possible legislative framework for a program that will assure the full development of scientific research for our national security and welfare. They are indissolubly linked.

No one will disagree with the objectives of the bill now before the Senate. There may be some disagreement as to the best way to implement these objectives. The National Science Foundation bill, S. 1850, represents a very considerable amount of thought and effort to arrive at the best possible bill to do the job. I believe that S. 1850 will do the job and will do it well.

The present bill is sponsored by eight Senators, two of them Republicans, six Democrats. They are MAGNUSON, JOHNSON of Colorado, PEPPER, FULBRIGHT, SALTONSTALL, FERGUSON, THOMAS of Utah, and myself. All of us worked on the preparation of the bill. Last summer both Senator MAGNUSON and myself introduced legislative proposals for the promotion of scientific research. Those bills were based on extensive studies conducted by the Subcommittee on War Mobilization into the Government's research and development activities during the war period and the needs for the postwar period, and on the recommendations of Dr. Vannevar Bush who, at the request of President Roosevelt, directed a study of the Nation's research needs. Since the objectives and scope of those two bills were similar, joint hearings were held during the month of October and early November of 1945 by the Subcommittees on Science Legislation of the Military Affairs Committee and of the Commerce Committee. Over 100 witnesses were heard, representing the sciences, medicine, education, government administration, and public-interest groups. Many divergent points of view were presented in regard to specific provisions of the bills. Nevertheless, the witnesses agreed all but unanimously on the urgent need for a national science foundation. After these hearings, further joint meetings and discussions with scientists and others led to the preparation of the present bill, S. 1850. This bill was reported out of the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs on February 27, with a concurring report by the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. HART. Will the Senator advise the Senate how the witnesses who appeared before the joint committee were chosen? Was everyone who requested to be heard called in?

Mr. KILGORE. So far as my knowledge goes, every scientist and everyone else who asked to be heard had an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. HART. May I also ask the Senator if the committee sent out over the Nation a request for scientists or anyone else to come before the committee?

Mr. KILGORE. We communicated with all groups that were listed and also with individual scientists and universities. In other words, the various scientific societies, various scientific committees, and colleges and universities were all advised of the hearing. More than a hundred appeared and testified. I may say also there was only one dissenting voice in the hundred, and that was Dr. Jewett, at that time president of the National Academy of Sciences, vice president of A. T. & T., and president of the Bell Research Laboratories, who felt that there should be no research of any kind, even military research.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may say to the Senator from Connecticut that not only did 110 appear at the hearings, but many scientists and laymen interested in this matter, presidents of universities and others, who could not come to the hearings sent long statements. There are two full volumes, and, as the Senator from West Virginia has pointed out, the only dissenting voice was that of one man.

Mr. KILGORE. Let me say, Mr. President, in further explanation to the Senator, that after all the hearings were concluded a committee was formed, consisting of leading scientists, to study the bill. I think the committee was headed by Vannevar Bush and Dr. Isaiah Bowman as cochairmen. We met with Dr. Bowman and Dr. Bush in a conference in which all points in dispute with reference to the bill itself were ironed out, and we departed from the conference with both sides satisfied as to the details of the bill.

Mr. HART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield further to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. HART. The Senator has mentioned having received testimony from Dr. Jewett. Did the committee ask the other large commercial laboratories, such, for instance, as General Electric and Westinghouse, to present evidence?

Mr. KILGORE. Dr. Langmuir, head of the General Electric Laboratory, testified before the committee, as did Dr. Kettering, of the General Motors Laboratory. I do not know of a single large laboratory which did not have a witness before the committee, and all were in agreement on the need for the enactment of the bill.

Dr. Langmuir was the second witness to appear at the last group of hearings we held, and he had just returned from Russia, where he had been going over the Russian scientific activities, and he testified in a very interesting way on the bill before the committee.

Mr. HART. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KILGORE. On April 9 the Committee on Military Affairs reported favorably and recommended the passage of Senate bill 1850 without amendment, and submitted a report thereon. I hope Senators will read the report because it contains a very detailed explanation of the implementation of the bill.

I can assure Senators that this bill, S. 1850, represents the best efforts of my colleagues and myself, working closely with the Nation's leading scientists and educators, and with the administrative officials of the Government's research agencies.

Let me say, for the information of the Senator from Connecticut, that we had before us the head of the Patent Office, and also leading patent attorneys. In fact, one of the leading patent attorneys, Mr. Will Davis, sat in with the committee in the drafting of the bill, and assisted us in framing a bill which would not amend or affect in any way the patent laws of the United States.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. HART. I thank the Senator for his last statement. Of course, I am probably the least capable Member of the Senate to understand the patent laws, but I should like to ask the Senator concerning the national defense feature of the bill, referring to subdivision (f) on page 19, which embodies reservations which are obviously inserted in the bill to satisfy the military about the publication and dissemination of information.

At another place in the bill there is a statement that all divisions of the foundation shall have full access to all information, scientific or otherwise, which the entire foundation possesses. Does the Senator think that section 5 modifies that provision?

Mr. KILGORE. I think the words "notwithstanding any other provision of this act" constitute a positive prohibition in the act against the dissemination of any information which the President or any person designated for that purpose shall seek to protect.

Mr. HART. Let me further ask the Senator, if it is habit and routine that everything which develops within the foundation shall be immediately known to everyone will not the secrets be out before the necessity for keeping them secret becomes manifest?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I believe what the Senator is speaking of is knowledge being made known to the members of the Board. I think that is the provision the Senator has in mind, which might conflict.

Mr. KILGORE. That national science foundation is proposed "to promote the progress of science and the useful arts." It will do this in several ways.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I believe the Senator from Connecticut had reference to line 3, on page 8, where the bill reads, "The Board and each such committee shall have full access to all information in the possession of the foundation." Is not that the provision to which the Senator had reference?

Mr. HART. Yes. It says "The Board and each such committee," which seems to include about 150 people.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think that is the provision which the Senator felt was in conflict. I merely wanted to identify what the Senator had in mind.

Mr. HART. I thank the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, there has been a gross misunderstanding of the foundation's purpose. In the first place, the foundation is not a research organization within itself. It is a supplementing organization. It is contemplated that the various agencies of Government will proceed with their own research as they have in the past, and when they encounter a situation in connection with which they need further money in order to go ahead with something else which has developed in their research, it will not take an act of Congress to get the money. It will merely have to be shown to the Board that it is in the general interest of the public welfare, of national defense, or health and medicine, and the Board, just as in the case of any other foundation board, may grant the money.

I repeat, Mr. President, the National Science Foundation is proposed "to promote the progress of science and the useful arts." It will do this in several ways. First, by supplementing funds privately and publicly available for scientific research through contracts and agreements with research organizations. The foundation will not operate laboratories. It will not interfere with or supplement existing public or private organizations. We have found, however, that universities and foundations are finding it increasingly difficult to support original work, particularly in the basic sciences.

We have found that only 5 percent of the huge industrial research budget in the coming years will be devoted to fundamental research. Thus the foundation will fill a vital role in supplementing the funds available for research in fields important to our national welfare, but which provide no incentive for private investment or for which private foundations have insufficient resources.

The National Science Foundation would also naturally cover certain fields of applied science. That would particularly apply, I may say to the Senator from Connecticut, to the military phases which are largely applied science. These are principally the fields of medicine and of national defense. The public interest in these fields is evident. Furthermore, the war has shown what tremendous strides can be made in health and medicine when concentrated research effort is made possible by adequate funds and facilities. We cannot afford to ignore the vision which wartime medical research has brought to us of new and greater victories over pain and disease.

Provisions for military research follow the recommendations of the Wilson committee and the bills S. 825 and H. R. 3440 in setting up a mechanism by which the Army and Navy research men can work closely with civilian scientists in exploring new areas of military importance. This method of operation worked very well in the Office of Scientific Research and Development during the war; and the armed forces, as well as the civilian scientists, feel that a similar body should be continued.

In addition to direct support of research through contracts and other agreements, the foundation would help assure that talented young men and women would have opportunities for education. I may say at that point that we are 5 years behind in our crop of young scientists at the present time, and it is going to take some time and considerable concentrated effort to catch up with that 5-year lag. We were woefully behind even 5 years ago.

The foundation would provide a number of scholarships for undergraduate work, to be granted on a State quota basis and probably administered by the States, as well as a number of graduate fellowships for advanced work and research. I think the undergraduate scholarships are highly essential. We spend tremendous sums of money for scholarships in the Military Academy, sums that I blush to think of. We spend tremendous sums for scholarships in the Naval Academy and in the Coast Guard Academy. Yet, on the basic matter on which those academies may reach this success, the Federal Government spends no money with respect to undergraduate work. Therefore it is highly necessary that we subsidize—and I use that word without apology—the crop of young scientists in this country.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield for a question.

Mr. HART. Does the Senator know that the so-called scholarships for West Point and the Naval Academy obligate the men who accept such educational benefits to serve the Government for a considerable number of years after graduation? May I ask if in this case it is the intention to impose any obligation whatsoever upon the recipients?

Mr. KILGORE. None whatsoever, I may say. The recipients are subject, as they always have been, to furnishing themselves as the cannon fodder in the event of war. I think that is enough of an obligation. Every time we get into trouble we call the young men out to fight the war.

As I have said, the foundation would provide a number of scholarships for undergraduate work, to be granted on a State quota basis and probably administered by the States, as well as a number of graduate fellowships for advanced work and research. This provision is particularly important in view of the fact that we now have a deficit of thousands and thousands of trained scientists due to our shortsighted wartime draft policies. By inducting many thousands of young science students into general military service, we have lost a whole generation of chemists, doctors, physicists, engineers, and biologists.

I may say along that line, Mr. President, that one of the most amazing incidents I ever knew of occurred in 1941, when the dean of a very fine scientific institution in the United States recommended to the Army that certain of his scientific students go into certain branches of the service upon induction, and was told, "Well, the infantry trained them and the infantry is going to get them," despite the fact that they had been specially trained by the dean for service in the Signal Corps.

Another important function of the National Science Foundation is the work of the information division. The aim of the foundation will be the fullest possible dissemination for use of scientific and technical information. People like ourselves who are not professional scientists, do not realize the great handicap under which the scientist and technician work due to inadequate and slow publication of new discoveries. Our Nation has too few good technical libraries. Translations and abstracts of foreign scientific literature are completely inadequate. The National Science Foundation, working in cooperation with existing libraries and scientific organizations could do much to remedy this situation, and be of tremendous assistance to the working scientist and the industrial engineer.

I may say, Mr. President, that one of the most astounding things I learned in the investigation was the fact that one corporation, a German trust, I. G. Farben Industrie, had the most complete library on invention of any organization in the world. It was much more complete than that of our own Patent Office. The I. G. Farben knew more about our Patent Office than our own scientists knew. They kept close track of every patent filed and every invention made in every country of the world.

An aspect of the foundation's work which I believe most important is the furtherance of scientific collaboration between nations. The language of science is truly international. The United States, as well as other nations, will benefit greatly from closer relations among the scientists of the world. Exchange of scientific information, exchange of teachers and students, cooperation on research projects of international importance, and closer contact through international scientific meetings and congresses are some of the ways by which this can be achieved.

Now that I have outlined the principal objectives of the National Science Foundation bill, I believe it would be helpful if I briefly summarized its chief provisions.

SECTION 3. NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

Subsection 3 (a) establishes the National Science Foundation as an independent agency of the Federal Government. It provides that the foundation be administered by full-time Government officials, the Administrator to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Attention is called to the provision requiring that, before appointing an Administrator, the President shall consult with and receive the recommendations of the National Science Board. While not necessarily binding on the President, who must accept final responsibility for his appointees, this provision is included as a means of assuring harmony between the Administrator and the Board and to emphasize the necessarily high qualifications essential in the Administrator. I may say, Mr. President, it is my conception that the administrator of this fund must not only be a scientist but he must be an administrator of top rank. He will not do research work; but he will have to administer a fund. Although a review of the history of appointments to scientific posts in the Government gives no basis for believing that a President is likely to use this appointment as a political reward, I regard the Administrator of the foundation to be so important as to merit this provision of the bill. I may add, that one does not have to be a member of the bar to be a justice of the Supreme Court of the Nation or of the courts of any State in the Union, so far as I know.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KILGORE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. I understand that one of the big issues in the preparation of this bill was as to whether there should be an administrator with wide power, which this bill provides for, or whether the ultimate authority should be vested in a board. I understand that that issue represented the difference between the original so-called Magnuson bill and the bill which was introduced by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia on behalf of himself and other Senators. I should like to have the Senator tell me how that difference was resolved, as it has been in this bill, because my scientific friends, who are reflecting their views through me, from Princeton University and other institutions of that kind, are still insisting that they would like to see authority in the Board as it is provided in the amendment in the nature of a substitute which I have offered. I have taken that approach. I think it is most important for us to have all the information possible on that subject, because it seems to me that this point is fundamental in the whole picture. I shall be glad to hear from the Senator on that point.

Mr. KILGORE. Let me ask the Senator from New Jersey if he would like to have this country governed by a board of part-time officials rather than by a President as Chief Executive.

Mr. SMITH. The plan in terms of which we are thinking is that of having a large foundation, which will choose a board of nine who will make the ultimate decision, rather than one administrator to make decisions on these important scientific questions.

Mr. KILGORE. Speaking of foundations, does not the Rockefeller Foundation have a director?

Mr. SMITH. It does.

Mr. KILGORE. Is not he the man who looks after everything? There is a board which meets with him.

Mr. SMITH. He is subject entirely to the board. That is one of the illustrations which my scientific friends point out. They believe that that kind of a board is essential. They do not feel that Senate bill 1850 in its present form presents that picture. They believe that the Administrator has too much power.

Mr. KILGORE. Who constitutes the board of the Rockefeller Foundation?

Mr. SMITH. As I recall the organization, its board of directors is chosen by the foundation.

Mr. KILGORE. Who controls the foundation?

Mr. SMITH. The Rockefeller Foundation.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes. Who controls the selection of the board?

Mr. SMITH. The members of the foundation, I assume.

Mr. KILGORE. Who are the members of the foundation?

Mr. SMITH. I cannot answer. I do not know who they are.

Mr. KILGORE. I think it will be found in connection with all foundations that those who furnish the funds have representatives who control the selection of the governing board. Is not that correct?

Mr. SMITH. To a certain extent; yes.

Mr. KILGORE. I am speaking about the major foundations, such as the Mellon Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, and others.

Mr. SMITH. I had experience for several years at Princeton University, and I know that the Rockefeller Foundation looked to former President Hibben and others in Princeton for advice as to appointments to the foundation.

Mr. KILGORE. Certainly they look to them for advice.

Mr. SMITH. They use those experts to tell them what kind of people they need.

Mr. KILGORE. We do not want to insult the man whom the people of the United States elect as Chief Executive by saying that he is any less reasonable than the Rockefeller Foundation, which consults with experts. Do we wish to insult the man whom the people of this country chose to be their Chief Executive by saying that he would utterly disregard the scientific people of this country by going contrary to their wishes? The taxpayers are the ones who are putting up the money. It seems to me that the final selection should be with some representative of the taxpayers, just as it is in connection with other foundations. That was the basis upon which the bill was written, to the satisfaction of Dr. Bush and Dr. Bowman in conference. They agreed that they would be satisfied if we required consultation, or at least an opportunity for consultation, with the board of directors prior to appointment. We must realize that there is a slight difference between a private foundation and a public foundation. There is a difference in who puts up the money, in the ultimate aim, and in those who should be selected to head it.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. HART. Coming back to the question which the Senator asked the Senator from New Jersey, I think it would be helpful if we all kept in mind that the general principle upon which such foundations operate is the old one which is very familiar in this country, of a board of directors who really control the administrator, who is the president of the company.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Let me add a word in answer to the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia that this plan of board control has the approval of all these scientists. I have talked with Dr. Bush about this subject, and I have before me a statement which he has made. I quote from Dr. Bush's statement:

> There are several objections in my opinion to this second proposal.

That is, the proposal for a one-man administrator.

> In the first place, all powers are centered in one man as director. This may lead to efficiency in an operating agency, but it is a kind of autocracy which holds grave dangers to the full development of science. As former chairman of the National Advisory Commission for Aeronautics and as director of the OSRD, I have participated in, and been the responsible head of, both kinds of organizations, and I can testify without reservation that a national science foundation will be on a far sounder basis if its policy is determined by a board rather than by one man.

I could quote further from Dr. Bush. I talked with him during the past week. I have been at Princeton University, and have talked with the leaders there.

Let me say to the proponents of the bill that I am entirely in sympathy with what they are seeking to attain. I am merely discussing the best way to make it most effective. It is my own feeling that we are in danger of stultifying the activities of our scientific people if they feel that they are to be hide-bound and governed by someone in Washington who can tell them what the area of their research shall be. That is why I feel that because this is a bill to develop basic research, it requires a different approach than a program for Nation-wide education. This involves research in basic science. The only place applied science is brought in is in connection with military and naval activities, which my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HART] has discussed with me quite fully. There we enter into the area of applied science. I am collaborating with the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], who has studied the military and naval aspects of the question, with a view of offering a revised bill, which will take into consideration the field of applied science as it relates to military and naval use.

I have in mind encouraging the scientific man to put forth his best endeavors on special problems. I do not think he will work under a plan headed by one man with as much authority as this bill seems to call for. I am raising that question because it is involved in the debate. I believe that we should deal with it as we go along. It may be that some modification should be made of my plan, or of the plan of the Senator from West Virginia; but we cannot overlook the important question of board control.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let me say to the Senator from New Jersey that originally there was the bill which I introduced, providing for scholarships and fellowships. It was very limited. The program was to be administered by a board appointed by the President, following the old normal procedure in universities and foundations. The board was to appoint an administrator. After much research on this problem for many months and years, the Senator from West Virginia introduced a bill providing for a full-time director and a sort of advisory board. Most of our scientific friends, as well as educators, have the feeling that the highest type of men cannot be persuaded to serve on a so-called advisory board, because they would have very little to say about what the administrator or the director should do. This question being so vital, it was felt that some authority should be placed in the board. That was one of the bones of contention in the original hearings, as the Senator from West Virginia has pointed out.

The statement by Dr. Bush, which has just been read by the Senator from New Jersey, is a correct statement. There are several other statements on the question. But because of the fact that we became involved in many broad problems of science affecting the public itself, and because of the fact that we have now embarked upon a program which may call for a great deal more of the taxpayers' money than originally contemplated, it was thought that the President of the United States, whoever he might be at the time, should have some authority, inasmuch as he would have the responsibility.

Therefore, after many meetings with scientists, as well as laymen, who, like the Senator from New Jersey, are basically in favor of such a program, and after much testimony from the Director of the Budget, Bernard Baruch, and several others, we finally agreed, because of the scope of this bill, that this method would give the Board a great deal of authority, and would enable the Executive to feel that he would have some authority, within his responsibility for the expenditure of the taxpayers' money. I believe that the mechanics would be that under the pending bill the Board would give to the President five or six names, and it would say to him, "Here are the names of those whom we suggest to be the Administrator." Of course, the President would not need to follow their suggestions. But I cannot conceive of a situation in which a lay President would not want the advice of the great scientific and lay leaders who would compose this board.

It was felt that such an arrangement would be sufficient and would create a good liaison. Some testified later that perhaps the arrangement now proposed would be even better, because in the beginning we had only the tools.

In the present situation we find ourselves confronted with somewhat the same predicament as that which confronted us the other day in connection with the OPA bill, namely, that we must either accept all of the proposal or reject all of it. However, some feel that the system now proposed would be even a better one. So far as I know, most of these eminent men have endorsed the principle of administration laid down in Senate bill 1850.

I hope that explains the matter to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am glad to have that explanation. I shall not delay the Senator from West Virginia further at this time. We shall have the subject before us again.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, at our committee meetings the suggestion was that the President should consult with and receive the recommendations of the National Science Board. While not necessarily binding on the President, who must accept final responsibility for his appointees, this provision is included as a means of assuring harmony between the Administrator and the Board and to emphasize the necessarily high qualifications essential in the Administrator, as I stated before. Although a review of the history of appointments to scientific posts in the Government gives no basis for believing that appointment to this post is likely to degenerate into a political matter, I think it would be an insult to the people of the United States to say that a man whom they elected as President of the country would make an appointment of that sort.

We also considered the alternative proposal of vesting the powers of the foundation in a board or commission of full-time Government employees, but we believe that the organization recommended in this bill represents a more efficient form of administration, and that by utilizing the part-time services of larger numbers of scientists on the National Science Board and on the divisional scientific committees, and on other advisory bodies, it makes for an even fuller participation of the Nation's scientists in the program of the foundation.

Let me ask the Senator a question at this point. Three alternatives were available: A board composed of full-time Government employees or directors; a board composed of part-time directors; or an administrator. Realizing that on a full-time basis we could not get the type of men whom we had to have as members of the board of directors, but that we would have to take them as part-time directors, and realizing that the ramifications of this matter were so great that some executive would have to carry it on, we agreed upon having a single administrator who would serve with a board of directors.

Let me call attention to the fact that on the board of directors will be the chairman of all the divisions, and those divisions are to be composed exclusively of scientists. All the planning and all the detailed scientific work is to be done in the divisions. They prepare and submit the plans. The board of directors does not do that. The heads of the divisions or chairmen of the divisions draw up and present the plans for their own divisions. Those men are composed exclusively of scientists, either part-time or full-time. The head of each division can call in anyone he wishes to call in to build up his program. Then the chairman of the division goes on the board of directors and advises with the Administrator. That is the solution which we finally have worked out as the best working way to handle the matter on a governmental basis. We cannot handle it exactly as we would handle a private foundation and fix responsibility. The great weakness of the OEM, for instance, was divided responsibility. That has always been a serious weakness of every Government agency headed by a board of executive power. A board is a good means of obtaining a cross section of views; but for administrative efficiency a single head is desirable. We never yet have seen a commission successfully handle a department.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I do not visualize the particular problem which is faced here as something like the problem faced by the Interstate Commerce Commission or a board of that kind.

Mr. KILGORE. No.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to see the basic policy determined by the Board which represents the scientific groups. In my proposal I am taking the National Academy of Sciences as the basis, and that academy would suggest to the President what the scientific group should be. Sixty people are in it, I believe. They would select a board of nine. Now the Senator from West Virginia is suggesting that there be an administrator appointed by the President to give them orders.

As I read the bill, the Administrator would have wide control in respect to setting up committees and determining what should be done. I do not think any one man can be a proper means of determining what shall be done in the way of scientific research in America.

A number of prominent men have made this criticism of the bill. Their criticism of this bill is simply based on their fear that the natural and inevitable result of such an arrangement would be to stultify the advancement and development of scientific research.

Mr. KILGORE. I wonder whether the Senator from New Jersey will submit their names for the RECORD, because in view of all the endorsements of the bill which we have received, I should like to know who are the persons who take a different view. Before the committee adjourned, an agreement was worked out completely to Dr. Bush's satisfaction. He expressed himself as perfectly satisfied. So did Dr. Bowman and various others.

So I should like to know who are the persons who are dissatisfied.

Mr. SMITH. I have talked at some length with Dr. Bush, and I talked to Dr. Luther P. Eisenhardt, of Princeton, last week. He is on the board of the National Academy of Sciences. I have also talked to Dr. Hugh Taylor, of the National Academy of Sciences, who now is dean of the Graduate School of Princeton University, and formerly was head of its department of chemistry.

Mr. KILGORE. How many of those men are members of the National Academy of Sciences?

Mr. SMITH. Practically all of them are.

Mr. KILGORE. I thought so. Did the Senator from New Jersey know that a poll was taken by the National Academy of Sciences? Does the Senator from New Jersey know about that?

Mr. SMITH. No; I do not.

Mr. KILGORE. They said they felt that the National Academy of Sciences should handle this matter through an agency of its own. According to my recollection, only about six scientists said that should be done, but a great number of scientists said it should not be done.

Mr. SMITH. I agree with that. I am not claiming that they should manage this matter. But I thought we should give consideration to the source from which will be obtained the names of the men who shall be the fundamental determinants of policy in this matter. That is what I am referring to. I am afraid to leave the matter in the hands of an administrator with as much power as this bill gives.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, men of the kind we have been speaking of—Dr. Bush and Dr. Bowman, and most of the witnesses—would prefer a board-type of administration. But at the time when we made the suggestion, we were dealing with only scholarships and fellowships. We were not then dealing with the military and Government branches, and we did not anticipate the scope of scientific research and grants-in-aid.

Although the men of whom we have been speaking would prefer a board-type of administration, they feel that in other circumstances, such as those which now exist, possibly a combination of a board and an administrator would be better. It is rather hard to write the exact terms.

I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that after many hearings, both the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] and I were stuck. My original proposal was for a board. We eventually went to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, and he sat with us and finally worked out this language for us, which was agreeable to all sides because of the fact that the matter has developed into other fields.

It is true, as the record will show, that on the basis of the original concept they would prefer to have a scientific program for the Nation conducted by a board of their own scientific, established people. But under this bill we go beyond that field a great deal, and they realized that, and they are in favor of it. They think the arrangement now proposed will take care of the matter.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, perhaps my difficulty is that it seems to me this bill goes further than we should go at this time. I am simply seeking aid for basic science or pure science. I am not thinking of applied science at all. Aside from the military needs, applied science can be taken care of by the industries and plants. I do not wish to help that at all. I wish to help basic science. That is what needs help.

Under the second part of the bill, I wish to help our military and naval program. The distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has prepared and introduced a bill of that nature, and we are incorporating it as part 2 of the bill which I shall present.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I think that will be unnecessary, because since the hearings were held representatives of the War Department, the Navy Department, and other interested agencies have testified that they are in favor of this plan, and they have testified that this plan will take care of the problem.

Mr. KILGORE. A certain scientist, working for the Rockefeller Foundation on cancer research, discovered a new serum. It did not at that time affect cancer. But that scientist insisted on working on the new serum. Therefore, he was compelled to seek aid from some other source, because the Rockefeller board would not allow him to pursue his research while working for them. Incidentally, that scientist developed his serum which is of immense value.

I conceive the Administrator's job to be of an administrative nature. He does not direct the scientific committees. In the first place, XYZ university lays out a program, which is not submitted to the administrator, but to the particular division to which the program applies. That division goes over it and examines it. It is composed utterly and entirely of scientists, most of whom have been gathered from the colleges, universities, and various laboratories of the country. They decide whether or not the program has merit. If it has merit they send it up, and the available funds are divided on the basis of the program submitted by the various scientific divisions. The top picture is largely one of enforcement. That is, they must see to it, for example, that military secrets are not involved, and that the information is properly disseminated. They must decide also when public facilities may be used, and when private facilities may be used on the recommendation of the scientists below. They must also decide what is the best contract that can be worked out.

I may say to the Senator that the Administrator's job is largely a business one. It is similar to the job of a business manager of a large hospital. He has an advisory board with whom he consults. The real work is done at the scientific level. That is how we finally convinced the scientists that we were on the right track. They are to pass on the question of programs, fellowships, scholarships, and what should be done and what should not be done. They constitute the funneling process. The big question at the top is, How much money can we devote to this program, how much must be spent, and how shall it be administered? Secondly, the information developed must be disseminated through proper sources.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I presume that the fundamental difference between the Senator and myself is that he would have the administrator appointed by the President.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes; to handle all the public funds.

Mr. SMITH. But that still does not make him independent of the scientific board. My program calls for the board to be nominated by the National Science Foundation. There would then be a sub-board to be composed of nine, and they would choose a director as their employee.

Mr. KILGORE. Why have the President appoint the board?

Mr. SMITH. Because it is the foundation that controls the research.

Mr. KILGORE. No. That is a policy which has been pursued in this country too much of late. That would require the President to be responsible for a group of persons over whom he had no discretion or control. If we are going to make any provision of that kind, why not let the National Science Foundation run the show? Why go through a formality? Why use a cloak or smokescreen by having the President nominate someone who has been selected by someone else, and then hold him responsible for the activities of the person whose selection he had nothing to say about?

Mr. SMITH. He appoints the persons who have been nominated by the foundation. What we are trying to do is to encourage the scientific people of the country to pursue research which they believe is essential to the proper welfare of the Nation as a whole.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes; but under the program which the Senator suggests, the President would have nothing to say or do except to sign on the dotted line.

Mr. SMITH. I believe that in all similar cases the President takes the advice and judgment of others.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes; but he is not bound by it.

Mr. SMITH. I believe that he would be bound by it no more under my plan than under any other plan.

Mr. KILGORE. Does not the Senator think that we get away from one picture, one phase? We assume the attitude, for example, of a certain distinguished railroad president who, at one time, said "The public be damned." We are perhaps too apt to think this program is merely for the benefit of the scientists alone, and forget the fact that the public is also being considered. The people are the ones who put up the money.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will yield——

Mr. KILGORE. Wait until I finish, please. We get completely away from the fact that there is a public to be considered in connection with this matter. The scientists gain the rewards of their labor from the same public, and at the same time they are seeking to benefit the public; at least, that is true if they are good scientists. We must realize that this entire picture involves not only one side but two. There is the side of the public, the citizenry for whom the program is established; and there is the side of the scientist who is necessary in order to make the program operate successfully. Both sides must be taken into consideration, and I believe that both must be represented.

I would be more inclined to go along with the Senator in his theory with relation to the National Academy of Sciences if it were not a self-perpetuating board, as one might say, or a scientific oligarchy. In other words, if the board were composed only of men who had attained certain standards among scientists, and if every scientist who had attained those standards were a member of the board, I should look upon it more favorably. But we must realize that the membership is limited in number, and it elects its own members, although again we go through the farcical procedure of having the President appoint them even though he does not have a thing in the world to say about them. I may say that there is a distinct schism in the scientific field with regard to that one point.

Mr. SMITH. I do not know of any abuses by the scientists in the academy, I am trying only to suggest a way in which the results which we are seeking may be achieved. But I cannot overlook the fact that the paramount interest must lie in the public.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes; the public pays the bill.

Mr. SMITH. There would be no purpose in having the proposed research work done if it were not for the public.

Mr. KILGORE. That is correct. But if I may interrupt the Senator again, we must also agree that a responsibility must be fixed at some place. Am I not correct?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. KILGORE. The responsibility must be fixed for proper performance. Has the Senator ever seen responsibilities placed upon a nine-man board without some member ducking his responsibility and saying, "I am not to blame." I believe that it is necessary to have one man do the administering and pin responsibility and authority upon him for seeing that the results are accomplished. Responsibility and authority must go together. Since the President is the Chief Executive of the Nation, he is the man who should have the responsibility and authority of seeing that the man under him, the man who is to have charge of this work, is just like the head of a Government department. He must perform properly. In order to do that under this bill, the scientists must be satisfied or, because of a lack of cooperation, the whole venture will fail.

Mr. SMITH. I agree with the Senator, but, in my judgment, we cannot give one man authority and responsibility in a field where circumstances are too intangible. If we want to get the maximum results, we must allow the most remote scientist to explain, through his colleagues, that he has something of merit.

Under this bill it is my judgment that the Administrator has too much power to prevent an outcropping of the inventive genius which we should encourage.

Mr. KILGORE. He does not handle that except through a committee.

Mr. SMITH. Who controls those committees? We have in our bill committees which perhaps have the same function, but I think they are appointed under a different system. But I do not wish to delay the Senator. I just presented the issue to show where we differ.

Mr. KILGORE. We have discussed this very thoroughly.

Most essential to a National Science Foundation program is the active participation in its direction by as many of our scientists as possible. Section 3 provides for a full-time operating staff which will necessarily consist chiefly of scientists working as full-time Government employees. Section 4 provides for a parallel structure of advisory boards which will make possible participation in the work of the Foundation by large numbers of scientists who cannot give full time.

In this manner the regular staff of the Foundation will be continuously stimulated by contact with working scientists who would be regularly consulted. To prevent these advisory groups from becoming perfunctory bodies, regular and frequent meetings are required and their recommendations will be made public as they desire.

The National Science Board will advise the Administrator in regard to over-all policies and programs. The Board is composed of nine persons appointed by the President, with the advice of the Senate, from among persons who are especially qualified to promote the broad objectives of the Foundation. In addition, the Board will include the chairman of the eight divisional scientific committees, who will be particularly familiar by virtue of their position with the specialized problems of the Foundation.

At the divisional level the divisional scientific committees serve a function comparable to that of the Board for the Foundation as a whole. Members of these committees are to be appointed by the Administrator with the advice and approval of the Board. This administrative set-up will result in the activities of the Foundation being subjected to the critical and public scrutiny of the Nation's scientists.

I want the Senator from New Jersey to hear this. He was talking about the Board. The members of the divisional committees are to be appointed by the Administrator, with the advice and consent of the Board. They must have the approval of the Board, just as Presidential appointments have to have the approval of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. What does advice and approval of the Board mean?

Mr. KILGORE. They must vote to approve them. The names must be submitted to the Board, and approved by the Board.

Mr. SMITH. They are appointed by the Administrator.

Mr. KILGORE. We go back to the constitutional language, practically, as to the appointment of all executive officials, except instead of using the words "advice and consent," we say "advice and approval." The names are submitted to the Board for approval, after they have been advised with.

I repeat, this administrative set-up will result in the activities of the Foundation being subjected to the critical and public scrutiny of the Nation's scientists. I believe that this provision will give scientists as a whole greater voice in the affairs of the national science program than would result from any proposed alternative form of administrative organization.

Section 5 authorizes the Administrator to enter into contracts or other financial arrangements to finance in whole or part research and development activities to be carried on by universities, colleges, public or private research laboratories, and other Government agencies. The nature of scientific research requires that the Foundation be free to support research under a variety of financial arrangements and be granted considerable flexibility with respect to the nature of the financial arrangement employed. Thus, the Administrator may enter into contracts for highly specific projects or make relatively nonspecific grants for the support of broad programs of research in a particular field.

In authorizing the Foundation to support research and development in other Government agencies, it should be understood that such support will be supplementary to the regular research budgets of these Government agencies.

Subsection 5 (b) guarantees a minimum allocation of funds for medical research and for research in fields essential to national defense. The obvious importance of these two fields of applied science to the welfare and security of the Nation justifies this provision.

Let me say, Mr. President, that the reason for inserting that provision was the experience we had prior to the war just ended and the experience we have had in peacetime, when research, particularly in the case of national defense, was starved by the Congress. By inserting this provision we could give the Foundation additional financial nourishment, which would help it carry on in its fields, in spite of any sudden economy program of Congress.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the Senator, but I wish to make a note here that I propose to comment later on subsection (c), page 11, as to distribution among the States. I am one of those who are heartily in favor of the educational program which has been proposed in Senate bill 181. I helped to prepare that program, and I heartily agree with it. That is a matter which should assist the cost of education in the States. I am seeking to give help in matters of basic science which may come to us from the remote corners of the country, may come from the East, West, North, or South. I cannot see any point whatever in a provision of this kind for spreading this all over the States of the Union as though it were an education-help program. I am in favor of the education-help programs, but not through this bill. That should be handled in our educational program, which is covered in different legislation.

Mr. KILGORE. Then the Senator's argument is that we should have a number of programs, instead of trying to have a central reservoir from which we could help existing programs. Is that the idea?

Mr. SMITH. I wish to make this perfectly clear. I say that when we have a foundation set up, it is not a case of scattering fire all over the Nation, it is a question of giving out projects to the experts, and following through with the projects. It is not a matter of providing educational funds, for they are provided for in a totally different bill, and I think we are confusing our whole picture by providing them in a science bill.

Mr. KILGORE. Let me ask the Senator a question along that line. What does the Senator conceive as scientific progress in this country? How would he define adequate scientific progress?

Mr. SMITH. I suppose the Senator means the researches of scientific men in their respective fields, conferring together to determine what those researches should be, determining what are the best lines to follow in pursuit of national defense, the best lines to follow in medicine, in health, and so on. It is when we find the work being done we are satisfied, and we should not scatter the funds. We have not enough in the way of funds to scatter all over the Union and say, "Start some scientific progress." We are getting at a totally different problem. I am in favor of spreading education all over this country, but that has nothing to do with the pending bill. It is not an education bill, it is a scientific-research bill. That is my point.

Mr. KILGORE. How is it possible to carry on scientific research without scientists? Does the Senator believe that Dr. Bush, Dr. Jewett, and others will live forever?

Mr. SMITH. No. As to the scholarship program, I might suggest that we start at the fellowship level, where we can develop real scientists. I do not think we can subsidize them as scientists when they are still in their school life, because the boys in school have not gone far enough for us to see whether they are individuals we should support. It is when we get to the fellowship level, the advanced students, that we find the real scientific prospect whom we can support. We cannot have a Nation-wide program in science. We cannot afford to pay for that, and the Federal Government should not be asked to do that. Private institutions are doing it. We have just introduced a bill, Senate 181, to give grants to States which are following that line. But that has nothing to do with the particular problem before us.

Mr. KILGORE. Senate bill 181 applies to high schools, does it not, and to the grade schools?

Mr. SMITH. It applies to education.

Mr. KILGORE. It applies to the common schools, the public schools?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. KILGORE. And does not apply to the colleges or universities in any way, shape, or form?

Mr. SMITH. No; we start with the public schools.

Mr. KILGORE. Let me call the Senator's attention to a statement in the RECORD made by Dr. Jewett and a statement made by Dr. Bush—I cannot now name the others—who said the only real research ever made that accomplished anything was made by scientists prior to reaching the age of 35. They admit it is the youth among scientists who produce. A man who passes 35 has either made his mark or has settled down to drudging. It is the young man who forges ahead. He is not too set in his ways, as we are here. He will go into new fields and discover new things, and is willing to have the reputation of making a mistake, as he is gambling for the reputation of being a success. If we do not help that type, science languishes, basic science to the contrary notwithstanding. Those are the men who understand basic science.

Mr. SMITH. I regret to say the Senator misunderstands my position entirely. I say that the educational institutions have been sifting students of the high school level and sifting students of the scholarship level. I do not think the Federal Government is called upon to send boys to colleges in every State in this Union to get their undergraduate work. That is being done by the State institutions, by the foundations, by the public school systems. We are getting that foundation laid through the whole public school system. We are in a different field when we get into scientific research. The boys have gone through their undergraduate courses, they have demonstrated that they are scientists of promise. It is then as graduate fellows that we should help them. It is the boy who is 21, not the man who is 35, that I am talking about. It is the boy 21 to 30 who has become a greater student that I refer to, rather than the boy 18 to 21, who is only an undergraduate scholar that the Senator has put in his bill. There is the real difference. I have discussed this matter with many scientific men. They say there is no formula by which the young budding scientist of 18 can be marked. There may be some geniuses, but what I am getting at is that we should funnel these people during the undergraduate years, and when we find those who are recommended by our universities and State colleges and schools throughout the country, then those are the ones we should mark for further advances. They cannot be covered by any other formula that may be made.

Mr. KILGORE. Has the Senator from New Jersey checked the Department of Agriculture record on research; how they carry on their program?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. KILGORE. I would suggest that the Senator look into that.

Mr. SMITH. They have a definitely different program. I know what the Senator is referring to.

Mr. KILGORE. No; it goes extensively into basic research and also into scholarships and the promotion of such things. True, the Department of Agriculture does not go into the matter to the extent which we propose. But I think the Senator misunderstands the purpose of the bill also. I think probably the Senator has not carefully read it. The real way to produce scientists, regardless of whether scholarships are being paid or not—and I am not talking about scholarships now—is to give them research work to do. Scientists cannot be taught out of a textbook at the upper level, particularly in colleges. There is not any scientific teacher that is worth his salt who is not a research worker, who does not do his own research work. I think the Senator from New Jersey will agree with me on that.

Mr. SMITH. I agree.

Mr. KILGORE. No lawyer is worth his salt who is not a good research man. A teacher and a leader cannot rely on the research of others. The purpose of spending this money in the educational institution is not simply with the idea of providing scholarships, but with the idea of eliciting from the institutions what projects they are particularly embarking upon and what facilities they have to enable them to pursue the projects. They may be projects attendant upon health and medicine. They may be projects dependent upon other general welfare work. That is the subdivision we propose. It is not the subdivision of educational funds. It is the subdivision of money provided for the allocation of projects to States and institutions in such a way that the greatest possible opportunity will be given not only to the students but to the faculty to carry on original research and to work on original research programs. Not only that, but it was believed that the best results could not be obtained by putting only one laboratory to work on a problem. By having three or four laboratories working better results are obtained, as was found during the war and as has been found to be true in the past. So by spreading these problems into publicly owned and nonprofit institutions we will get the best results for the money spent in building up that absolutely essential ingredient to our scientific progress, namely, the scientist himself, by giving scientific students something on which to do research work.

Mr. SMITH. My feeling is that the program the Senator is presenting here will simply give us the opportunity and the obligation to subsidize what may be a lot of second- and third-class work, when the purpose of the bill is simply to get going the basic things that must be done right away. Perhaps in the course of time we will get to the elaborate program that the Senator's bill suggests. But my guess is that it is definitely wrong to do them now. My guess is that it is wrong to try to include all the States and educational institutions. To do so is entirely outside of what we are trying to do, which is to provide a basis for scientific research. I have talked it over with many individuals in the educational field, and they think that should not be done now. The only reason for support of such provision is because it may obtain votes for the bill, because every State will receive a portion of the fund, and will help the passage of such a bill. That is not a worthy motive, and the Senator will admit it is not a worthy motive.

What we want to do is to support basic scientific research, and such should not be located in every one of the States of the Union, should not be located here, there, and everywhere, but should be concentrated to get first-rate results. It should be concentrated in the hands of a scientific group which must take care of this problem, and they will not care whether the work is located in Oshkosh or somewhere else. Scattering the fire will cause second- and third-rate results, and I am afraid it will result in the spending of a great deal of money uselessly.

Mr. KILGORE. Does the distinguished Senator know the present dean of the College of Engineering of the University of Chicago?

Mr. SMITH. I am sorry I do not.

Mr. KILGORE. No one else did until the university hired him. He was a teacher of engineering at an absolutely unheard of little college in the State of Colorado. Yet he has been an outstanding success as dean of the College of Engineering of the University of Chicago. No one can tell what is in the package by the paper wrapped around it. I venture to say that if we go back in the history of the—shall I called it Ivy League?—we will find that those colleges were at one time third- or fourth- or second-grade institutions of learning. But the opportunity to go ahead has built them up. Would the Senator deprive other sections of the country of this opportunity, simply to build up a few institutions?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly not.

Mr. KILGORE. That is the Senator's attitude.

Mr. SMITH. It is not my attitude at all, because as a member of the administration in Princeton we looked all over this country to get men to fill our faculty, men of promise. That is what my measure would do. It is not an attempt to build up a so-called Ivy League. I regret the Senator has said that.

Mr. KILGORE. The Senator is objecting to the distribution of money among the educational institutions of the United States on an equitable basis, on the ground that by so doing some of the money might get into a third- or fourth-rate institution.

Mr. SMITH. No; I am not doing that at all.

Mr. KILGORE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I misunderstood him, then. My whole argument was based on that assumption.

Mr. SMITH. I said we would obtain second- or third-rate results if we simply scattered our money, when it ought to be concentrated to get first-rate results. That is the point of my remarks. Some of the very best men will be gotten in the smallest institutions of the country. We know them and we can find them and subsidize them. There is no discrimination against them whatever. But that does not mean that in order to get those few stars we have to subsidize every State and every institution in the country. We cannot afford to do it. It is not a sound Federal policy. The thing to do is to be discriminative. That is the way to deal with the problem.

Mr. KILGORE. The Senator again misunderstands me. I am not talking about the development of the teachers. I am talking about the development of the students. I will admit that money has been wasted in the past, and there will be money wasted in the future, and there is money being wasted in the largest institutions of the country right now, by holding students in line because papa has a lot of money and may make a nice donation to the fund. Bed space is being wasted in that way. But I maintain that if we get down to selectivity we depart from democracy, we depart from the principle on which this Government is founded, we create a scientific oligarchy, and we wreck the whole purpose of the measure.

Mr. SMITH. I am not afraid of the good faith and the devotion of the scientists of this country. I am only asking that the thing be centered through them, and that there not be a Nation-wide scattering of funds just to cover every corner of the country.

Mr. KILGORE. I agree with the Senator with respect to the scientists. I am willing to trust to the good sense and the honesty and integrity of the scientists of this country. But does the Senator confine that expression of confidence to the group in the National Academy of Sciences, to which reference has been made, or does the Senator's expression apply to all other scientific groups? I may say there are hundreds of them, and there are among them very capable and able men. Are we only to pick out one group and say "You are the arbiters of the scientific destiny of all the rest of us"? When the Senator is giving his expression of confidence is he talking about the scientists of the National Academy only, or is he talking about the vast body of other capable scientists who have not been so lucky as to have been selected to that august body?

Mr. SMITH. I am talking about all of them, and they can all be located. There is no problem in connection with that.

Mr. KILGORE. I may say that the Senator is more of an optimist than I am, because I have testimony in my hands that after 3 years of intensive work by the National Roster of Scientists they admit that they did not have listed more than 30 percent of the scientists of the United States. They have been unable to list any more of them. When the Senator says they can all be located, I think the statement is somewhat in conflict with the statement of the eminent college presidents who headed the National Roster for 4 years.

The future development of science in America depends in large measure on the strength of the laboratories of the Nation's universities and research institutions. Therefore, section 5 (c) provides that at least 50 percent of all research funds expended by the Foundation shall be used to support research in nonprofit organizations—25 percent to be distributed on a geographical basis and an additional 25 percent irrespective of location of the organization submitting the research proposals. This should result, not only in furthering the development of science but also in general strengthening of our institutions of higher education. The provision that 25 percent of all research funds—excluding national defense—expended by the Foundation shall be apportioned to each State on the basis of an automatic formula is included in order to assure an equitable geographic distribution. Many of our smaller institutions located in the less populous States and Territories are in serious need of support for their scientific work. Many of them are strategically located to carry on unique and greatly needed types of research, for example, research in tropical diseases in Puerto Rico, meteorological studies in Alaska. I had the pleasure and privilege of going through the University of Alaska, and I know the handicaps under which they work, and the funds they need for the work there. The junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] was with me on that trip.

It would be a serious mistake for all of this financial aid to be concentrated in a few large institutions, since such maldistribution would result in a serious imbalance in the quality of higher education available in various parts of the country.

Some witnesses at the hearings feared that Federal support of science would place restrictions on the traditional freedom of scientific research. Such development would be a disaster both to science and the Nation. Subsection 5 (e) directs the Administrator to take steps to eliminate any restraints on scientific freedom.

Constant complaints were made that scientists in Government bureaus were not permitted to express their views. I may say to the Senator from Connecticut that such complaints were not limited to the Army and Navy. They came from all bureaus. So subsection 5 (e) allows every scientist who uses the foundation's funds to go about his work in any manner he sees fit with the sure knowledge that the foundation will stand behind his right to freedom of expression and research. Furthermore, the investigator is permitted to publish his personal views and conclusions, except on projects restricted in the interests of national security. This subsection will encourage the development of new ideas and scientific methods. It is in keeping with that tradition of freedom which is the very lifeblood of science. It was placed in the bill at the request of leading scientists, both those in the Government and those connected with other public institutions, as well as those in private laboratories.

SECTION 6. SCHOLARSHIPS AND FELLOWSHIPS

The success of any program of scientific research is dependent on the availability of adequate numbers of well-trained personnel. Almost every witness urged the provision for a broad program of scholarships and fellowships.

Section 6 would provide not only for undergraduate scholarships but for graduate and postdoctoral fellowships. Recipients of these awards are to be chosen solely on the basis of aptitude for scholarly pursuits.

It has not seemed wise to include specific provisions governing the procedure for selecting recipients of scholarships and fellowships nor to specify the mechanics by which this program would be administered. Again, to assure an equitable geographic distribution of funds, provision is made to permit the establishment of State quotas.

SECTION 7. REGISTER OF SCIENTIFIC PERSONNEL

The experience of war agencies has demonstrated the importance of placement facilities for scientific personnel. The success and usefulness of the National Roster of Scientific and Specialized Personnel and of the Office of Scientific Personnel suggest that the foundation should maintain an up-to-date register of trained personnel which would be particularly useful—

First. In meeting the personal needs of its own programs.

Second. In placing the scientific personnel trained through the foundation's programs of scholarships and fellowships.

Third. In selecting scientific personnel to meet the Nation's need in time of war or other national emergency.

SECTION 8. USE AND DISSEMINATION OF RESEARCH FINDINGS

Evidence presented at the hearings indicated that the progress of science is largely dependent on the full availability and the prompt dissemination of scientific information. Subsection 8 (a) directs the Administrator to maintain a control file of all federally financed research projects and research findings, to publish all useful materials, and authorizes him to cooperate with libraries, other governmental agencies, and scientific publications in a broad program designed to further the dissemination and use of scientific information.

We regard it essential that any legislation involving the expenditure of public funds shall include assurance that such expenditures be used for the general welfare and not reserved for the benefit of any special group. There has been no uniform policy with respect to the commercial rights to patents arising out of federally supported research. I am convinced that a uniform basic policy must be established in the national interest: Dedication of all fruits of Federal research to the public which has paid for the development. This policy is in accord with the traditions of free exchange of information among scientists and it seems to be the most logical and business-like solution to the problem.

The first sentence of subsection 8 (c) provides that all patent rights now held by the United States Government shall be made available to the public on a nonexclusive, royalty-free basis to the extent that the Government is entitled to do so under the rights held by it. This provision will have an important immediate effect because it will enable the making available to the public of the benefits of many important inventions made under Government contracts and by Government employees during the war.

For example, under contracts of the Office of Scientific Research and Development, the Government has received title to many patents in the field of microwave radar, rocket propellants, proximity-fuze developments, devices that were important in antisubmarine warfare, and in other important fields. Except for any such inventions that remain classified for security reasons and are, therefore, exempted under section 8 (f) from the requirement of public dedication so long as that classification remains, all such wartime inventions owned by the Government can now be made available for use by the general public. It must be remembered that such inventions may remain classified.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. When the Senator was engaged in a colloquy with the able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HART] he referred to subsection (e) on page 13, relative to elimination of restraints upon free expression of scientific views. I understood the Senator to say that there was a provision in the bill for national security.

Mr. KILGORE. There is.

Mr. FERGUSON. What section is that, so that the RECORD may be clear?

Mr. KILGORE. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that we discussed that question previously. It is subsection (f) of section 8, on page 19.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the Senator feel that that is sufficient protection?

Mr. KILGORE. Unquestionably. We have discussed that question. Subsection (f) of section 8, on page 19, reads as follows:

(f) Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, the President, or any person designated for that purpose by him, may exempt from the requirements of this act relating to dedication to the pubic, publication, dissemination, making available, or reporting information, data, patents, inventions, or discoveries relating to or produced in the course of federally financed research or development or in which the United States holds any rights, if and so long as the President or such designated person determines that such exemption is essential in the interest of national security.

Mr. FERGUSON. Would it not be well, in subsection (e) of section 5, on page 13, to refer to subsection (f) of section 8, on page 19, so that there might be no question about the national security?

Mr. KILGORE. I feel that the words "notwithstanding the other provisions of this act" superimpose that subsection over subsection (b) of section 5, on page 13, but I am perfectly willing to accept an amendment in some such language as "except as provided in subsection (f) of section 8."

Mr. FERGUSON. That is what I have in mind, so that there may be no question about it.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not think there is any question about it; but, in order to avoid any question, I am perfectly willing to agree to an amendment to that effect. This provision was inserted at the request of the scientists themselves who wanted—except for national defense—the ability to discuss their findings among themselves. They said that they had been handicapped in expressing their opinions.

Mr. FERGUSON. I agree wholeheartedly, but I think there is one exception, and that is national defense.

Mr. KILGORE. I agree with the Senator. The scientists also accepted that limitation. They said, "We do not want to discuss national defense; but with regard to everything else, we believe that we ought to have the right to discuss it publicly or privately."

In addition, all other patents to which the Government has title through the operations of other governmental agencies will be made freely available to the public. Therefore, there will be provided for the first time by statute a policy for the administration of Government-owned patents by all governmental agencies.

Although patents in the field of atomic energy now owned by the Government are covered by the provisions of section 8 (c) and thus would be available to the public, it is assumed that all such inventions will be exempted under section 8 (f) until legislation is enacted covering the field of atomic energy.

The provision of the subsection 8 (c) should not deprive research organizations or private industry of their just property rights in inventions developed in the course of Government contracts. Section 8 (d) attempts to provide for an equitable distribution of patent rights resulting from such cooperative projects and allows for contractual exceptions to the basic policy of public dedication in those cases where an invention is the result of a substantial private investment. This provision will maintain the basic policy of public dedication, while at the same time provide for the utilization of private research facilities, whenever it is in the public interest.

Since the general provisions of this section give preference to nonprofit institutions in the expenditure of research funds, certain additional restrictions have been included with respect to the retention of commercial patent rights by nonprofit institutions. While it is not anticipated that most nonprofit organizations will be interested in the retention of commercial rights to patents resulting from federally supported research, it seems wise to make provisions for such exceptional cases as may arise, thus assuring the Foundation of the possibility of utilizing research facilities which might not otherwise be available. In such cases, the basic policy of full utilization is assured by providing that any commercial patent rights retained by nonprofit institutions shall be made generally available through nonexclusive licenses and at a reasonable royalty.

Although recommending the adoption of the basic policy of full publication and free dedication of findings growing out of research and development supported by Federal funds, it is recognized that occasionally the demands of national security will demand exemption from the general provisions of this section. Therefore, subsection 8 (f) provides that the President, or any person designated by him, may make such exemption if he determines that it is essential in the interest of national security.

SECTION 9. INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

Section 9 authorizes Government agencies to enter into agreements with foreign governments for interchange of information and for cooperation in research projects, with presidential approval and through the Department of State. Wartime experience has shown the value of such collaboration, which was permitted under emergency legislation. This bill would continue that power, subject, of course, to security controls. Section 9 also permits the Foundation to defray expenses of American scientists to international congresses and meetings, a provision strongly urged by witnesses at the hearings who pointed out that American scientific groups were very badly represented at those meetings due to lack of funds.

SECTION 10. INTERDEPARTMENTAL COORDINATION

Approximately 40 Government agencies are at present engaged in scientific and technical activities. The need for coordination of this work in the many fields vital to the public interest has been hitherto met in many ways: By informal personal contacts among scientists, by impromptu meetings and, in some cases, by standing interdepartmental committees. Witnesses agreed that a more thorough coordination of this work is essential to an efficient Government and that the Foundation should assist in the integration of such programs. They emphasized, however, that this coordination must be by voluntary cooperative effort, not by arbitrary direction from one agency.

The discussion of information among the agencies will accomplish the necessary cooperation, because no agency wishes to work upon something which another agency has already accomplished.

Section 10 also provides for an Interdepartmental Committee on Science which, we believe, is a distinct improvement over the present ad hoc arrangements without hindering the independence or initiative of the various Federal research organizations.

SECTION 11. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Among the further provisions of the National Science Foundation bill is authorization for a 4-year carry-over of research funds to permit long range planning of projects. This provision would apply to all Federal agencies and is badly needed for many types of scientific work. The bill would also permit contracts without competitive bids and other restrictions, necessary for most public contracts but impossible to apply to scientific research.

The bill would also transfer to the foundation, the remaining functions of the Office of Scientific Research and Development and of the National Roster of Scientific and Specialized Personnel. This was done at the request of the heads of those two organizations.

Before concluding, I wish to place in the RECORD, as a part of my statement, a partial list of witnesses who appeared before the committee.

Among them were scientists such as Dr. Irving Langmuir, Dr. Harlow Shapley, Dr. Vannevar Bush, Dr. J. R. Oppenheimer, Dr. A. N. Richards, Dr. K. T. Compton, Dr. Harold C. Urey, Dr. Wesley Mitchell, and Dr. Lewis H. Weed. I mention these names in response to the questions which have been asked with respect to whether certain men participated. I submit for the RECORD a list of the names of the prominent scientists who participated, and the list gives their titles, as well. For the benefit of some Senators who have been asking questions, I should like to read a few of the other names on the list. We also had there Dr. C. F. Kettering, Dr. H. J. Curtis, Dr. Robert Wilson, Dr. Robert P. Fischelis, Dr. Morris Fishbein, Dr. Henry B. Richardson, Dr. John M. Gauss, and Col. Bradley Dewey.

There are many other names on the list, and I now submit it for the RECORD, and ask unanimous consent that it be printed at this point, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Prominent scientists: Dr. Irving Langmuir, associate director of the laboratory, General Electric Co.; Dr. Harlow Shapley, director, Harvard University Observatory; Dr. Vannevar Bush, director, Office of Scientific Research and Development; Dr. J. R. Oppenheimer, former director, New Mexico laboraties, Manhattan project; professor of physics, University of California; Dr. A. N. Richards, chairman, Committee on Medical Research, Office of Scientific Research and Development; Dr. K. T. Compton, president, Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Dr. Harold C. Urey, Nobel prize winner, professor of physics, University of Chicago; Dr. Wesley Mitchell, Social Science Research Council; Dr. Lewis H. Weed, chairman, Division of Medical Sciences, National Research Council.

Leaders of scientific organizations: Dr. C. F. Kettering, president, American Association for the Advancement of Science; Dr. H. J. Curtis, Association of Oak Ridge Scientists; Dr. Robert Wilson, Association of Los Alamos Scientists; Dr. Robert P. Fischelis, secretary, American Pharmaceutical Association; Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association; Dr. Henry B. Richardson, Physician's Forum; Dr. John M. Gaus, president, American Political Science Association; Col. Bradley Dewey, president, American Chemical Society.

Leaders of national organizations: Lewis S. Hines, American Federation of Labor; Russell Smith, National Farmers Union; R. K. Lamb, Congress of Industrial Organizations; Morris Cooke, Independent Citizens' Committee of the Arts, Science, and Professions; Dr. Kirtley Mather, American Association of Scientific Workers.

Educational leaders: Dr. Isaiah Bowman, president, Johns Hopkins University; Rev. J. C. O'Donnell, president, University of Notre Dame; Dr. Edmund E. Day, president, Cornell University; Dr. Leonard Carmichael, president, Tufts College; Dr. Henry A. Moe, secretary-general, Guggenheim Foundation; Dr. James B. Conant, president, Harvard University; president, American Association for the Advancement of Science; Dr. George F. Zook, president, American Council on Education; Dr. Ralph McDonald, executive secretary, National Education Association.

Industrial leaders: Bruce K. Brown, vice president in charge of development, Standard Oil Co.; Edwin H. Land, president, Polaroid Corp.; R. E. Gillmor, president, Sperry Gyroscope Co.

Government officials: Dr. J. C. Hunsaker, chairman, National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics; Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Commerce; Robert P. Patterson, Secretary of War; James V. Forrestal, Secretary of the Navy; Harold L. Ickes, former Secretary of the Interior; Howland H. Sargeant, Chief, Division of Patent Administration, Alien Property Custodian; Casper W. Ooms, Commissioner, United States Patent Office.

Other prominent citizens: Watson Davis, director, Science Service; Bernard M. Baruch.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, I also have received letters or petitions from the American Society of Biological Chemists; the Austin Community Forum, of Oak Park, Ill.; the West Virginia Chapter of Sigma Xi Scientific Fraternity; the Still Memorial Research Trust, of Kirksville, Mo.; the University of Texas Chapter of Sigma Xi Scientific Fraternity; the Connecticut Chapter of the Sigma Xi Scientific Fraternity, at the University of Connecticut; the members of the graduate school and the faculty of the Department of Biology of Harvard University; the Society for Expermental Biology and Medicine; the American Council on Education; the Buffalo Section of the American Society of Civil Engineers; the Central Ohio Section of the American Society of Civil Engineers; the Mid-Missouri Section of the American Society of Civil Engineers; the faculty of Albion College; Dr. Karl Compton, president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology; the South Carolina Academy of Science; the National Research Council of the Young Men's Christian Associations; the Union of the American Biological Societies; and the members of the faculty of the College of Letters and Sciences, University of California. I submit the petitions and letters, and ask to have them printed at this point in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the petitions and letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN SOCIETY OF BIOLOGICAL CHEMISTS, INC.,
Albany, Calif., June 12, 1946.

Mr. HARLEY M. KILGORE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: I understand that Senate bill 1850, creating a National Science Foundation, is presently on the calendar of the Senate.

I am instructed by the Council of the American Society of Biological Chemists to advise you that the Society wishes to record itself in favor of the bill.

The Council of the American Society of Biological Chemists is impressed with the importance of Federal support for research and education in science, particularly at this critical time in our history. The Council believes that bill S. 1850 provides a satisfactory way to accomplish this.

I therefore take the liberty in the name of the American Society of Biological Chemists to ask your support for this measure.

Sincerely,

ARNOLD KENT BALLS,
Secretary.

P. S.—I am sending similar letter to Senators THOMAS, DOWNEY, KNOWLAND, and a copy of this letter to Dr. Detlev W. Bronk, University of Pennsylvania.

OAK PARK, ILL., April 21, 1946.

Senator HARLEY M. KILGORE,
Washington, D. C.:

Austin Community Forum well attended meeting at Third Unitarian Church heard Dr. David P. Boder, of Illinois Institute of Technology, tell of great value and importance of Magnuson-Kilgore bill and voted unanimously to wire you, urging committee recommend its passage, including provision for social sciences.

Rev. EDWIN T. BUEHRER.

MORGANTOWN, W. VA., May 1, 1946.

Hon. HARLEY M. KILGORE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

West Virginia Chapter Sigma Xi, representing more than 100 research scientists, urges prompt consideration of Kilgore-Magnuson bill, S. 1850, and its passage without essential change or crippling amendments. The State of West Virginia, its people, industries and institutions, particularly West Virginia University, will gain greatly needed support of research and scholarship through the provisions of this nonpartisan bill. We feel, as do American scientists in overwhelming majority, that Federal support must be given to scientific research to retain our present position in comparison with England and Russia, where science received generous state support, and to make the epochal progress to be anticipated under Federal support.

T. L. CARTLEDGE,
Secretary, WVU, Morgantown.

THE STILL MEMORIAL RESEARCH TRUST,
Kirksville, Mo., March 19, 1946.

Senator H. M. KILGORE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: Thank you for sending me the report of the science legislation from the subcommittee on war mobilization. You and the others who are interested in the National Science Foundation are doing a splendid job.

A few days ago I attended the meeting of the Federation of Biological Sciences at Atlantic City. You will probably be interested to know that the people with whom I talked, without exception, spoke highly of the cooperative attitude that you and your subcommittee have shown while this proposed legislation has been under discussion.

At the same time there was much concern over the legislation which affects the control of atomic energy. Without exception the people with whom I talked (and throughout the group discussions that were held) expressed very deep convictions that the control of atomic energy research must be in the hands of civilians and not in the hands of the armed forces.

Thank you again for sending me the report, and I hope you will keep me on the mailing list for future material of this kind.

Sincerely yours,

J. S. DENSLOW.

THE UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS,
DEPARTMENT OF CHEMISTRY,
Austin, April 8, 1946.

The Honorable HARLEY M. KILGORE,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Last December the Texas Chapter of the Society of Sigma Xi instructed me to submit to you a resolution pertaining to the chapter's desires for legislation on Federal aid for the support of research.

The society now wishes to go on record as favoring Senate bill No. 1850 as a close approach to what it had in mind as to adequate legislation on this subject.

Sincerely yours,

LEWIS F. HATCH,
Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT,
Storrs, Conn., May 3, 1946.

Senator HARLEY M. KILGORE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: The following resolution regarding legislation on a National Science Foundation for the promotion and support of scientific research and education was passed, and is herewith submitted, by the Connecticut Chapter of the Society of the Sigma Xi:

1. We strongly endorse the principle of the establishment of a National Science Foundation for the promotion and support of scientific research and scientific education.

2. We feel that a National Science Foundation will serve to stimulate research and science education as well as to increase the dissemination of scientific knowledge.

3. We believe that the Kilgore and Magnuson bill, without essential change or crippling amendment, sets up a workable and desirable organization for the direction of the activities of a National Science Foundation.

Therefore it is resolved that this group wishes to urge our Government to take all steps necessary for full passage of this bill.

We urge you, personally, to do all in your power to attain these ends.

Respectfully yours,

HAROLD M. SCOTT,
President, the Connecticut Chapter of the Society of the Sigma Xi.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY,
THE BIOLOGICAL LABORATORIES,
Cambridge, Mass., May 18, 1946.

Hon. Senator HARLEY M. KILGORE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The enclosed statement is signed by members of the graduate school and of the faculty of the Department of Biology of Harvard University.

As scientists who will probably be directly affected by your bill to create a National Science Foundation, we wish to express our sincere appreciation of your efforts to aid scientific endeavors.

We feel the attempt to make the encouragement of the scientific spirit a part of Government interests should be wholeheartedly supported, since the accomplishments of scientists are ultimately of such wide social import.

We have also sent to the committee concerned a signed statement indicating approval of S. 1717, the atomic energy control bill and of the Acheson-Lilienthal report.

We respectfully solicit your support of these documents.

Yours truly,

DEXTER M. EASTON,
Teaching Fellow in Biology
(For the Graduate Committee).

In order that the benefits of scientific investigation may be enabled more effectively to promote the welfare of the people of the United States and of the world, and

In order that the efforts of scientists may be integrated more effectively and aided to advance the progress of science.

We do urgently ask that you devote your most earnest efforts to securing passage, before the end of the present congressional session, of S. 1850, the Kilgore-Magnuson bill to create a National Research Foundation.

COLLEGE OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK, SOCIETY FOR EXPERIMENTAL BIOLOGY AND MEDICINE,
New York City, May 22, 1946.

Senator HARLEY M. KILGORE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Society for Experimental Biology and Medicine is a national organization dedicated to the furtherance of the highest standards in experimental medicine and biology. Its proceedings, published monthly, is read by leading scientists in all lands. Its membership, over 2,000, includes all the leading investigators in medicine, pathology, physiology, biochemistry, etc. It has 14 branches in the chief medical centers of the country.

Its executive body or council includes the chairman of each section and other elected officers. This council, by almost unanimous vote, earnestly requests that in the best interests of medical and biological, as well as other sciences, and in the best interests of our country, you use your best efforts to help in the adoption of the compromise bill known as Magnuson-Gilgore bill S. 1850.

On behalf of the council, listed below, and authorized by them,

Respectfully yours,

A. J. GOLDFORB,
General Secretary.

A. Baird Hastings, president, professor biochemistry, Harvard University; E. M. K. Geiling, vice president, pharmacologist, University of Chicago; A. J. Goldforb, general secretary, biologist, College of the City of New York; A. J. Carlson, physiologist emeritus, University of Chicago; G. R. Cowgill, physiologist, Yale University; E. A. Doisy, biochemist, St. Louis University; C. A. Dragstedt, physiologist, Northwestern University; L. P. Gebhardt, bacteriologist, University of Utah; R. G. Green, bacteriologist, University of Minnesota; I. Greenwald, biochemist, New York University; P. J. Hanzlik, pharmacologist, Stanford University; L. R. Jones, bacteriologist, St. Louis University; C. D. Leake, pharmacologist, University of Texas; R. D. Manwell, zoology, Syracuse University; R. F. Parker, medicine, Western Reserve University; H. P. Rusch, cancer research, University of Wisconsin; H. Stevens, agricultural chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture; A. van Harreveld, biological science, California Institute of Technology; E. D. Warner, pathologist, State University of Iowa; C. J. Wiggers, physiologist, Western Reserve University; W. F. Windle, medicine, Northwestern University.

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION,
Washington, D. C., April 23, 1946.

Hon. HARLEY H. KILGORE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: The Committee on the Relationships of Higher Education to the Federal Government has followed with deep interest the legislation to provide a national research foundation. The committee was gratified when the compromise legislation, S. 1850, was reported out favorably by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. It was our earnest hope that this bill would be acted upon promptly by the Senate.

It is a matter of keen disappointment that the Senate passed over S. 1850 when it was called up on the calendar Friday, April 12. The bill has far-reaching implications for all education and especially for research and scholarships in institutions of higher education. It is in our judgment an extremely important piece of legislation in the national interest and one which has the almost unanimous support of education.

May we, therefore, urge that every effort be made by you to get the bill back on the calendar at an early date and that you support the legislation. Time is an important factor since the bill must yet be introduced into the House and acted upon by this body also before adjournment.

The American Council on Education is, as you know, a nonprofit organization; its membership is composed of 115 national educational associations and some 800 college and universities. It is because of this large and representative membership that the council is deeply interested in the passage of S. 1850. If you care to discuss the bill with a representative of the council, we shall be most happy to do so.

Sincerely yours,

George F. Zook, President; Harry W. Chase, Chairman, Chancelor, New York University; James B. Conant, President, Harvard University; Carter Davidson, President, Union College; Edward V. Stanford, Rector, Augustinian College; Raymond Walters, President, University of Cincinnati; Herman B. Wells, President, Indiana University; Roscoe L. West, President, State Teachers College, Trenton, N. J.; Francis J. Brown, Secretary, American Council on Education.

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CIVIL ENGINEERS,
BUFFALO SECTION,
Buffalo, N. Y., April 23, 1946.

The Honorable HARLEY KILGORE,
United States Senate, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: As you know, there is before the Congress of the United States proposed legislation to establish a national science foundation. The engineers joint council, composed of representatives of the American Society of Civil Engineers, Engineers, American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, American Society of Mechanical Engineers, American Institute of Electrical Engineers, American institution of Chemical Engineers, took the following action at a meeting held on March 7, 1946:

"Voted, that copies of Dr. Bakhmeteff's letter to council dated March 4, 1946, respecting legislative bill S. 1850, be forwarded to constituent societies with the recommendation that they forward copies to their respective local sections recommending support of legislative bill S. 1850."

At a meeting held April 1, 1946, the board of directors of the Buffalo section of the American Society of Civil Engineers recorded their support of this legislation and authorized the secretary of the section so to inform you.

By order of the board of directors,

Very truly yours,

A. STUART COLLINS,
Secretary.

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CIVIL ENGINEERS,
CENTRAL OHIO SECTION,
Columbus, Ohio, April 27, 1946.

The Honorable HARLEY KILGORE,
United States Senate, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: You will be interested to know that the central Ohio section, American Society of Civil Engineers, in formal action has indicated a favorable attitude toward legislative bill S. 1850, which provides for a national science foundation.

Respectfully yours,

CLARENCE D. BOWSER,
Secretary-Treasurer.

MID-MISSOURI SECTION,
AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CIVIL ENGINEERS,
Jefferson City, Mo., May 24, 1946.

Hon. HARLEY KILGORE,
United States Senate,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: The Mid-Missouri Section of the American Society of Civil Engineers, gave its endorsement at its meeting of May 3, 1946, for legislation to establish a National Science Foundation as covered by Senate bill 1850.

It further ordered that the secretary notify you to this effect and also express its appreciation of your efforts on behalf of this bill.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM J. SCHULTEN,
Secretary.

ALBION COLLEGE,
Albion, Mich., May 29, 1946.

Senator H. M. KILGORE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: At a recent meeting the faculty of Albion College voted to go on record as approving the passage of Senate bill 1850. I was instructed, as secretary, to notify you of our feeling in this matter.

Sincerely yours,

DOROTHY ENGLE,
Secretary of the Faculty.

MASSACHUSETTS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY,
March 7, 1946.

Senator H. M. KILGORE,
Subcommittee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: It seems to me that the new bill, S. 1850, offers the possibility of getting together on a workable scheme which should enlist sufficiently general support to permit the program for a National Science Foundation to go ahead. I should like to express my appreciation of the manner in which you and your colleagues have worked to perfect the legislation, and to try to find mutually acceptable compromises on points where your ideas and those of Senator MAGNUSON and Dr. Bush have diverged.

As you know, I should personally prefer still to see a few changes made, but my guess is that S. 1850 represents about the best approximation which can be made to a plan which would receive rather general support by both the scientists and the public administrators. I hope therefore that there may be sufficiently general backing to put this through.

Very cordially yours,

KARL COMPTON,
President.

MEDICAL COLLEGE OF THE
STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
Charleston, S. C., May 22, 1946.

The Honorable HARLEY M. KILGORE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: The South Carolina Academy of Science, comprising a membership of 300, at its first postwar meeting held in Charleston, S. C., April 27, 1946, voted unanimously as being in favor of Federal support of scientific research and development in the United States and Territories. It was felt that this step is necessary because of dwindling resources of endowed foundations, in order to keep scientifically abreast of other nations, to meet the needs of the national welfare and to provide proper scientific training for young students of ability irrespective of need. Of the various bills presented in the national legislative houses, our academy favors the majority of ideas embodied in S. 1850 (Kilgore-Magnuson bill), especially the following features: the creation of a National Science Foundation, a Board of nine members selected from the field of science, the equal division among the States of certain shares of funds which may be appropriated to the Foundation, the provisions for scholarships and fellowships for qualified students and the widest latitude in permitting unhampered research.

In case of subsequent modification from its present form it is further believed by us that due consideration should be given to any changes which may restrict traditional free and individualistic scientific investigation and development.

With sincere and high personal regards, we are,

Very truly yours,

A. M. LASSEK, Ph. D., M. D.,
Committee Chairman.
MARTIN D. YOUNG, Sc. D.
B. R. WHALEY.

UNION OF AMERICAN
BIOLOGICAL SOCIETIES,
New York, N. Y., May 13, 1946.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the Union of the American Biological Societies which comprises 38 national biological organizations with a total membership of over 25,000 individuals throughout the country, we are asking your support of the Senate bill 1850 creating a National Science Foundation.

The bill is nonpartisan. Its formulation has been through the active cooperation of numerous outstanding scientists and scientific groups in various parts of the country. Speaking more particularly for the biologists and biology teachers which include the botanical, zoological, physiological, biochemical, medical, and agronomical scientists, we all of us heartily endorse S. 1850.

We would greatly appreciate your assurance that all that is possible will be done to have the bill passed.

Very sincerely yours,

ROBERT CHAMBERS,
President, 1946; Professor of Biology,
New York University.
JOHN S. KARLING,
Secretary, 1946; Professor of Botany,
Columbia University.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF
THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
New York, N. Y., December 10, 1945.

Senator HARLEY M. KILGORE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KILGORE: The National Research Council of the Young Men's Christian Associations which was in session on November 30 and December 1, instructed me as its chairman, to express to you its hope that the social sciences would be included within the provisions that may be recommended by your committee for the establishment of a national research foundation—included both in relation to the training of research workers and to the promotion of research.

The Young Men's Christian Association and similar agencies devoted to improving the health, the vocational effectiveness, and the moral stamina of the people, together with their general competence as citizens of the Republic, depend largely upon the social sciences for the increase of their usefulness as organizations. These agencies, we believe, contribute largely to the national well-being, the security, and the defense of the Nation. Therefore, the increase of their effectiveness would seem to be a legitimate concern of the Government.

Moreover, the strength of the Nation seems to us to be dependent upon the wholesomeness of human relations among our own people and institutions quite as much as upon any other factors. These relationships are the subjects of scientific investigation beyond the fields of medical research or the natural sciences, as commonly classified. As increasing importance in the organization of the United Nations is being attributed to the Economic and Social Council, so it would seem to us that increasing emphasis in our own country should be placed upon the sciences that contribute directly to the social and economic welfare of our own people.

The Research Council of the Young Men's Christian Association, therefore, respectfully urges the inclusion of the social sciences within the scope of the National Research Foundation. This might be accomplished, it seems to us, either by setting up a section of the foundation to serve the social sciences, or by including the social sciences along with other sciences in such general fields of research as national security, health, and general welfare.

A similar letter is being sent to Senator WARREN G. MAGNUSON.

Respectfully,

S. WIRT WILEY,
Chairman, Research Council.

PETITION CONCERNING NATIONAL SCIENCE LEGISLATION BY MEMBERS OF THE FACULTY OF THE COLLEGE OF LETTERS AND SCIENCE, UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, LOS ANGELES

We, the undersigned members of the Department of Geography of the University of California, Los Angeles, having reviewed the provisions and background of legislation now pending in Congress for the establishment of a National Science Foundation, respectfully petition the Senators and the Members of the House of Representatives to lend all possible aid toward enactment at the present session of Congress of the provisions embodied in S. 1850, and of suitable appropriations therefor.

1. Cogent reasons for the enactment of legislation providing liberal Federal support for research in the natural sciences have been well summarized in the report on science legislation from the Subcommittee on War Mobilization to the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, February 27, 1946. As professional students in fields especially concerned with the welfare of the individual and of society, we urge the importance of liberal support of scientific research on the grounds there stated.

2. With regard to the provisions of S. 1850 for support of research in the social sciences, we submit that more extensive and confident commitments might well be made. We view those provisions, however, as adequate to facilitate much-needed planning and important steps toward initiating a broadened program of research in areas of social science that urgently need Federal support to contribute to national prosperity and to good international relations. We therefore urge enactment of the provisions of S. 1850 with respect to social sciences without attempt at any modification which might jeopardize action during the present session of Congress.

In support of this position, we call attention to the statement regarding the importance of social science research submitted by the Social Science Research Council at the Senate hearings on science legislation, October 29, 1945, and to the statements on research in particular areas of social science submitted at those hearings by John M.

Gaus, Robert M. Yerkes, E. G. Nourse, William F. Ogburn, and John M. Cooper.

Social scientists and the results of their research, were of great aid in many branches of Government service during the war. General John Magruder, testifying at committee hearings on this legislation, said regarding social scientists: "Their role is vital, both in the strategy of war and in the strategy of peace, and the War Department takes the view that their encouragement is worthy of sponsorship." (Hearings, p. 899.)

The diversity of the service of social scientists and their dispersal among many agencies, however, militated against formulation during the war and in the early postwar months of a unified program for postwar research in the social sciences. Preoccupation of many social scientists with pressing postwar economic and social problems threatens further to delay the formulation of a needed broad program for research in the social sciences. Aid which enactment of the social science provisions of S. 1850 could give to such broad planning would be of the greatest value to the Nation.

3. In thus urging enactment of the provisions of S. 1850, including those applying to social-science research, we do so in the opinion that Members of the Senate who have cooperated in developing proposals for science legislation to the stage represented by the bill, have considered and weighed numerous and sometimes conflicting views with such care and discrimination that efforts to improve further the legislative proposal before enactment are no longer warranted.

4. The undersigned members of the faculties of the indicated departments of social science of the University of California, Los Angeles, subscribe individually and personally to the foregoing statements.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, in conclusion let me again urge the need for speedy action on this measure. Not only do we believe that speedy action on it is necessary, but we firmly believe that Federal support is necessary for the full development and application of the Nation's scientific resources. I do not believe that even the opponents of the bill will dispute that. As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I am naturally concerned over our measures for national defense. Today, our ability to defend our Nation depends on our progress in science and technology, not only in purely military fields but in all fields affected by modern total war.

As an American citizen and as a Member of the Senate, however, I am concerned about the scientific development of our Nation for the benefit of the people who live in it, because I consider that a national defense asset. Particularly we need a strong program for progress in the fundamental sciences which are basic to our industrial and technical development. We must assure opportunities for the education of our promising young scientists and we must assure that they will have the opportunity to turn their talents to useful work.

Mr. President, the National Science Foundation would naturally cover certain fields of applied science, but the principal thing in my opinion and the principal asset and resource which can be developed is the training of scientists and giving them an opportunity to engage in research.

One thing which would be done under this bill, and which has never been done before, is to make an attempt to explore certain unexplored territory, to analyze the explored territory, to map the explored territory, to decide what is unexplored territory, and to develop a centralized effort in respect to making researches in such unexplored territory.

For that reason I think all must admit that the bill is needed. I believe it is urgently needed, and I believe its speedy passage is essential to the safety of our Nation at the present time.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KILGORE. Gladly.

Mr. HART. I gathered from something the distinguished Senator said a little while ago, during the debate with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], that of the two divisions for scholarship and for fellowship, he believes that the one for fellowship is the more important. Is my understanding correct?

Mr. KILGORE. No. The Senator from New Jersey said he believed that provision for scholarships should be obliterated, and that provision should be made only for fellowships. I said that I felt that both were important. So I say it would be hard to determine which is the more important. There are many good scientific minds in this country among our youth that should have an opportunity to be developed. But the youngster who can get $5,000 or $6,000 to go ahead with a basic scientific education probably will not need a fellowship when his education is completed.

Mr. HART. I understood the Senator from West Virginia to say that this is not so much a matter of straight education in classrooms, and so forth, as it is a matter of actual participation in research, which, to me, from my experience in education—which was very brief—would indicate that the Senator was thinking of fellowships, rather than of scholarships.

Mr. KILGORE. The Senator from Connecticut utterly misunderstood what I said. I said we cannot develop good scientists without research. We cannot teach science by textbooks alone, and research facilities are necessary in developing the undergraduate scientists. I further said that no man can teach scientists properly at a collegiate standard unless he is a good research man.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. HART. No doubt the Senator from West Virginia is cognizant of the excellent address which was made last week by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] concerning consideration of Senate bill 1248, known as the Fulbright bill, more or less in conjunction with the bill now under discussion, Senate bill 1850. During that discussion it was stated that the two bills cover entirely different fields. The Senator from New York pointed out that Senate bill 1248 was very largely a matter of application.

If that be the case, will the Senator from West Virginia give his reasons for including the Division of Engineering and Technology as one of the eight divisions to be set up under Senate bill 1850.

Mr. KILGORE. I did not quite understand all the Senator said. I am sorry that I did not hear all of it.

Mr. HART. My question is this: Why does the Senator from West Virginia desire to set up a Division of Engineering and Technology, inasmuch as that field seems to be covered by the other bill which is on the Senate Calendar, Senate bill 1248?

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, no; it is not fully covered. We discussed that matter very fully. Although Senate bill 1248 goes into that subject, we have to have a Division of Engineering and Technology set up in connection with the pending bill, in order to keep the Foundation properly balanced. As I said before, the bill is an augmentation bill, and it establishes a revolving fund. If Senate bill 1248 would completely take care of our engineering needs, of course there would be no need for such a Division of Engineering and Technology as a part of the Foundation to be set up by the pending bill. But I assure the Senator from Connecticut, as he must realize, because he is an engineer, that the engineering, exploratory fields of science are almost limitless.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KILGORE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. As one of the sponsors of the bill, I am very much in sympathy with its objectives and its purposes, and I am supporting it fully. However, there is one question which occurs to me and if I understand one of the provisions correctly, I am not in full accord with it. I refer to a provision on page 3, with respect to the eight divisions which are to be set up, and among them I notice there is to be a Division of Social Sciences. What is the conception of the Senator from West Virginia of the work which will be done by a Division of Social Sciences, and why should such a science be brought into a program of the kind covered by this bill? Why is it necessary?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Colorado that I hope he will hold up his question until a little later in the debate, when I am informed the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] will be present. He is an eminent authority on the subject and his advice was given great importance by the committee. I believe he can more fully explain the matter.

But let me say to the Senator very frankly that, in my opinion, the social sciences involve many problems which have to be solved by the natural sciences, and in turn the natural sciences involve many developments of the social sciences. So it is important to get the two groups together under one umbrella, so to speak. In addition, as was well pointed out by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] in the committee, it is impossible to draw a distinguishing line between the social sciences and the natural sciences. There are a few subjects included in the social sciences which are not included in the natural sciences. However, there are many subjects included in the natural sciences which are included also in the social sciences. It must be remembered that we incorporated a statement in the bill on that subject. We make provision for setting up a division which is directed to make a study and promulgate a program. The purpose is to ascertain how the program will fit into the general picture. But we felt it to be only fair to give those sciences which have such close relationships a broad consideration under the bill. For example, anthropology in a social science, but we must admit also that it is a natural science as well. Mathematics and various statistics must also be considered. Why not give the scientists an opportunity to bring all those matters in and have the questions relating to them fully answered?

Mr. President, with reference to that subject I should prefer to have the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] go more fully into it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I would be very glad to hear the arguments of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] on the need for a division of social sciences. But it does not occur to me that we should cover all the extraneous sciences outside of natural sciences. I am heartily in accord with a bill to establish a foundation for natural sciences. But when we get into political sciences, social sciences, religious sciences, and so forth, it does not seem to me that the umbrella, to which the Senator has referred, could be large enough to cover such matters.

Mr. KILGORE. The Senator noticed, did he not, that we did not go into the question of religion or politics? In many ways social sciences are so indissolubly linked with the natural sciences, that we want them to come in under their own subhead in order to achieve results. We say to the social scientists, "You must first submit to a group of scientists a program showing good reason for obtaining money to further your progress." No one would suggest that we depart from a study of anthropology. No one would suggest that we depart from statistics. Yet they are both a part of social sciences. Sometimes we find even sanitary engineering a part of the social sciences. Those various fields become so indissolubly linked that it is hard to separate them.

Mr. President, I now yield the floor.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, before I proceed to a discussion of the bill I wish to make a statement with reference to the question which the Senator from Colorado asked. It was a very pertinent question, and I think it should be fully considered.

In case the distinguished Senator from Utah does not return soon to the Chamber, I think the RECORD should show, in all fairness, that the division of social sciences was added to both bills subsequent to the time of the hearings. It was added for some of the reasons stated by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], and for other reasons as well.

During the course of the testimony of many eminent witnesses, it was found that scientific problems overlapped on some occasions into the realm of social sciences. The social scientists themselves testified that they had no intention of embarking upon a vast program into the realm of social sciences, but they did feel that there would be many cases in which the Foundation would probably agree to go into a program which involved the natural and social sciences, even when they overlapped.

In order to safeguard the situation, we incorporated the following language:

> The functions of each division shall be prescribed by the Administrator after receiving the advice of the Board, except that until the Administrator and the Board have received general recommendations from the Division of Social Sciences regarding the support of research through that Division, support of social science research shall be limited to studies of the impact of scientific discovery on the general welfare and studies required in connection with other projects supported by the Foundation.

In other words, for the next few months, or possibly for the next few years, the Division of Social Sciences will merely be in position to submit certain studies to the Board. The Board may decide that there may be some necessity for research being conducted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator for the information.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, before leaving that point, I wish to say that there may be some misconception with regard to a study of social sciences being confused with what we commonly think of as politics, socialism, or some form of social philosophy. It certainly was not in the minds of the authors of the bill to promote any particular social philosophy of that kind. But a study of certain human relationships and certain scientific bases would have nothing to do with socialism, or any subjects of that kind. A subject such as psychological warfare, which was of extreme importance in connection with fighting the war, would be the type of scientific research which would be a part of national defense. It is a subject which could consistently be studied on a scientific basis, and would have nothing to do with communism, socialism, or any matter of that kind. I believe that fact should be kept in mind.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. In preparing a bill for atomic energy control, for example, we encountered that very problem. We did not set up an organization to handle the Division of Social Sciences as applied to nuclear fission. We simply skipped it. We felt that the matter bordered on political and social questions of many kinds. We could see no value in delving into it at this time. It seems to me that unless a very pronounced limitation is placed upon the activities which might be pursued along this line, Congress might be building up something which will not be of advantage to the country, but, instead, of great disadvantage, and will bog down the foundation of natural sciences which we are trying to create through this bill.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that many of us share his views. The atomic energy bill, of course, dealt with one specific subject, while this bill deals with the broad field of science. That particular field could include, for example, the subject of medicine and medical research. Dr. Bowman, as I recall, testified that it might be entirely possible that a university in some section of the country would wish to examine into the living conditions of the population and learn how they live, in order to gather information regarding particular diseases, such as tuberculosis or cancer. Therefore, we thought that by placing this limitation in the bill, the Board could well pass on those questions. We believed that the Board would be sensible about the matter and would not approve any activity in the social science field which was not strictly a part of natural science, or a part of some national problem involved in science itself.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that probably those who are somewhat doubtful about the pending bill are not essentially in opposition to it, but probably are more in need of information as to some of its provisions, possibly I shall be briefer in my statement on the bill than I would have been, in the hope that any Senator who is in doubt will ask questions, and in the hope that I may explain sections of the bill which are not quite clear to Senators. In any event Mr. President, in my opinion, Senate bill 1850 is substantially more in the public interest at the present time than any other measure pending in Congress.

Science has become a full partner with the military. It proved its worth in winning the war. Probably no more important function of our Government existed in the preparation for war and in the winning of the great war just concluded than the Office of Scientific Research and Development, headed by the very able and eminent Dr. Vannevar Bush. He, along with his fellow educators and scientists throughout the country, gathered together in a single body all the great scientific brains at our country's disposal, and developed so many things that to go into detail would take too long, but they range from the atomic bomb clear on down to the proximity fuse, sound devices, and literally hundreds of other devices which did not exist prior to the war, but which not only helped us win the war, but will be of great benefit to our people in peacetime.

In the last 2 or 3 weeks we have passed several bills which appropriated hundreds of millions of dollars for our Military Establishment, both the Army and the Navy, and it was proper and necessary to do that. But side by side with the upkeep of our great military strength, in order to help keep the peace in the world, comes science. In that field, in my opinion, we have been woefully neglectful. The draft in the early days of the war, and up to the end of the war, to some extent, continued to take basic scientific people. I stated on the floor of the Senate a few days ago, when I offered an amendment to exempt those in scientific pursuits and those studying science from the draft in the future, that it could be conceivable that training 2 or 3 men in a laboratory might be worth 10,000 men marching up and down a parade field.

Of course, predictions sometimes go into the realm of the unknown, but surely there is not a man in this country or in this body who will not agree that science has now taken on such an important aspect that we cannot afford to neglect its development, both for military and peacetime uses.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. There cannot be any doubt of that. It is not a matter of speculation that such things as the proximity fuse, for example, were worth many battalions of men. Was it not absolutely essential when it came to the invasion of Europe?

Mr. MAGNUSON. It was absolutely essential. Of course such things contributed in a great degree to the winning of the war

As the Senator from West Virginia has pointed out, the pending bill is the result of many months of hearings and of study. I have in my hand one volume, which contains the testimony of approximately 110 of the most eminent people in the United States, both in the scientific and lay fields. It contains the testimony of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Director of the Budget, the Secretary of Commerce, and many others who have been interested in this matter for some time.

Not only has the subject been gone into in the hearings proper, but my files, and I know the files of the Senator from Arkansas, the Senator from West Virginia, and other members of the committee, are filled with statements and correspondence, speeches and exchanges of views on this whole subject. Although in the beginning there were some mild differences of opinion as to the administrative set-up of the National Science Research Board, and although there were some differences of opinion regarding some sections of the bill because of the vast range of activity the bill covers and because of the complexities involved, that was only natural. Most of us have gotten together and have agreed that Senate bill 1850 is about as good a bill as can be written at this time on this very vital subject. I hope the Senate will act quickly on the measure. It is of vital importance, and every witness, including the eminent people about whom I have spoken, has urged expeditious passage of the bill.

The Office of Scientific Research and Development expired last night. Within their files they had, and still have, some continuing contracts, some of them of a highly secret nature, but all of them with great scientific institutions. This activity should not be allowed to expire and disappear, but should be taken over for the national welfare by some such foundation as would be set up under the bill.

Mr. President, I introduced an original bill for the National Science Foundation, but my original proposal, developed some year and a half ago, confined itself mostly to fellowships and scholarships. I followed that course because an appraisal of our scientific manpower reservoir was appalling at that time and somewhat disturbing, not only to me but to many of the witnesses, including the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War. We are short approximately 17,000 basic scientists in this country. Because of 5 years of war, we took away from many young people the possibility of getting education and training in basic science.

The strange thing brought out by the war, although we probably excelled the world in applied scientific development, was the fact that America lagged behind other countries in the training of basic scientists and in basic scientific principles.

I refer briefly to the committee report, in which it is pointed out:

> First is the fact that practically no basic scientific research was carried on during the war years; scientists were too busy developing practical applications of previously discovered scientific principles to continue their basic research. In the words of one of the witnesses appearing before your subcommittee:
>
> "For the most part, what happened during the war was not in any proper sense scientific work; it was the exploitation of skills, techniques, fundamental knowledge, all of which had been cultivated in the days of peace; an exploitation which has tended to impoverish our stocks rather than to increase them."
>
> Even more disturbing to your subcommittee was its finding that the basic scientific discoveries on which most of the wartime scientific developments were based were made not by American but by European scientists. Again to quote from a distinguished scientist:
> "It should be somewhat humiliating to us to realize that the revolutionary sulfa drugs had their beginning in German research laboratories; that atom splitting was discovered in Berlin; that the basic pioneer work that has led to radio and radar and the enormous American electronic industries was that of a German professor. Penicillin came from England, DDT from Germany and Switzerland."

By that the witness means, of course, the basic scientific principles which led to the development of these things. He proceeded in the testimony to give a list of many things we can initiate here, and the things we used for military purposes during the war. The report proceeds:

> Witness after witness emphasized the relative weakness of American science in fundamental studies, but perhaps none so effectively as one great chemist, a Nobel laureate:
>
> "This contrast between the relative strength of pure science and its industrial applications in Europe and the United States can be illustrated in other ways. We are strong on applications and weak in fundamental science.
> "The point I wish to make is illustrated by the statistics on the number of men who have received Nobel prizes in chemistry, physics, and medicine. These prizes are not the only measure of scientific excellence, as all scientists are aware, but they are a significant index, since they are awarded without regard to nationality."

Here, Mr. President, are the statistics showing the number of Nobel prize winners in the United States as compared to the prize winners in Europe. In chemistry the United States has 4 and Europe 37. In physics, the United States has 8 and Europe has 39. In medicine, the United States has 6; Europe has 37. The committee quotes the conclusion from the Bush report on this matter as follows:

> Our national preeminence in the fields of applied research should not blind us to the truth that with respect to pure research—the discovery of fundamental new knowledge and basic scientific principles—America has accepted a secondary place.

So therefore, Mr. President, a vital part of this bill is section 6, which sets up within the foundation the authority to grant scholarships and fellowships in order to determine and to make certain that our present standing shall not continue in the future to be as I just read from the report of the committee. Section 6, on page 13 of the bill reads:

> SEC. 6. The Administrator is authorized to award scholarships and fellowships to persons for scientific study or scientific work in any field of science, including but not limited to the mathematical, physical, biological, medical, and social sciences at nonprofit institutions of higher education, or other institutions, selected by the recipient of such aid, for such periods as the Administrator may determine, in the United States or in foreign countries. Persons shall be selected for such scholarships and fellowships solely on the basis of aptitude, within the limits of such quotas as may be established to insure an equitable selection of such persons from among the States, the District of Columbia, and the Territories.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. HART. My question refers to the sentence which the Senator has just read. Does that mean that the Administrator is expected to distribute the awards of scholarships and fellowships geographically, or is he expected to survey the United States and pick out the best material wherever it may be found?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I will say to the Senator that it is not expected that the Administrator will survey the Nation geographically at all. What happens is that when a young man or a young woman is selected for a scholarship or a fellowship, he or she has the right to say, for instance, "I should like to go to MIT," or, "I should like to go to Georgia Tech," or, "I should like to go to California Tech," or, "I should like to go to the University of Connecticut." The Administrator and the Board would merely advise. Let us suppose a man wanted to study radar. I suppose MIT, which has done more work than any other school on radar research, might be the logical school. If he selected North Dakota Agricultural College, for example, they might say to him, "Well, we think perhaps you had better go to the school that specializes in this work." It is only permissive with the Board to make the suggestion. The language "such quotas as may be established to insure an equitable selection of such persons" does not relate to the school the individual goes to. It relates to the selection of persons from various States, much as we select them for Annapolis or West Point.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. HART. I do not gather from the language of the bill that anyone has anything to do with the selections except the Administrator himself. Is it intended that one man shall have the full power in this rather important function?

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Administrator actually carries it out, but the matter of policy, in other words, how many shall be selected from the whole United States, would be a matter for the Board to determine. Then the Board would say to the Administrator, "We are now going to pick out 5,000 men and women for scholarships and fellowships in 1 year." They would say to the Administrator, "Distribute them geographically if possible." The selection of these men should be done geographically if possible. In other words, there may not be a scientific school in Kansas, but it might be said, "We want so many young men and women from Kansas." The Administrator merely carries out the policy which will be laid down by the Board; but, in order to have someone assigned to the actual selection, we say the Administrator shall do this.

Mr. HART. I hope that will be the case, I will say to the Senator, but I do not see in the bill——

Mr. MAGNUSON. If the Senator will go back in the bill he will find that all through, in setting up the Board and the Administrator, it is provided that the Administrator shall always confer with the Board on the making of policies.

Mr. HART. Then the policy would simply be, and these are the words of the bill, "within the limits of such quotas as may be established." Would the Senator expect the Administrator to establish the quotas all over the country?

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Board might say, "We have so much money to use this year. We are going to use a certain portion of it for scholarships and fellowships. That will give us so many openings for scholarships and fellowships." That number would be a round number. Then the Administrator would make the selection from within that number, geographically consistent with the States in the Union, and then he would actually give those selected their scholarships and fellowships. The Board would not select them from each State. The Board would have the broad powers of determining how many would be selected from the United States, and how much money would be spent during the year out of the appropriation for that purpose. That is my understanding of the language. That was our intention, anyway, I will say to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HART. Will the Senator yield for another question on the same section, section 6?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. HART. It indicates that after the person to whom the award is to go is chosen, he himself has full latitude in selecting the institution at which he will receive this benefit.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. HART. The Senator mentioned West Point and Annapolis. Of course, there is no choice there. Those chosen go where they are appointed to go, and that is the end of it. Is it intended that the recipient should have full latitude to go where he pleases after he is chosen? If he has a desire to go to an institution to which, clearly, it would be a waste of money to send him, does he still have the right to go there?

Mr. MAGNUSON. He has the right to. I do not think the Board or the Administrator would have the right to tell him to what institution to go. It would be a matter of advice to the young men or the young women to whom they give the scholarships or the fellowships. I did not mean that the Senator should interpret my use of Annapolis and West Point as an answer to his question in this matter. What I meant was that it is hoped the selection of individuals will be somewhat equitably distributed all over the United States, similar to the way individuals are selected to go to the military schools.

Mr. HART. Of course, there is really no parallel, for one thing. The recipient of an appointment to the Naval Academy or the Military Academy obligates himself to a certain number of years of service after he receives his education. With respect to these scholarships and fellowships there is no similar obligation on the part of the recipient. Furthermore, it appears that the recipient has full choice of where he shall go during the time the Government spends money upon his education.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct. He has full choice. But in examining, let us say, John Doe, in California, who is a young man who wants to obtain one of these scholarships—in examining him and in determining his aptitude they would probably, through a series of questions in connection with the application, ask him what school he might prefer to go to, and give him an opportunity to make three selections. He might inadvertently select a school with respect to which the Board and the Administrator could easily say, "We think this fellowship would be a waste of money in that school." But there is no reason why the Board, if he insisted on it, could not say that he could go to any place he wanted to go. We have to provide some latitude in this respect. We have to have some faith in the Board, and believe that the Board would not let a man go to an agricultural school, let us say, to study electronics, or vice versa. I suppose that matter could easily be worked out. But if the young man were given the fellowship and insisted on going to an agricultural school to study electronics, there is no restriction placed upon him in that connection in the bill.

Mr. HART. It is the Administrator who determines, and not the Board; is it not?

Mr. MAGNUSON. No; the Board would determine that, because the Board ultimately receives the fund. Of course the Administrator would have to work the matter out.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I wonder if the Senator can reconcile the provision with respect to aptitude with that calling for the selection of individuals geographically. It is provided that individuals shall be chosen on the basis of aptitude, with due respect to all the States.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let us say that there were to be 5,000 scholarships and fellowships given during the year. It would be the duty of the Administrator, in my judgment, to distribute the scholarships and fellowships throughout the various States and Territories. Suppose the State of Washington were allotted 100 scholarships and 100 persons did not qualify. The Board would have latitude under the bill to distribute the remaining scholarships elsewhere. If only 88 qualified, it could distribute the other 12 somewhere else. We could not lay down a hard and fast rule; but we say in the bill that as a matter of policy these opportunities should be as equally distributed as possible.

Mr. WILLIS. The question that gives me concern is how the determination is to be made on the basis of the two factors, aptitude and geography. Suppose 5,000 were to be chosen, and a small State had only 25 who met the qualifications for aptitude. Would the other States be limited to the same ratio?

Mr. MAGNUSON. No.

Mr. WILLIS. That State, then, would not have its full quota.

Mr. MACNUSON. The Board must have some latitude. I suppose the Board would lay out a blueprint. Of course, aptitude has nothing to do with geography. Geography has to do with the opportunity to qualify. We wish to distribute the opportunity geographically as equitably as possible throughout the United States. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that if the Board wished to do so, it could say that all the students should come from the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. WILLIS. Without regard to the law?

Mr. MAGNUSON. We say in the bill that as a matter of policy the Board should follow a certain procedure. Whatever blueprint the Board may lay down is something for the Board and the Administrator to determine.

Mr. WILLIS. Is it the Senator's thought that if the factor of aptitude were not in the formula of the State, the State quota could be disregarded?

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct; but every State should have an opportunity, in an equitable way, for its sons and daughters to take advantage of these scholarships.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. In the first place, this section provides that the Administrator and not the Board shall be authorized to award fellowships and scholarships

That is a fundamental difference between this bill and the substitute which I am offering. We believe that a board should do it. We do not believe that the Administrator should do it. No administrator can set up machinery to award 5,000 scholarships.

I should like to ask this question of the distinguished Senator: Would he be willing to change this section and limit it to graduate fellowships? The whole question so far as the age of students is concerned, is whether we are to pay, in undergraduate years, for thousands of youngsters who may not have scientific aptitude. I should like to see the channeling through our State institutions of those who have real scientific ability. Those are the ones whom we should subsidize for advanced work. We are trying to promote research in basic science, and I do not think we can do it by having a broad educational program, confusing aptitude with geography. What we are after is research in basic science. This is not an educational bill. This is a measure to promote research in basic science. There is another bill, Senate bill 181, which looks to the question of division of funds for educational purposes. This is not an educational bill. This bill is aimed at research in basic science.

My objection to the bill now before the Senate in its present form is that it spreads too far and confuses the subject. I hope that it can be simplified so as to eliminate many of its complications. I ask the Senator whether he would be willing to limit this section to graduate fellowships. That is what we wish to subsidize. We do not wish to subsidize every boy in the United States who thinks he would like to study science.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I would not be willing to do that, because my purpose in the bill is to subsidize education in basic science. Out of that reservoir, which is so sadly short in this country, surely we will lose some of them who will not go on. Some of them will not go further into basic research, and into fellowships. But the point made by all the witnesses was that we need a great pool of men who have studied basic science, so that we can draw upon them for research. The Board could well confine its program to the education of basic scientists, and spend all the money for fellowships. We make no provision as to the proportion to be spent for fellowships and scholarships. As the program progressed the Board would in all probability make available for fellowships a large percentage of the money, for the simple reason that once our universities get started again, and once overcrowding in the universities has been relieved, there will come from the universities a great many youngsters who have taken basic science. We must leave a certain degree of latitude with the Board. However, the present situation is that we are short approximately 17,000 basic scientists, men who have had college training in science. We need to fill up that reservoir. We do not need to spend money to get those basic scientists. We simply need to have a selection made by draft boards, now that the Selective Service Act has been amended. I am advised that the budding scientists are coming to the colleges all over the country. They cannot get in. There is no room for them. That is a totally different problem. That is the problem of the man in his undergraduate years. We do not need to offer inducements to boys to go into science. They want to go into it. I am not worried about that. But I am worried about screening the boys who go through undergraduate years and show aptitude for advanced work in science. We are looking for researchers. We are not trying to make a broad coverage of everyone who may think he likes science.

The Board will have to gage the situation from year to year. It can spend all the money for basic research and for fellowships. The Senator says that we can accomplish the desired result in part by not taking some of the young men in the draft. I attempted to provide for that the other day.

Mr. SMITH. I joined the Senator in that effort.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Senate adopted an amendment. I do not know what help the Senate conferees gave me, but it was thrown out in conference, and now such boys are being drafted.

Mr. SMITH. I agree with the Senator that scientific men ought to be allowed to continue in scientific work. But I do not feel that it is proper under the terms of this bill to subsidize boys in their undergraduate years. We are spreading ourselves too far with this bill, and attempting to cover too many things. What we wish to do is to encourage research in basic science, by men who have shown an aptitude for it in their undergraduate years. If they are placed with more experienced men, we can get results. We cannot get results by scattering our fire.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Then the Senator disagrees with all the witnesses who testified before the two committees. They agree that the Board should have the authority set forth in the bill. They also state that the time may come when the Board may not wish to spend a nickel of the money available to help a man in his undergraduate days. In any event, those who are to receive the benefits of the provisions of this bill will be those who show some aptitude and some promise in basic research.

Mr. SMITH. Then, to do justice to all the boys in our country—and there will be not merely a few thousand, but hundreds of thousands—we must give them all an opportunity, by some examination, to qualify for this free ride and education in science.

Mr. MAGNUSON. They should all have an opportunity.

Mr. SMITH. It is a strange policy to say that every boy in the United States who wishes to study science is to be subsidized by the Federal Government in his college course.

Mr. MAGNUSON. They will be screened. Only a certain number will be chosen. They will have the same opportunity to obtain scholarships and fellowships under this bill as they would have in obtaining scholarships or fellowships from any other institution engaged in research.

Mr. SMITH. Then the Senator is planning Nation-wide examinations to see who is entitled to scholarships.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I do not know what the Board may do. It would not be necessary to have Nation-wide examinations.

Mr. SMITH. I have had some experience in this field.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Board may not wish to conduct Nation-wide examinations. As it is, we find that we are not getting a sufficient number of basic scientists. We must encourage the development of basic science in some way.

Mr. SMITH. I simply cannot agree with the Senator's conclusions.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Is it not true that a man who plans to be a lawyer is required to have at least 2 years' college work before undertaking the study of law? I think the premedical course is ordinarily 2 years. I have in mind—although it is not spelled out in this bill—that a student must demonstrate some ability and proficiency in his chosen field before he would even have an opportunity to be selected. On the other hand, it is not necessary that he receive a degree after a full 4-year course. I believe that ordinarily, under our present system, a student makes his decision as to what his profession is to be after 2 years in college. That is when he begins to specialize in whatever profession he expects to enter, unless he continues with a strictly liberal arts course.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Does the distinguished Senator and educator feel that we should start to subsidize boys in their undergraduate years?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I believe that after a boy has had 2 years of work he should be able to demonstrate whether or not he has any ability. I think it would be safe to grant a scholarship after 2 years of college work. Most law schools require such preparation.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, law scholarships are on the same basis. I do not believe that the Foundation would go to the high schools to make selections. It might survey the universities, and decide to distribute scholarships among men who have spent 3 years in pre-scientific training in basic science. I do not disagree with the Senator. Our point is that we must do something now to fill up the depleted reservoir. In the future the Board should have latitude in determining how to select these men. I do not conceive that these scholarships will be for a 4-year college course. I think there will be some selection within the colleges, as the Senator from Arkansas suggests, among boys who have had 2 or 3 years of college work. Many colleges now have 5-year courses in science and medicine. The selection might be made just prior to graduation.

I believe that the Board should have considerable latitude. Surely the members of the Board will be men who are skilled not only in science, but in education. They will understand the problem. I feel sure that they will have a keen sense of responsibility about the money of which they have charge and about the scientific needs of the country. I believe that they will make every penny count, and that a man will have to show considerable aptitude in order to obtain one of these scholarships. It may be that as much as 70 percent of the money will be spent for fellowships. We could not lay down a blueprint.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I am sorry to disagree with distinguished Senators who have had experience in education; but my experience has been different from theirs so far as undergraduate study is concerned.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I will say that I have had no experience as an educator. I was merely exposed to an education.

Mr. SMITH. In institutions with which I have been connected we have had much experience with scholarships. Today, most educational institutions provide scholarships for promising young men.

It seems to me that what we need is something to help graduate students who need to make progress in specialized lines of scientific research. That is what I think we need to do at this time.

I do not think the Senator need worry about getting the reservoir filled. I believe it will be filled without regard to whether a subsidy of the sort proposed is actually offered. I think many young men wish to enter this field. The reports which I am receiving indicate that the colleges have not been able to accept all those who now are applying. So I do not believe we need to offer any subsidies. Of course, I agree that we must fill the reservoir. I agree with the Senator on that point. That is why I think we should exempt scientific men from the draft.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The indication is that the reservoir of scientific men now is almost empty, and that some incentive is needed. Of course, the Board will be composed of scientists and educators who understand the situation. I have no doubt that the Board will be composed of eight or nine of the men who testified. They can vary the program. But it was felt that under present circumstances they should have authority to see what they could do with some portion of the funds so as to take care of the need for scholarships and fellowships.

Furthermore, what alarmed most of them was that the war taught us the need to keep America abreast or ahead of the rest of the world scientifically, as a matter of our own defense. One of the witnesses was fresh from Russia, and he said that an examination of what the Russians are doing in this respect shows that they not only take such young men when they are young, but they make special citizens out of them. I have a report here regarding Russia, and I should like to read it for the information of the Senate:

> Reports coming out of Russia indicate, for example, that they are, and have been throughout the war, making a special effort to develop scientific talent. With a strong emphasis on science and technology, over 600,000 persons are slated to graduate from institutions of higher learning between 1940 and 1950. And to further persuade Russians to become scientists, large salaries and many other special inducements are apparently being offered. On April 1, by special decree, the scientific profession in Russia became one of their highest salaried, and what with special rations and the provisions of comfortable living accommodations, scientists in Russia are probably better rewarded than anywhere else in the world. New housing is being earmarked for them, just as it is for generals and high party functionaries. A full professor who is head of a department now makes from 4,000 to 6,000 rubles per month. At the present official rate of exchange, that corresponds to $800 to $1,200 a month in terms of our own currency.

Mr. SMITH. That is very interesting.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is what alarms some of these men.

Mr. SMITH. It may alarm them, but I do not think we should try to copy that kind of approach, by which men are dragooned into that field. I wish to have us develop men who have ability, and then say to them, "You have proved your ability, and here is your scientific job." I think that is the way to proceed.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I agree with the Senator. I do not think we should copy their system. I merely point this out in order to show that if we are to keep abreast of the world in scientific matters, in our American way, our Government will have to give some inducements and will have to establish some such incentive as is proposed by this bill. Otherwise, we are likely to slip back and we are likely to come to a time when not enough of our young men will be interested in science, with the result that perhaps in time of emergency we might find ourselves without a sufficient number of basic scientists.

As is pointed out by other scientists, and as the records show, we have done much better in the field of applied science than we have in the field of pure science.

Mr. SMITH. I think the Senator from Washington and I are agreed as to the objective. I simply do not wish to spread the butter on the bread too thin.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I was very much interested in the Senator's statement of what is proposed to be done in other countries. But, in the vernacular, I say, "so what?"

During the war Americans demonstrated what they could do. Our scientific development is in advance of that of any other country, so far as I know. Of course, we wish to keep abreast of the world in respect to the various developments.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I do not know that America led the world scientifically during the recent war. I do know that we made excellent progress in applied science. But I pointed out earlier in the debate that the basic principles which we used so effectively during the war were invented or discovered in Europe, and in the enemy countries. So I do not think we were way ahead.

Mr. WILLIS. I think the results speak for themselves.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Does the Senator from Indiana think that if Germany had had the same industrial facilities we had, knowing what she did know about the atomic bomb, and if she had had the same amount of money and manpower that we had, she would not have developed it before we did?

Mr. WILLIS. But she did not have them.

Mr. MAGNUSON. She did not have them because God was kinder to us.

Mr. WILLIS. I think we shall keep ahead of them.

I was also very much impressed with what the Senator from New Jersey said. I think we should give the matter careful consideration. It seems to me that we cannot very well subsidize education at the lower levels. For instance, many young men wish to study medicine. But if we were to start to subsidize their education, we would find it simply impossible to make the proper selections.

The point I wish to make is that the scarcity of young scientists has not occurred because of lack of money or lack of will, but it has occurred because we have taken so many of the young men for service in the armed forces. We hope that never again will be necessary. It is not a question of giving a vast sum of money to a board which we shall have to trust, and then perhaps change the membership of the board from time to time.

Therefore, it seems to me that at least some standard of aptitude should be provided, such, for instance, as that a candidate for such aid should be a graduate of a recognized university, with a degree of bachelor of arts or a degree of bachelor of science, before he could be selected as one having some evidence of aptitude, and in whose education the country would invest a considerable sum of money. I should like to leave that suggestion for consideration.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, that would be done. The Board can prescribe that the men selected must have a degree. That would be a matter entirely up to the Board, which will be composed of scientists and educators.

I do not wish to burden the RECORD with quotations from those who have testified that they feel this is the most important provision of the bill, but Dr. Bush and Dr. Conant, of Harvard, have discussed this section.

Dr. James B. Conant, the president of Harvard University, testified that——

> Those sections which deal with scholarships and fellowships * * * are by far the most important parts of the bill * * * for there is no use considering ways and means of spending money on research unless first-rate men are available to do the work.

Bernard M. Baruch, in his testimony, said:

What should the Government aim for through a peacetime program such as this committee contemplates? I would list eight major goals. 1. Increase scientific brainpower. Greatly increase our scientific brainpower, using scholarships and other aids to develop new scientific talent in American youth.

Bruce K. Brown, vice president in charge of development, Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, said:

I am entirely convinced that unless we do something drastic and extraordinary to increase the training of technical men, increase the number of technical men we have in this country, we are going to be in a pretty sad state.

So says one of the Senator's constituents, and a very eminent man.

Many other outstanding men take the same position. They all insist that this part of the bill is one of the most important parts. Of course, we could lay down a blueprint administratively, but it would be most difficult to handle the matter in that way. I have every faith that the Board will award scholarships and fellowships, not only in a just way but in a way that will tend to utilize every dollar of the money to the best advantage, so as to increase our great scientific development and the number of young men who are using their talents in the scientific fields.

Of course, the Board could make a mistake in the case of one student here or there, but that would happen only rarely.

We must remember that only a small portion of the money to be appropriated will be used for this purpose, and we must also remember that the Board will be required to make a report every year to the Congress. The Board must go through the Appropriations Committee and be screened as to what they do; and as I said to the Senator from New Jersey, the Board will have some leeway as to the extent to which they wish to grant fellowships.

I do not think we shall thus be dipping into the field of American education in any way at all, unless the Board abuses the authority given to it. Frankly, it is most difficult to write legislation on the subject.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield to me?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not wish to have the distinguished Senator derive the impression that I am not in sympathy with the objectives of the bill, because I am very sincerely so.

But when it comes to allotting the people's money for this program and setting up the practical machinery which will have to be circumscribed, I think that is the responsibility of the representatives of the people in the Congress, both in the House of Representatives and in the Senate. I think we must proceed very cautiously in order that we may not make a failure of the program, which is so important to the future welfare of our country.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think the section limits the Board to the expenditure of the money for scholarships and fellowships for qualified persons. I do not think the Board is going to give the money to people who are not qualified. But there might be a time when the Board would find that a certain person who did not have a collegiate degree did show great aptitude for such work. These distinguished men, who can discern such aptitude much better than we can, may say, "Well, here is a worthy place to spend a little of this money, in order that we may ultimately have another great scientist in America."

Mr. President, there are other features of the bill, but I do not wish to cover all of them at this time.

I might say that the Senator from West Virginia read a joint statement from scientists and educators with regard to the need for a bill of this kind. He read the names of distinguished men, such as the president of Harvard and the president of the American Medical Association. It is well known how conservative is the American Medical Association with regard to all scientific matters. I wish to point out to the Senate that although the endorsements were of 10 men representing the great groups to which the Senator referred, they come as endorsements of men who are speaking for their respective groups.

As I have already said, I do not know of any person who is opposed to the bill. Some mild differences of opinion were expressed in the hearings before the committee with respect to the language of the bill, but those differences have been resolved. We have put a great deal of hard work on the bill. We do not interfere with Government research. We do not intend to interfere with the freedom of scientists. They may continue as they have in the past. We only try to do for America what the scientists have told us is necessary, not only for peacetime uses but for the defense of our country in warfare. The only strong objection came from Dr. Jewett. He is president of the National Academy. I can say only that his idea was disagreed with by every member of the Academy. We had before the committee approximately 15 witnesses who were members of the National Academy. We polled them, and I have figures which I shall later put into the RECORD. As I have said, Mr. President, there is no opposition to the basic need for legislation of the type embraced in this bill. There may be some question as to the proper approach to the matter. But we are entering not necessarily a new field. I myself was the author of a bill in 1937 in which provision was made for the establishment of a national cancer institute, with an appropriation of $1,000,000 a year for its use. A board pertaining to national aeronautics was also provided in another bill, with an appropriation to carry out its purposes.

Mr. President, I hope that we will not quibble about the sections of the bill. We must place faith in the Board, which will be composed of outstanding men of this country, both lay and scientific. Everyone who knows anything about the subject agrees that the bill should be passed by this Congress.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may propound a question?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. HART. I wish to inquire about section 9, under the heading "International cooperation." Of course, the bill is for the establishment of a National Scientific Foundation to pertain to the fundamentals of basic research. Under section 9 (a) the head of any Government agency is authorized, with the approval of the President, to do certain things. The language then refers to concluding reciprocal agreements with foreign governments relating to the interchange of scientific and technological information, including models and samples for information purposes, and the use and availability of patents and patent rights owned or controlled by the respective governments. Of course, very few patents ever result from techonological research. Will the Senator explain the reason for that section?

Mr. MAGNUSON. There was a great deal of testimony presented to the committee with reference to the subject to which the Senator has referred. As I recall, the situation was explained in this way: There now exist many of what we call international societies. The members of those societies hold a scientific congress each year, and ideas are exchanged. One man may say, "I have been working all year on this." Another man may say, "I have been working all year on this." The scientists meet in congress, read and discuss the papers, and later those papers may be published. We have always been represented at those congresses, but in an unofficial way. The State Department has usually assigned some person to attend. We were told by representatives of the State Department that, in view of the fact we were seeking to establish a National Science Foundation, and although our representatives at the congress would be appointed through them, the State Department, nevertheless the Foundation itself should have some authority in choosing the men to represent this country. Therefore, we incorporated the language, "The head of any Government agency is hereby authorized, with the approval of the President, and through the Department of State," and so forth.

Mr. HART. I fully sympathize with the objective of this section, but it appears to me that the method suggested is a peculiar one. By law we permit any Government agency—of, course, with the approval of the President—to give away almost anything which the agency sees fit to give away.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I do not believe that any person attends the scientific meetings of the congress to which I have referred for the purpose of giving away anything. They may attend those meetings regardless. No one can prevent them. No one could prevent Dr. Bowman, Dr. Bush, or Dr. Oppenheimer from leaving this country tomorrow and attending a congress of scientists if they wished to do so. We merely give them some degree of official authority in that connection.

Mr. HART. The Senator misunderstood me. The language of the section is, in part, "The head of any Government agency." Those words do not refer to any unofficial agencies.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The purpose of the language is to include the State Department, because they may wish to send some person who will officially represent them. I am frank to say to the Senator from Connecticut that I do not recall why the word "head" was made a part of the language. However, I see the Senator's point. I think that perhaps the section should be amended so as to apply to the foundation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I submit a revision of my amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill. The substitute is submitted on behalf of myself, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HART], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The revised amendment in the nature of a substitute will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Washington that what we have tried to do in the revised version of the amendment is to incorporate those points on which we disagree with the Senator's version, and bring the issue before the Senate, so that it may decide which form of language it wishes to adopt in establishing the foundation.

I wish to commend the Senator from Washington for the splendid work he has done. I am in favor of a bill covering this subject, but I believe that some of the provisions of the pending bill can be improved. As I said earlier in the day, I am opposed to the power proposed to be given to an administrator to be appointed by the President. I believe that the director of the foundation should be a man appointed by the scientific groups which have the responsibility of determining the policy to be pursued.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may say to the Senator from New Jersey that my original bill contemplated the system used by universities, but it also contemplated establishing scholarships and fellowships. As the testimony was presented to the committee from time to time, we incorporated in the bill other features. The money which is to be spent will be the taxpayers' money, and I think the administrator should be given some responsibility, because he will be blamed for the mistakes which may be made, just as would the President of the United States have been blamed if some of the research which he authorized during the war had not resulted successfully. I have changed my views, and I may say that Dr. Bush, Dr. Bowman, and all the men who originally aided me, have also changed their views with regard to this matter. I believe that, with the compromise to which I have referred, the bill will serve an important purpose. The compromise was brought about mainly during the hearings, by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, who cannot be present during the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is referring to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL].

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. I talked to him with reference to this matter, and I believe that he feels the bill contains the necessary compromise. However, I think that the main difficulty of control would be solved if the bill did not attempt to cover so much ground. But, Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Washington for his vision, and for his original view that the matter should be controlled by a Board instead of by an Administrator appointed by the President.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, unless there are some further questions which Senators wish to propound with regard to the bill, I yield the floor. I am sure the Senator from New Jersey wishes to have time to speak on his substitute.

Mr. SMITH. I do desire time to speak on the substitute. I believe that the Senator from Connecticut also wishes to comment on the bill, and I am happy to allow him to speak first.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut will listen, before I take my seat I wish to offer a committee amendment on page 19, line 20, to strike out the words "The head of any Government agency" and insert "the National Research Foundation." I ask that that amendment be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6739) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. HARE, Mr. TARVER, Mr. ROONEY, Mr. NEELY, Mr. ENGEL of Michigan, Mr. KEEFE, and Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1850) to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, to secure the national defense, to advance the national health and welfare, and for other purposes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I wish to comment on two or three points which were raised in the course of the remarks of the Senator from Washington.

There was one point relative to the activities of the Russians, and I wanted to point out one or two sentences in the hearings, in the testimony of Dr. Langmuir, who is the head of the General Electric research laboratory. Dr. Langmuir had just returned from a conference of scientists in Russia the preceding July, that is, a year ago. He said, as appears on page 32 of the hearings:

> I think Russia at present is far below us in scientific invention. They are doing good work but not as good as is being done in American universities or American industries. They have, for the reasons I have given, I believe, a tendency to rise at a higher rate than we do—> unless we do something very definite to prevent these tendencies to level off or even to hold down progress.

That is a significant sentence.

Then on the next page, page 33, he said, in answer to a question of the chairman:

> In fact, long before the war, I think Germany was going fast downhill in pure science. It was devoting all its time to military work and neglecting pure science, whereas in Russia I saw a remarkable amount of pure scientific work kept up, even during the war.

I could refer also to other points in the testimony. Particularly, I recall Dr. Oppenheimer's testimony to the effect our activities during the war were not in the field of pure scientific research at all. He said at one point, for instance, that the production of such things as the atomic bomb and the proximity fuze, and other improvements in aircraft, and so forth, were not the results of new scientific research, but were like shaking the tree and the ripe fruit falling in the form of these particular weapons, and that, as a matter of fact, we neglected pure scientific research during the war. As the Senator from Washington has pointed out, we did not even exempt from the draft our students of science in the universities, which has created a great vacuum in the supply of scientists for the future. I remember I made a speech in the Senate about the inducting of scientific students. I think that was a great mistake from the standpoint of the future of our national defense.

On the same page from which I read, Dr. Langmuir drew a distinction between the bill now pending and the ordinary applied science. He said:

> The aim of fundamental science is to acquire new basic knowledge. This is inherently unpredictable—discoveries cannot be planned or foreseen.

He proceeded on this basis to develop the idea which we are trying to accomplish in the bill.

Mr. President, I think we have been misled by the efficiency of our industrial machine in applying scientific principles, into believing that we are the last word in all the phases of scientific research, and therefore we are not worrying much about it. The atomic bomb itself gave a good illustration of how much was contributed by others. I think all will recall, if they stop and think of it, that the basic scientific knowledge in that field was far from being strictly American. Not only Dr. Einstein, but Fermi from Italy, and Meitner from Germany, and Chadwick from England, and many others from countries in Europe, contributed the basic knowledge which made it possible for our industrial genius to develop the bomb.

Mr. President, those are merely a few points. One of the principal things I wanted to say a few words about was mentioned by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] when he was questioning the advisability of inserting a Division of Social Sciences in the bill. That provision was a source of considerable discussion. If I recall correctly, the objections to it were not because we do not need it, because it is not a good thing, because it is not advisable, but on practical grounds. There was fear that the Senate or the House might be afraid of some investigation or some research in that field, and therefore that it might prejudice the bill as a whole.

A moment ago the Senator from Colorado, if I recall his words, said something to the effect that this is something new in social science, that it might lead us off into new fields in which the Government has never before participated, and involve us in controversy. I am in agreement with his view that it is new. In fact, it is so new that we know practically nothing about the social sciences, and it is for that very reason I think it is high time we undertook some program which might teach us a little about the social sciences.

As I understand, a study of social sciences could lead us to an understanding of the principles of human relationships which might enable us to live together without fighting recurrent wars, to live together within this country, and also might promote an understanding among the peoples of the various nations which would enable them to live together in peace.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I am quite perplexed about this phase of the bill. I wish the Senator first to give a definition of social science, tell us what it is.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do not know that I can give an all-inclusive definition. I think I can point out a few activities which are commonly considered social sciences. Economics is one of the principal ones. Psychology is another, and there are other things which are talked about under the general subject of sociology. I would say such studies as are concerned primarily with human relationships are studies in social science. Politics is a fundamental social science. I confess that the word "science" is not properly used in that field, in that it is not of the same nature as mathematics.

Mr. WILLIS. That is, we cannot develop practical formulas or concrete formulas for social relationships.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I would not say we cannot develop them. I think progress in that field has been much slower than in the field of physical or natural science. In the field of government itself we have not made any appreciable, hardly any noticeable, progress or change in this country for 170 years. We are operating in the Senate under rules which were formulated largely well over 100 years ago. I do not mean to intimate that I am in favor of throwing them all out. I mean there has been very little change in the art of government, if I may call it that.

Mr. WILLIS. I think that is a better definition.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I am only using terminology that is commonly employed. There is only a difference of degree, however, as between what we call science, and art. An art, after it has been sufficiently studied, gradually becomes a science. Not very long ago, the Senator will recall, medicine was full of superstitions.

Mr. WILLIS. The art of witchcraft.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The art of witchcraft. I asked an able scientist yesterday if he would define social science. I had been worrying about that. He said in his definition, "In the first place, I would not call it science. What is commonly called social science is one individual or a group of individuals telling another group how they should live."

Mr. WILLIS. I wonder if that is not a pretty good definition.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Is that not just about what Government does? Government by a majority means that the majority tell the minority what to do.

Mr. WILLIS. What I wonder is whether we are going to derive any good by appropriating a considerable amount of money for such purposes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I am not prepared to guarantee any result. I think there is room for questioning any of these activities on that ground. It seems to me that social science is a recognized field of study now. It has been sadly neglected for the very reason that it does not yield immediate financial returns such as the invention, for example, of a better mouse trap or some other useful gadget. For that reason it needs governmental assistance a great deal more than mechanical engineering does, because the study of mechanical engineering brings its own rewards under our commercial system. I think social science has been sadly neglected. If one looks at the situation in the world today, or even at the situation in our Nation today, he will find that the difficulties lie not with respect to the production of tangible things, but with those human relations which enable us to get along together. I think the basic trouble arising out of OPA today goes to the lack of people knowing how to live together, more than it goes to the question of the technology of production. That is my judgment.

Mr. WILLIS. It is a question of keeping selfishness in restraint, that is all.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is one aspect of the matter, and it is an important aspect. How one treats it or how one deals with it as a government or as a society is an important aspect. At the request of the physical scientists, we incorporated a special provision in the bill in an effort to try to prevent the division of social sciences getting out of hand, so to speak. I have no fear of that, however. I only hope this provision will give some prestige to social science, that it will sort of recognize that field of study as a legitimate thing in our society, and I hope it will encourage some of our more intelligent young people to go into that field. I think it is sadly understaffed. I know there are many crackpots in that field, just as there were in the field of medicine in the days of witchcraft, but it is not something from which we should back away. We have to solve the social problems one way or the other. I cannot see any harm in admitting that they are legitimate problems and giving the Board authority to devote some of its resources to that study.

Mr. WILLIS. I wonder whether we should accept the argument that simply because no harm would be done we should implement this study?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I only make that argument in response to those who say that harm will come from it; that it is getting into a dangerous field. I do not agree with that argument at all.

Mr. WILLIS. I should like to leave this thought for the Senator to consider: I was thinking whether it would not be better for us to confine this program, which it is proposed to set up, to certain definite fields. We cannot reach out too far, because a part of the program might fail, and bring discredit on the whole program. Why can we not confine ourselves to the fields in which we know there is a practical and a crying need for development, and leave matters which are of doubtful value to be taken up after we have tested the plan on things of known value?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. One distinction between the pending bill and the one I introduced, S. 1248, is that this bill deals with the very essence of pure science in any field, and its purpose is to investigate what we do not know about. It goes into principles which we do not know about at all. After that point is reached the domain of applied science is entered. I will read again the last sentence that I read from Dr. Langmuir's statement:

> The aim of fundamental science is to acquire new basic knowledge. It is inherently unpredictable — discoveries cannot be planned or foreseen.

I cannot guarantee any discoveries or any results in this field. Likewise, if I understand the other provisions of the bill, they do not deal with things we already know and with respect to which we can calculate the results. We are in a sense fishing around in the unknown, and that is what the bill is designed to accomplish.

Mr. WILLIS. Will not the Senator agree that for 5,000 years mankind has tried to control human emotions and prejudices and selfishness, and that it is not an unknown field?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. So far as I know there has been no concentrated effort in this country or anywhere else, to study, or, if the Senator will permit the use of the word, to make a scientific approach to these problems. We have always considered them somewhat taboo, just as not so long ago the subject of syphilis was taboo, and we would not do anything about syphilis because it ought not to be touched. It was one of those things that decent people did not discuss. There is a little of that attitude today toward social science. It is something that everyone is assumed to have been born with, and we do not want to study it.

Mr. WILLIS. I would not agree that the Senator's suggestion is a sound one or a happy one.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. One does not mention those words. One does not want to talk about the subject.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator does not wish to say that all efforts that have been made through all the years have failed to develop better relations between men?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I should say that what has happened in the last 25 years, including two world wars, would be pretty good evidence that mankind has not gone very far forward toward solving human relationships. The problem starts at home. The present situation respecting OPA is pretty good proof that we do not know a great deal about the subject of human relationships in the United States.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator think that by spending a great deal of money the problem can thereby be solved?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The purpose of this measure is to try to find out whether there is anything in this field that might be of benefit to us. If one could foresee and plan the matter one would be working in what I call the field of applied science. I cannot guarantee that there will be any result from this study.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I am fully in accord with the idea that social science should have increased study and deserve fostering in every way that is reasonable. Certainly the right kind of research is needed. But I want to ask the Senator from Arkansas whether he does not think there is some danger that this program might become somewhat top-heavy if social sciences are included as a part of the program under this bill? Everyone knows that there is obvious necessity for many sound, carefully thought-out studies in matters of that kind. On the other hand, there is not anything that leads more readily to isms and to quackeries than so-called studies in social science unless there is eternal vigilance to prevent. If we could be assured that only a reasonable amount of the time and money and the activities under this bill would be devoted to social sciences I would feel very much relieved from the fear that research into the physical might be slighted under this program.

Mr. FULBRIGHT I can say to the Senator that, in spite of this provision, it would surprise me very much if the social sciences division got anything at all, because it is very evident that physical scientists will naturally dominate the Board, and the very fact that they outnumber others in every respect I think will be the controlling influence. I think it will be very difficult, as a practical matter, for the social scientists to get very big slices of pie, if that is what the Senator means.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. To a certain extent that is what I mean. I can realize that probably there would be a tendency toward such restraint on the part of the Board, if the Board were dominated by those who might be termed "applied scientists" rather than by social scientists.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In the very nature of things, if there are studies to be made of mathematics and biology and public health and so on, the subject of social science would be somewhat in a class by itself, and in the minority.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I know of nothing more difficult than to point out exactly what type of study should be made and what phase of such study should be included in social sciences. Social sciences cover or touch upon, I assume, almost everything one can think of in the way of human associations, conduct, and relationships. I can remember years ago when some sociologists used to insist that sociology included practically every form of human endeavor; that it was really the parent of economics and politics, and that even the natural sciences sprang from social science.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator will remember also when a rabbit's foot was thought to be a sure cure for certain diseases. Ideas with respect to the rabbit's foot have changed a great deal.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Yes; happily so. But I believe I would prefer to see social sciences covered in a separate bill, under certain special arrangements. I can readily understand, because I worked in some of them myself for a number of years, that the social sciences are matters which require close attention, close consideration, and that they should be fostered in every suitable way. But if, on the other hand, they are more or less jumbled up with the applied sciences, unless there is a pretty clear line of cleavage, and unless it is clearly understood that the purport of the bill and its operations are such as to be concerned with applied science, if that is the correct term for this objective, I am afraid that the purpose of the bill will be somewhat misunderstood and possibly misdirected.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It is not supposed to be concerned with applied sciences; that is, in taking known things and making them useful. The purpose is to investigate pure science. In that field one does not even know what he is looking for.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I am always at a loss when I attempt to refer to science as pure or applied or physical. I have heard many definitions and many descriptions as to suitable terminology. I had reference more or less to the natural sciences, dealing with so-called material objects—sciences such as medicine, chemistry, biology, physics, and electricity. Those are the fields in which so much is needed today in the way of investigation.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Does the Senator feel that not much is needed in sociology, politics, and economics?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Of course, it is seriously needed.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Does the Senator feel we know all we need to know?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Not in any sense; but if we are to enter that field of research we ought to be sure that we safeguard our program very carefully. As I understand, 25 percent of the funds appropriated is to be apportioned among the States.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. What is to be done with that money?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In a sense, the bill itself is an experiment. We are giving authority to the Board and to the Administrator. In view of our lack of experience in the field of Government participation in aid of education, I know of no other way then to make a start with the idea of arriving at the correct procedure through trial and error. There is no guide for judgment as to what this bill would do. It is a perfect example of our ignorance in the field of social sciences. No Member of the Senate has the vaguest idea of how the program will operate. It is a new experiment. I agree that there are all kinds of dangers. But how shall we ever reach the point of starting a program?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. If one contemplates making investigations in the field of chemistry, there are certain obvious recognized subjects for inquiry accepted I take it generally by experts. I believe that all scientists who know anything about chemistry or physics would be fairly well satisfied that there are certain special subjects which ought to be studied very carefully. There is a more or less definite course to be followed which is obvious. But when we say that we are going to attempt to investigate the science of government, and the general field of social relations, that is so exceedingly vague, and covers such an enormous field, that unless the work is very closely coordinated, and unless an effort is made to map out the courses very definitely, we are likely to run into difficulties, into confusion and cause the research to be much too thin. Let me give an illustration——

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Does the Senator believe that the Congress ought to map out that course in a bill? Even if we were to have a separate bill, does the Senator feel that we should undertake to map out just what shall be investigated?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. No; I would not say that; but if we are to cover social sciences, I should like to see the subject as to the scope of the program given additional and fresh study.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Does the Senator feel that the Congress is capable of setting up a program of investigation?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Of course not.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. All we can do is to delegate the authority. I do not know how else to handle the problem.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Of course, the Congress cannot pick out specific points for research. In any event, I do not wish to see the Federal Government directing concretely inquiry and research.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In any field? Or does the Senator limit it to social sciences?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I prefer to see the main direction come from the scientists themselves. I would not like to see a situation arise in which the Federal Government would say, "We will look into this subject in chemistry, and that line of inquiry in physics." That is putting it very crudely, but that situation could very well arise in careless administration of such a Federal program. After the Government makes an appropriation for research, I think the helpful province of the Government comes pretty close to being at an end. For many years I was connected with one of the outstanding universities of the country specializing in work of research. I am quite confident that if the Federal Government had been shaping the course of research in any way, and had told that university what to investigate in the field of chemistry or medicine, the results would not have been nearly so satisfactory.

I realize that there are certain safeguards in the bill which will probably avoid putting a crimp in scientific research conducted in what might be termed the historic manner. However, I would like to see the bill go further in the way of protection than it goes. I am appalled at the idea of opening up the social sciences without any charting of what the investigators are to study or how they are to go about it. I presume that any State which received its share of the 25 percent allotment would say, "We want to use this fund for a certain purpose."

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The program must be approved by the Administrator and the Board, acting together.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. If the Board's approval were sufficiently tight to afford adequate protection from misdirected or unwise inquiry that might be some safeguard.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That depends upon the intelligence of the members of the Board. We assume that we are to have a good Board and a good Administrator.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I am not raising any serious objection to the inclusion in this bill of the social sciences. There is nothing more important than that we should come to a better realization of what the social sciences really are, and the principles of human conduct underlying them.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. As I visualize the way the program will work, the University of Chicago, the University of Minnesota, or any other school will ask for funds to promote some program which the scientists in the particular schools have already undertaken. Usually the aid will be used for clerical assistance, and for the collection of statistics. Ordinarily the principal ingredient of research work in the social sciences is statistics relating to human behavior, and so forth. Such things as polls of public opinion are sometimes very much abused, and in many cases misleading; but they are part and parcel of what we call one field of research in social science. They relate to the large-scale problems of the democratic system. I do not think there is anything very dangerous in that field. I feel that the social sciences have been sadly neglected. They have not had any money, because they have nothing tangible to produce. They are unlike the science of chemistry, for example, which can produce nylon in a chemical laboratory.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Of course I do not see anything essentially dangerous in any real research into phases of the social sciences.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Unless the Government or some great philanthropist helps them along, they make no progress. I think the Senator will not deny that there has been very little progress in the field of human relations, and especially in the fields of government and economics, for a long time. The Senator was an eminent teacher of history. I should like to have him express himself as to the great progress we have made in getting along together as humans in this modern age. Does the Senator believe that there has been any substantial progress?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I appreciate the Senator's reference to my teaching. I did some teaching in history but most assuredly I was never in any sense whatever eminent.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator has taught in one of the great universities.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. My teaching in history was rather short in time.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. History is one of the leading social sciences.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. The modern conception of history is widely different from history as it was understood by our grandfathers. That change has been exceedingly helpful in every sense. I repeat, I am not afraid that the program under this bill will be used to any considerable extent to foment various kinds of insidious doctrines.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is what many persons fear. They fear that their particular antipathy will be fomented.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. There is some possibility that if an allotment is made to a certain university, and the head of a particular department is a man addicted to certain isms, he might use the fund for that purpose. I suppose that is a danger the existence of which we must contemplate.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The program must have the approval of the Board. If the Board does not approve it, the head of a department in a university has no inherent right to the fund. It would not be a violation of due process if he did not get it. This is all under the control of the Board.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Does the Senator feel that the control of the Board as to the type of research would be likely to be sufficient general protection to head off wild-eyed so-called research?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. There are two protections. There is the Division of Social Sciences, which I assume will be composed of outstanding and recognized social scientists. They will set up the program and submit it to the Board for its approval. The division itself passes on it, and the Board passes on it. Then if a crackpot turns up somewhere, the Board can stop the program. It does not have to continue with it. The Board would have discretion in the administration of the program. I do not see much danger in it. I cannot prove the result, but I do not see much danger in the social sciences. I believe that they represent a field in which we ought to know something.

Before we leave the matter of history, for many years people have played with the idea of trying to have histories written in a more objective way. Senators are familiar with the manner in which histories have been written in the North and in the South relative to the Civil War, and the manner in which histories have been written in various other countries. I understand that Norway and Sweden have agreed to rewrite their histories and try to present them in an objective way. It is an objective problem in human relations. I think the Senator will agree that that type of project is not very revolutionary. I believe it is directly in line with what is proposed here.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Let me ask the Senator a question, and then I shall not trespass further on his time. Is the Senator satisfied that with the incorporation of this provision with regard to social sciences, the social sciences would not more or less dominate the scene to the slighting of other studies? I wish to emphasize again that I believe that the studies in the social sciences and helpful progress in that field are just as important as anything else we have before us today. I cannot overstress the gravity of the need and importance of such studies. The Senator cannot emphasize that point more than I do. It is most unfortunate that more progress has not been in constructive work in this. But the general purport of the bill is that it is aimed at investigations in what we may call the pure physical sciences.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I am quite confident that the personnel of the board will be such, and the administrator will be such, that there will be sufficient protection. The administrator is very likely to be a leading physical scientist. During the hearings, so far as I know, only 1 day was devoted to hearing social scientists. The remainder of the time was devoted to scientists in the field of physical science. The country acclaims the physical scientist because the physical sciences produce tangible results. I have no doubt that the social sciences will have a very difficult time, even though this provision is included in the bill.

The Senator suggests that the social sciences be dealt with in a separate bill. In the first place, no such bill has been introduced. In the second place, as a practical matter I think it would be very difficult to have such a bill enacted, for the reasons which the Senator has pointed out.

In the third place, I see no logical reasons why the social sciences should not be included in this bill. The dividing line between the social sciences and the other sciences is very vague and very difficult to draw. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] asked for a definition. It is very difficult clearly to define them and distinguish one from the other, because they all impinge on one another. Both the physical sciences and social sciences are important. They react and affect one another, so it is difficult to compartmentalize science in that way.

I think it is important to have social sciences covered in the program set up in the bill. If some Senators wish to throw it out and if they wish us to go on our merry way ignoring the significance of the social sciences, that is a matter which the Senate must determine. But I see no logical reason to fail to cover the social sciences in this connection.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, I am not advocating that they be thrown out. I merely am making comments in regard to some reasons for not including provision for a Division of Social Sciences as a part of the program to be set up by this particular bill.

Let me say that I think it would be most unwise for the Federal Government to attempt either directly or indirectly to shape research. I know that in some branches of medicine progress has been made because of governmental research, and possibly in other respects governmental activity has been helpful. But it seems to me we open a dangerous field when we give the Federal Government the power to shape closely research. The best research which has been done, in this country at least, has been done by agencies which have not been controlled or regulated by the Government and which have not been instructed or shaped by the Government in regard to what they do. I think it is quite possible that the arrangements proposed by the bill would probably protect against what might be called governmental domination of any kind.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator's statement about the proper method. I am assuming, and I believe, that the protection afforded by the bill against governmental domination is sufficient. In that connection, the problem is similar to that which we had in connection with the so-called Federal aid to education bill, Senate bill 181. I do not think the field of research should be controlled by the Federal Government, but the experience we have had in connection with the land-grant colleges shows that Government aid is not detrimental to education or research. If the Federal Government falls into the hands of a dictator, then the whole situation will be bad, of course. But so long as we have a division of power such as now exists in the National Government, whereby no two parts of the Government seem to be able to agree, we are not likely to have domination of education or research by the Government.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. Is not the argument of the Senator from Maryland based upon the idea that the research to be done under the program established by the bill will be the only research which will be done?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Not at all. I am not assuming that all the universities and great corporations of the United States will quit such research work merely because this program begins.

Mr. KILGORE. Is it the Senator's viewpoint, then, that the Government should not be permitted to help in certain phases of research which some governmental agencies have found require help?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. No. I personally would have the Government appropriate the money and turn it over to research agencies which are clearly recognized, and without in any way being controlled or shaped or directed by the Federal Government except in very special cases. It may be that sufficient safeguards are placed in the bill in order to take care of that matter. I do not know. I have not been able to study the bill from that standpoint as carefully as I should like to do.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is what I think the bill means. At some place we should make provision for preventing any complete "crackpots" from receiving aid from the fund.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, let me point out to the Senator that all the research which now is being done privately in the United States will be continued. The program set up by this bill will not stop it.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Of course.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The bill will provide funds which are badly needed in a most important field. For instance, if the Army has a problem which is too big for its research laboratory to solve, it will go to the Foundation, and the Foundation will say, "Perhaps we can get the General Electric Research Laboratory and Johns Hopkins to help."

There will simply be some check, not to determine what research shall be conducted but to make sure that there shall not be abuses in connection with the expenditure of the funds.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, the bill provides:

(c) The Board shall continuously survey the activities and management of the Foundation, and shall periodically evaluate the achievements of the Foundation in accomplishing the objectives of this act. Each divisional scientific committee shall survey continuously the scientific field which it encompasses, shall undertake to determine the specific scientific needs of such field, and shall evaluate proposed programs and projects.

It seems to me that that provision is included only in order to make sure that those who receive the aid are not completely "nuts." Of course, some people who are entirely crazy will apply for the aid, no doubt; such persons almost always do apply in connection with such projects, so the bill simply provides for a check.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I suppose it would also be an advantage in preventing some obvious duplication.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Of course it will. Such duplication is often found.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Let me give an illustration which I recall very well. A friend of mine was working at Johns Hopkins University in astronomy, and he spent several years in making a special study in that field. As his particular line of inquiry was about completed and he was about to present it for his doctorate of philosophy, he learned that someone else thousands of miles away had done similar research work, and, as a matter of fact, has gotten publicity ahead of him by only a few days. So not only did my friend lose that opportunity for his degree and 3 years of work but he also found he had wasted his time because someone else was doing the same research job.

I can understand the importance of coordinating the work so as to promote a free interchange of ideas and of knowledge of the work which is being done, and of course that will also tend to prevent duplication. I think that might be a distinct advantage from the operations of this bill.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I wish to bring my remarks to a conclusion, but first I desire to read a short paragraph from a statement by Dr. Wesley Mitchell, who is one of the leading social scientists of the country and, incidentally, is an economist. I should like to read a portion of his statement at this point:

The present inadequacy of knowledge of human relations is a source of danger which can be greatly reduced by more adequate applications of scientific techniques in the study of human problems. Social-science personnel, research procedures and facilities are underdeveloped in terms of the tasks which must be undertaken. It has been demonstrated, however, that the earnest and objective investigation of problems of human relations can produce results of inestimable practical value when properly trained research workers imbued with scientific detachment and integrity are given opportunity to apply themselves with adequate resources. The fact that it cannot be claimed that the social sciences have reached a stage comparable to that of some of the other scientific disciplines is considered the strongest possible reason for advancing their development by every effective means. The problems with which they deal are urgent. The advances in research planning, techniques, and organization which have been achieved during the war and the immediate prewar years offer promise of a period of unusually fruitful progress if adequate support is made available.

Mr. President, I close by saying that I think it is well worth our while, and it may very well be most valuable to us in the future, to leave in the bill provision for the Division of Social Sciences.

As for the bill as a whole, it goes without saying that I am strongly in favor of it, and I hope the Senate will pass it.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution for the extension of rent control, and I request that it be appropriately referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RADCLIFFE in the chair). Without objection, the joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. What measure was just introduced for appropriate reference?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The caption of the joint resolution is "A joint resolution extending the rent control provisions of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, until June 30, 1947."

Mr. WHERRY. Is unanimous consent required for the introduction of the joint resolution at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is, at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. Was unanimous consent requested?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I requested unanimous consent. The joint resolution is introduced at this time merely in order to have it referred to the appropriate committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair heard no objection.

Mr. WHERRY. Unanimous consent was granted on the basis of the reference of the joint resolution to the appropriate committee; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 171) extending the rent control provisions of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, until June 30, 1947, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1850) to promote the progress of sciences and the useful arts, to secure the national defense, to advance the national health and welfare, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I wish to take only a minute to address the Senate at this time.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington, as one of the Senators in charge of the bill, if he will refer to page 13 of the bill, subsection (e) of section 5, and later I shall ask him to refer to subsection (f) of section 8, on page 19.

My good friend the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], who is a member of the Atomic Energy Committee, particularly directed my attention to these two subsections. Of course, the Senator is aware of the fact that some three weeks or more ago the Senate unanimously passed the Atomic Energy Act, Senate bill 1717. That bill contains very carefully worked out provisions for the treatment of basic and applied research in the field of nuclear physics. I should like to ask the Senator if there is any intention on the part of the sponsors of the bill or anything in the language of the bill as he reads it which gives to this Foundation any right to engage in research in the field of nuclear physics.

I may say to the Senator that I am afraid that we might run into some conflict. We have carved out the field of nuclear physics and have put it under the control of the Atomic Energy Commission. Because of the nature of the beast, as it were, we have had to devise special treatment for security reasons. Allow me to invite attention to the fact that, under section 5 (e) of the bill, if nuclear physics was conceived to be within the operating functions of the Commission, the following language on page 13, in line 8, would apply:

> Any person engaged in such research and development activities shall not be precluded from independently discussing, writing, or publishing his own views and conclusions relating to such research and development.

In the atomic-energy bill we went to great pains to keep research free, but at the same time we imposed criminal penalties for the publication or disclosure of restricted data. The term "restricted data" was defined in the bill. On page 19 of the pending bill, in section 8 (f), there is a saving provision permitting the President to withhold from publication or dissemination certain material if it involves national security. However, I question the Senator's belief that we should permit the National Science Foundation to engage in the field of nuclear physics.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may say to the Senator that the foundation will, of course, be given broad authority. I suspect that if the Army or the Navy asked the foundation to go into the field of nuclear physics, it would go. However, once it got into such field it would be in a special sphere, subject to the provisions of the bill which was sponsored by the Senator. His bill deals specifically with that subject.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. The Senator from Connecticut must realize that the pending bill was agreed upon long prior to the introduction of his bill. His bill made provision for taking care of the entire situation on the basis of secrecy and national protection. I believe there will be no conflict between the Senator's bill and the pending one. However, I am sure, as one of the sponsors of the pending bill, that we would be willing to go along in taking care of the situation to which the Senator refers.

Mr. McMAHON. Does not the Senator believe that it would be advisable to provide in this bill that the Atomic Energy Commission will be expected to do the basic and applied research in the field of nuclear physics? I should think that it would be well to do that.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Who knows where that would lead us to? We might prohibit the Foundation from using nuclear physics, for example, in research in connection with the treatment of cancer. The language on page 13, section 5 (e) of the bill is only to restrict the Board, Administrator, or anyone else from saying to a student, for example, "You must direct your research along this or that line."

Mr. McMAHON. I am in favor of that.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The bill also contains a saving clause under which the President may say, with respect to any problem, "This is a secret problem." That would include nuclear physics and other matters.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes. If we start to make particular exceptions, in bills introduced in the future, different matters may be brought into the picture than those pertaining to nuclear physics. They will also have to be taken care of. If the Senator has an amendment to suggest I personally, as one of the sponsors of the bill, would be delighted to consider it. But if we start particularizing about nuclear physics, and then continue with some other kind of physics, or some other kind of mathematics which may arise in scientific fields, we may get into many difficulties. We cannot foresee 12 months from now everything which may be associated with the subject of nuclear physics.

Mr. McMAHON. I see the point which the Senator has in mind. I should like to have an opportunity to think the matter over and discuss it with the sponsors of the bill. What I believe at the moment is this: If the proposed Foundation intends to spend any of its funds for research and development in the field of nuclear physics, it should be done only after consultation with the Atomic Energy Commission, which, under section 3 of the atomic energy bill, is specifically authorized and directed to do its own research in this field. I am trying to avoid duplication and conflict of jurisdiction.

Mr. KILGORE. I should like to explain the jurisdictional theory. In other words, if work is to be done in nuclear physics, it must be done under the division covering nuclear physics and must originate in the nature of a request from someone. The Foundation would only furnish some funds to the agency working in that particular field, and those funds would have to be allocated as designated by that agency under the terms and conditions set forth.

In other words, this is not a research organization. It is merely a fund-allocating organization in aid of scientific research to augment—shall we say—other appropriations, other funds, and other steps taken by private or public organizations. When they find themselves with a problem which they cannot solve, or when they do not have the necessary funds to carry on their work, they come to the Foundation, ask for money, go through the necessary process up to the Director. If the proposal is worth while, they may receive an allocation of funds.

Mr. MAGNUSON. In other words, the Atomic Energy Commission should come to the Foundation and say, "We need more money."

Mr. McMAHON. Then, if I understand correctly the Senator from Washington and the Senator from West Virginia, the only basis on which the Foundation should inject itself into the field of nuclear physics, either basic or applied research, would be the request of the Atomic Energy Commission. Am I correct?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. KILGORE. Or upon the request of the Army, the Navy, or some agency of that nature.

Mr. MAGNUSON. They could have a fellowship man somewhere dealing with nuclear physics.

Mr. McMAHON. Do not the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Washington believe that it would be sensible to have all applications for funds for conducting research in nuclear physics, presented first to the Atomic Energy Commission and then to the Foundation for approval?

Mr. KILGORE. It would be better to have a general clause in the bill stating that with reference to any specific scientific subjects which are now or may hereafter be considered, with exclusive rights to deal in certain phases, all requests shall be cleared through the body governing that particular group. That would take care of any situation which might arise later.

Mr. McMAHON. I do not know. I believe that I would rather take care, particularly, of the present situation, and then let any new science, or art, or whatever it may be, take care of itself through a later amendment to the act. Because this is an immediate situation, it might be well if we were to put in a clearance provision that all applications for research grants-in-aid must go to the Atomic Energy Commission with reference to the particular field involved.

Mr. MAGNUSON. They should be cleared.

Mr. McMAHON. They should be cleared.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Because there may be a desire to establish nuclear physics reseach in, for example, the field of cancer, in which the sponsors of the Senator's bill are not interested.

Mr. McMAHON. Oh, yes; we are interested in such matters.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The sponsors of the Senator's bill are interested, of course, from a humane standpoint.

Mr. McMAHON. Yes. But I believe it is particularly important at this time to have, as near as we can, a centralized place for the study of nuclear physics. I believe that would be highly desirable, in the public interest and in national security. So I shall attempt to draft such an amendment and submit it to the Senator from Washington and to the Senator from West Virginia, and see if we cannot arrive at an agreement.

I note that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] is here on my right. He brought the matter originally to my attention, and I should like to ask him if the proposal meets with his views of the situation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; it meets with my views. What I fear is that there will be a conflict. The Senate has only recently passed a bill which we all know provides for the control of atomic energy. We should be very careful that we do not have a conflict between this bill and the other bill. There is no need for having a conflict, and if we spell it out, as the Senator from Connecticut has indicated he would like to have done, there can be no basis for conflict; provision will be made for full cooperation, and there will be no bickerings and no misunderstandings and no loopholes through which atomic controls might escape.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think a satisfactory amendment can be prepared. I understand the Senator's idea. It is that if someone should come to the Foundation with a research problem which involved nuclear physics, surely the commission set up by the other bill should have the right to say "You go ahead with it" or "Do not go ahead with it," or whether it is a good idea or a bad idea. Something can be worked out along that line.

Mr. McMAHON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I hope it will not deal in questions of scholarships or fellowships, because that is merely a matter of training. The Senator is speaking of specific research problems.

Mr. McMAHON. I shall endeavor to work it out.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the Senator, with the understanding that I may have the floor tomorrow for a few moments, if that is agreeable to the majority leader.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is all right with me, when the consideration of the pending bill shall be resumed.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I mean when the consideration of the bill is resumed.

Mr. WHERRY. The pending bill is the special order of business, is it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it is the special order.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RADCLIFFE in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was referred to the appropriate committee.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Capt. Erl C. B. Gould, United States Naval Reserve, to be a commodore in the Naval Reserve, for temporary service, while serving with the Foreign Liquidation Commission, State Department, and to continue during any assignment commensurate with the rank of commodore or until release from active duty.

By Mr. CHAVEZ, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Sundry postmasters.

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance:

Sundry candidates for appointment in the Regular Corps of the United States Public Health Service.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE—PROTOCOL TERMINATING ROME CONVENTION—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from Executive H, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, a protocol dated at Rome March 30, 1946, terminating the Rome convention of June 7, 1905, and transferring the functions and assets of the International Institute of Agriculture to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the injunction of secrecy will be removed from the protocol and it will be published in the RECORD.

The protocol, with accompanying papers, is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a certified photostatic copy of a protocol dated at Rome, March 30, 1946, terminating the Rome convention of June 7, 1905, and transferring the functions and assets of the International Institute of Agriculture to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

The protocol has been signed, "Subject to ratification," by the American chargé d'affaires ad interim at Rome for the Government of the United States of America (including Hawaii, the Philippines, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands).

I also transmit herewith, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Acting Secretary of State with respect to the protocol.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 1, 1946.

(Enclosures: 1. Report of the Acting Secretary of State; 2. Protocol dated at Rome, March 30, 1946, terminating Rome convention of June 7, 1905, and transferring functions and assets of International Institute of Agriculture to Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.)

JUNE 27, 1946.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House:

The undersigned, the Acting Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a certified photostatic copy of a protocol dated at Rome, March 30, 1946, terminating the Rome convention of June 7, 1905, and transferring the functions and assets of the International Institute of Agriculture to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

The protocol has been signed by the American Chargé d'Affaires ad interim at Rome for the Government of the United States of America (including Hawaii, the Philippines, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands), subject to ratification. The protocol has been signed also by the plenipotentiaries of a number of other countries, and it is anticipated that additional signatures will be affixed by August 1, 1946.

The convention for the creation of an International Institute of Agriculture was signed at Rome, June 7, 1905, by the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and a number of other countries. The United States of America became a party to that convention by the deposit of its instrument of ratification with the Italian Government on August 13, 1906. The official citation of the convention is Thirty-fifth Statutes, part 2, 1918.

In 1924, at the request of the Government of the United States of America, and in conformity with the last paragraph of article 10 of the convention of 1905, Hawaii, the Philippines, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands were admitted to participation in the International Institute of Agriculture.

On April 21, 1926, there was signed at Rome on behalf of a number of countries, not including the United States of America, a protocol amending the convention of 1905. The United States of America became a party to that protocol on August 25, 1934, by adherence. In depositing the instrument of adherence, the American Ambassador at Rome informed the Italian Foreign Office that the adherence of the United States of America to the protocol extends to and embraces Hawaii, the Philippines, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. The official citation of that protocol is Forty-ninth Statutes, part 2, 3350.

By joint resolution of the Congress of the United States of America, approved July 31, 1945 (Public Law 174, 79th Cong.), the President was authorized to accept membership for the United States of America in the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. Section 3 of that joint resolution refers to the contemplated dissolution of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome and the merger of its functions and assets with those of the Food and Agriculture Organization. Section 3 reads as follows:

"In adopting this joint resolution, it is the sense of the Congress that the Government of the United States should use its best efforts to bring about, as soon as practicable, the integration of the functions and resources of the International Institute of Agriculture with those of the organization, in a legal and orderly manner, to effect one united institution in such form as to provide an adequate research, informational, and statistical service for the industry of agriculture."

At the first meeting of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, at Quebec, October 16 to November 1, 1945, the conference (the governing body of the Organization) adopted unanimously a resolution requesting that those governments which are members of both the Food and Agriculture Organization and the International Institute of Agriculture take action for the purpose of bringing to an end the affairs of the Institute and of transferring the library, archives, and other property of the Institute to the Organization.

The director-general of the Food and Agriculture Organization, by a letter dated November 10, 1945, requested that the Governments of the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain, and Northern Ireland, Canada, France, the Netherlands, and Belgium work together to give effect to the Quebec resolution relating to the dissolution of the International Institute of Agriculture.

During January and February 1946 the Government of the United States of America, after prior consultation with the British Government, communicated with the other governments members of both the Organization and the Institute, urging the cooperation of those governments in the adoption of procedure for the dissolution of the Institute and the merger of its functions and assets with those of the Organization.

On March 30, 1946, the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture, meeting in Rome, adopted without dissenting vote a resolution prepared by the United States Government and presented to the committee by the American and British representatives on the committee. This resolution urged that each of the governments concerned authorize the signing on its behalf of a protocol for the purpose of dissolving the Institute, terminating the convention which created it, and transferring its functions and assets to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. The resolution also urged that the General Assembly of the Institute take action to authorize the permanent committee to take the necessary steps for this purpose.

The protocol, as recommended by the permanent committee of the institute, was opened for signature on March 30, 1946, and bears that date. It is this protocol of which a certified photostatic copy is enclosed herewith.

Article I of the protocol provides that from a date which is to be announced by the permanent committee of the institute, in accordance with article III, the convention of 1905 shall be no longer effective as between the parties to the protocol, and the institute (including the international forestry center) thereupon shall be brought to an end.

Article III provides for the giving of a notification by the permanent committee to the members of the institute when the duties assigned by article II of the protocol have been completed. It is provided further that the date of notification shall be deemed to be the date of termination of the convention of 1905 and also the date of the dissolution of the institute (including the center).

Article IV provides for the transfer to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the powers, rights, or duties attributed to the institute (including the center) by the provisions of certain international conventions, as listed in an annex to the protocol.

Article V sets forth the procedure by which a member of the institute which is not a signatory to the protocol may accede to the protocol.

Article VI contains provisions relating to the coming into force of the protocol. Pursuant to this article, the protocol shall come into force when it has been accepted by at least 35 governments members of the institute. Such acceptance may be effected by any one of three methods, namely, by signature alone when such signature is without a reservation in regard to ratification, by the deposit of an instrument of ratification in the case of signature with a reservation in regard to ratification, or by notice of accession in accordance with article V. The coming into force of the protocol for other governments, after the protocol has come into force as provided in the second paragraph of article VI, is governed by the third paragraph.

In the opinion of the Department of State, this protocol, together with the action to be taken by the General Assembly and the permanent committee of the institute, would accomplish the object mentioned in section 3 of the joint resolution of July 31, 1945, namely, the integration of the functions and resources of the institute with those of the Organization, in a legal and orderly manner, effecting "one united institution in such form as to provide an adequate research, informational, and statistical service for the industry of agriculture.

It is believed that, in order to be fully effective, the action of the United States of America with respect to this protocol should be completed as soon as practicable.

Respectfully submitted.

DEAN ACHESON,
Acting Secretary of State.

The Governments signatories to this Protocol,

Being parties to the Convention signed at Rome on June 7, 1905, creating the International Institute of Agriculture (hereinafter called the Institute),

Considering it desirable that the Institute (including the International Forestry Center, hereinafter called the Center) be dissolved and that the functions and assets thereof be transferred to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (hereinafter called the Organization), and

Being cognizant of the resolution of the Permanent Committee of the Institute, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

From the date to be announced by the Permanent Committee of the Institute in accordance with Article III of this Protocol, the Convention signed at Rome on June 7, 1905, by which the Institute was created, shall be no longer of any effect as between the parties to this Protocol, and the Institute (including the Center) thereupon shall be brought to an end.

ARTICLE II

The Permanent Committee of the Institute shall, in accordance with the directions of the General Assembly of the Institute, bring the affairs of the Institute (including the Center) to an end and for this purpose shall

(a) collect and bring together all assets of the Institute (including the Center) and take possession of the libraries, archives, records, and movable property thereof;

(b) pay and satisfy all outstanding debts and claims for which the Institute is liable;

(c) discharge the employees of the Institute and transfer all personnel files and records to the Organization;

(d) transfer to the Organization possession of and full title to the property in the libraries, archives, records, and all residual assets of the Institute (including the Center).

ARTICLE III

When the duties assigned to it by Article II of this Protocol have been completed, the Permanent Committee of the Institute shall forthwith, by circular letter, notify the Members of the Institute of the dissolution of the Institute (including the Center) and of the transfer of the functions and assets thereof to the Organization. The date of such notification shall be deemed to be the date of the termination of the Convention of June 7, 1905, and also the date of the dissolution of the Institute (including the Center).

ARTICLE IV

Upon bringing to an end the affairs of the Institute (including the Center) the powers, rights, or duties attributed to it by the provisions of the International Conventions listed in the Annex on this protocol, shall devolve upon the Organization; and the parties to this Protocol which are parties to the said conventions shall execute such provisions, insofar as they remain in force, in all respects as though they refer to the Organization in place of the Institute.

ARTICLE V

Any Member of the Institute which is not a signatory to this Protocol may at any time accede to this Protocol by sending a written notice of accession to the Director General of the Organization, who shall inform all signatory and acceding Governments of such accession.

ARTICLE VI

1. This Protocol shall not be subject to ratification in respect to any government unless a specific reservation to that effect is made at the time of signature.

2. This Protocol shall come into force upon its acceptance in respect to at least thirty-five Governments Members of the Institute. Such acceptance shall be effected by:

(a) signature without reservation in regard to ratification, or

(b) deposit of an instrument of ratification in the archives of the Organizaiton by Governments on behalf of which this Protocol is signed with a reservation in regard to ratification, or

(c) notice of accession in accordance with Article V.

3. After coming into force in accordance with paragraph 2 of this Article, this Protocol shall come into force for any other Government a Member of the Institute.

(a) on the date of signature on its behalf, unless such signature is made with a reservation in regard to ratification, in which event it shall come into force for such Government on the date of deposit of its instrument of ratification, or

(b) on the date of the receipt of the notice of accession, in the case of any non-signatory Government which accedes in accordance with Article V.

In witness whereof the duly authorized representatives of their respective Governments have met this day and have signed the present protocol, which is drawn up in the French and English languages, both texts being equally authentic, in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Organization. Authenticated copies shall be furnished by the Organization to each of the signatory and acceding Governments and to any other Governments which, at the time this Protocol is signed, is a Member of the Institute.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I inquire of the Chair whether there are any nominations on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there is nothing on the calendar except treaties.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 2, 1946, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 1, 1946

The House met at 11:30 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever.

Amen.

By unanimous consent, the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 29, was considered as read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6477. An act to amend section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and section 3 of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act, as amended, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2280. An act to amend the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act to provide a secondary market for farm loans made under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, and for other purposes;

S. 2307. An act to provide that every Saturday shall be a holiday for banks and building and loan associations in the District of Columbia; and

H. J. Res. 156. Joint resolution to extend the succession, leading powers, and the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6739. An act making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. MEAD, Mr. MURDOCK, Mr. WHITE, Mr. BALL, and Mr. BRIDGES to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6777. An act making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. BRIDGES, and Mr. GURNEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6496) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 12, 19, and 62 to the foregoing bill.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had on June 29, 1946, examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6682. An act to amend sections 81, 82, and 83, and to repeal section 84 of chapter IX of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory therof and supplementary thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that pursuant to the authority granted him on Saturday, June 29, 1946, he did, on Sunday, June 30, 1946, sign the following enrolled bill of the House:

H. R. 6682. An act to amend sections 81, 82, and 83, and to repeal section 84 of chapter IX of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 33 minutes a. m.) the House stood in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 11 o'clock and 42 minutes a. m.

The President of the United States, accompanied by a committee of escort of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall and took the seat reserved for him in front of the Speaker's rostrum.

The SPEAKER. The Senate and House of Representatives, in joint session, with their invited guests, are assembled to pay tribute to the memory of one of the great Presidents of our Republic—a man beloved by millions, not only in his country, but in every nation of the world. In these simple services we wish to keep in remembrance something of the life, character, and public services of Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

INVOCATION

Rev. JAMES SHERA MONTGOMERY, D. D., the Chaplain of the House of Representatives. Let us bow our heads in a moment of devotional silence.

(There followed a moment of devotional silence.)

Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy holy spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee, and worthily magnify Thy holy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

O Thou who art the Father of us all, in whose sight a thousand years are but as yesterday, we ponder the strange tidings of destiny, in which are mingled joy and sorrow. We pray fervently that Thy spirit may possess our souls so that no selfish passion may hinder us from knowing Thy will and no weakness from doing it.

Today we are assembled to give tribute and honor to him who strove to create a new era of brotherhood for our country and the races of earth. His was the sympathetic heart and open mind for those who are scourged by the ills of misfortune and affliction. For him the winds did not speak more swiftly to the giant oak than to the humblest human flower by the wayside. As we contemplate the humane purpose in the life of Thy servant, grant that we, renewed and cheered, may turn to our particular tasks and ever stand for the maintenance of spiritual integrity of our land; and walking with Thee, may find the ways of peace and concord. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

INTRODUCTION OF MR. WINANT

The SPEAKER. The joint committee of the Congress has invited the Honorable John Gilbert Winant, a close friend of the late President, our former Ambassador to Great Britain, and now the United States representative on the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, to deliver the address on this occasion. It is my privilege to present Mr. Winant.

ADDRESS BY THE HONORABLE JOHN GILBERT WINANT

Mr. WINANT. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, and distinguished guests, it has been the custom of the Congress to set aside a day for appropriate exercises in commemoration of the life, character, and public services of Presidents of the United States who have died. This day has, therefore, been set aside in memory of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, thirty-first President, who took office at the gravest moment of an economic crisis which threatened the security of the Republic, who twice preserved his country, was three times reelected to its Presidency, and died in office in his country's greatest war, having lived to see the victory assured but not to share it.

The final estimate of Franklin Roosevelt's achievement will not be made by us or in this room. It will be made elsewhere, and later, and by men who will judge all of us, not him alone. What Lincoln's message of December '62 said of his listeners in this same House is true of us:

> We cannot escape history. We of this Congress and this administration will be remembered in spite of ourselves. No personal significance or insignificance can spare one or another of us. The fiery trial through which we pass will light us down in honor or dishonor to the latest generation.

But though we cannot pay the final tribute which time reserves to others, we can do what later generations may not do. We can speak of Franklin Roosevelt as a living man. All of us in this room, or almost all, are men and women who knew him—men, for the most part, who served with him in government in this country's greatest war. Some of us loved him well. Some of us opposed him earnestly. Many in this room bore responsibility at his request; sat in council with him. There is not one of us here who did not watch him near or at a distance, privately or publicly, in the great trial which was his life.

Greatness in a man, as in a mountain, requires distance to be seen. The things a man has lived by take their place beside his actions in the true perspective of time, and the inner pattern of his life becomes apparent. In the long range, it is the things by which we live that are important, although the timing and circumstance play their part. This was true in the life of Franklin Roosevelt. He might have been speaking of himself, as well as of the country, when he said:

> To some generations much is given; of some generations much is expected. This generation has a rendezvous with destiny.

He played a great part in great events. He was his country's President and undisputed leader at a great and decisive moment in its history. Under his Presidency, the Republic reached the position of principal importance and power among the nations of the earth which it now holds. It may be, indeed, though God forbid, that the power to which the Republic then reached was the high power of its destiny: only we, the living, can determine whether that be so.

These are the facts of history which no man disputes. But greatness does not lie in the association—even the dominating association—with great events. Events have an impersonal inertia of their own and a nation is something other than the purpose of its officers of state. Greatness lies in the man and not the times; the times reflect it only. Greatness lies in the proportion.

In Franklin Roosevelt the qualities we knew were these—we who worked with him and watched him. He loved mankind. There was no one in public life in our time who had the confidence of a greater part of the people of the earth than Franklin Roosevelt. He had their confidence not only because he believed in them as men and women, but because he expected much of them as men and women. The world to him was not composed of nations only, nor the nations of classes. He did not believe in abstractions. He believed in individual human beings. The compact, as Walt Whitman put it, was always with individuals. The decisions, whether in war or in peace, were decisions which affected the lives of individuals. The friendships, the dissensions, the agreements were individual friendships, individual dissensions, individual agreements. He loved men, but he loved them to be free, to be themselves.

He was brave. There is no man in this room—not those who saw him in the weakest moments of a frightful illness—not those who saw him in the most terrible moments of the war—there is not one of us who can say that he saw Franklin Roosevelt afraid.

He was steadfast. Once the decision had been made, he stood to it. Strong-willed and stubborn of purpose, he chose the men and framed the plans to bring to bear upon his country's enemies the full and overwhelming power of its strength, turning the first and terrible defeats to victories unprecedented in the history of war. Those who know of their own knowledge what risks he had to take, what burden of responsibility he had to bear, know how to estimate his steadfastness.

He saw the facts and faced them. Even in the brief perspective of a year we have learned how well he saw the facts of danger to his country. At a time when few men other than he, whether in positions of responsibility or not, understood the meaning of the history of our time, he understood it. We know now from the mouths and records of our enemies how well he understood. At a time when it was intellectually unpopular and politically dangerous to face the facts, he faced them. Neither the initial indifference of many among our people upon whose understanding he must have counted, nor a campaign of personal vilification in certain sections of our press, rarely equaled in any country, deterred him. He carried the distasteful burden of an unpopular awakening and brought the people, not of his own country only, but of the democratic world, to see their danger while yet there was time—how little time—to save themselves and save the world they lived in.

He dared to act. It is not always that those who have the courage to see have the courage to act on what they see. Franklin Roosevelt acted. In two great crises, one within, the other without, his acts changed history. That the confidence of the American people in themselves and in their Nation was restored and strengthened by the vigor and decisiveness of his action of 1933, all of us here know, for many have shared in that action and remember well. That Britain was saved to fight the war through by the courage and decisiveness of his action of 1940 we know also. None of us who knew of that decision and its consequences can forget it now that the war is won.

He believed. There was no American of his time who believed more deeply in America than he, and no believer in democracy who had a firmer faith in man. Freedom to him was not a word but a reality; not a sentiment to which men might aspire, but a reality they might possess. The reaffirmations of the rights of man to which he committed his administration and his country in the domestic and the foreign crises of his years as President were reaffirmations not of word but fact. They stand with the great charters of mankind.

And finally, and most important of all perhaps for us who have outlived him, he dared to hope. There was never a time in the dark years of the depression, of the black years of the war, when he lost hope. And as the end of the war drew near, and the end of his life with it, his hope grew greater, grew beyond the war, beyond the victory to peace. He dared to hope for peace, to believe in peace, and to act for peace. Young in heart himself, he always thought of his country as young also, as the New World, as the builder of new worlds of peace. Believer in man, and believer therefore in men, he thought of this Republic of ours as part of that greater republic of mankind on which alone a true peace can be rested. He never thought the labor would be easy. He never questioned—he least of all men—that differences and difficulties would arise. But neither did he cease to hope. Nor would he now.

These then were his qualities as President and foremost citizen of the United States. Brave, steadfast, one who dared to see the facts, to face them, and to act; one who believed, who hoped. Whatever verdict history writes down; this much we know who knew him—that he was a man. God give us heart and will to take this Nation as he left it—not only powerful, not only rich but young and hopeful and confident and believing and strong—God give us heart and will to take this Nation forward as he meant to take it to a new, more daring future, a new world of peace.

Mr. Robert Merrill sang The Lord's Prayer.

TAPS

Taps was sounded by Mr. Edward L. Master, principal musician, United States Marine Corps.

PRAYER AND BENEDICTION

The Reverend Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., Chaplain of the United States Senate, offered the following prayer and benediction:

God of the living and of the living dead, in a realm where beyond these voices and party cries there is peace and a pure plane of appraisal where the motives and deeds of men are weighed in juster scales than ours, and where the souls of the righteous are in Thy hands and belong to the undivided nation forever:

We thank Thee for the life of this servant of Thine and of humanity who led the Republic in the days of its most crucial test and that for the world's fairest hopes he was a word made flesh in a torn and tormented generation. We give Thee thanks that while others slept Thou didst give him to see clearly that the vital issue was a slave world or a free world, and that Thou didst anoint him to make our America the arsenal of democracy's weapons for imperiled freedom everywhere.

Now that that foul tyranny is in dust and ashes we come to acknowledge in this Chamber, where with failing physical strength and faltering voice he gave a last account of his stewardship, that among the shining memories of the Nation he served will abide always the heritage of his personal courage, his utter faith in democracy, and his passion to uplift the underprivileged and the exploited everywhere.

We think tenderly today of his heroic triumph over bodily affliction and disability, a precious gift he has bequeathed to all who with maimed bodies have returned from the carnage to face the test he surmounted in the art of living. This memorial hour we would listen to his parting words, his marching orders, as Commander in Chief, as, being dead, he yet speaketh:

"Let us move forward with a strong and active faith, remembering that the only limit to our realization of tomorrow is our doubts of today."

We are grateful that in Thy providence before he ceased at once to live and to work he knew that triumph was perching on Allied banners, and that every white cross on far-stretching God's acres under alien skies was a belfry for the chimes of victory.

And now, under the spell of his example, with the elixir of his winged words still ours, we pray that when for us all the voices that praise or blame grow faint and drift away, Thou wilt give us to know that Thy everlasting arms are still there beneath us. At the last, when the fever of life here is over, bring us all to the homeland of Thy eternal love: In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will, working in you that which is well pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen.

JOINT SESSION DISSOLVED

The SPEAKER. The joint session of the two Houses is now dissolved.

The President and his Cabinet, Mr. Winant, the members of the late President Roosevelt's Cabinet, the Diplomatic Corps, Mrs. Roosevelt and members of the late President Roosevelt's family, the Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the governors of States and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the Chief of Staff to the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, the Chief of Staff of the Army, the commanding general of the Army Ground Forces, the Chief of Naval Operations, the Commandant of the Marine Corps, the Commandant of the Coast Guard, the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Members of the Senate retired.

Thereupon, at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., the joint session of the two Houses was dissolved.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will stand in recess until 2 p. m. today.

There was no objection.

Accordingly, at 12 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m., the House stood in recess until 2 p. m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 2 o'clock p. m.

GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS AND INDEPENDENT EXECUTIVE AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, 1947

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6777, an act making appropriations for Government corporations and independent executive agencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the chairman of the committee going to bring this back in disagreement on some of these appropriations for power projects and the construction of a fertilizer plant? They were never considered by this body.

Mr. WHITTEN. We are going into conference and I would hate to say in advance what the conferees will agree on. Of course, I cannot tell the gentleman at this time what action may be taken by the committee of conference or what kind of a report we may bring in. I am merely asking for the appointment of conferees.

Mr. RICH. You have there the construction of a Government fertilizer plant in Alabama. Is that going to be retained in the conference report?

Mr. WHITTEN. All I can say to the gentleman is that the conferees will confer on the matter and we will have to wait until action is taken on it.

Mr. RICH. Unless you bring that back in disagreement so the House will vote on it, I am going to object.

Mr. WHITTEN. I cannot speak for the conferees. All I can do is to request the appointment of conferees so that we can go into conference with the Senate.

Mr. RICH. Unless you will agree to use your influence to bring that back in the House, then I object.

Mr. WHITTEN. Does the gentleman mean to say that he would bind the conferees in advance of their meeting?

Mr. RICH. I am opposed to the Government setting up a fertilizer plant or any other kind of plant. I am not going to permit it to go through by unanimous consent at this time. I am against the Government going into business in competition with private enterprise. That is communism.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WHITTEN. If the gentleman will withhold his objection, I would like to make a further statement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withhold his objection?

Mr. RICH. I withhold the objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. I am not making a request to approve the report. This is for the appointment of conferees for the very purpose that the gentleman has in mind, and that is to consider the amendments which the Senate put in the bill. It does not have to do with approving the conference report at all.

Mr. RICH. Will you bring it back in disagreement?

Mr. WHITTEN. I cannot promise the gentleman what action the committee will take. I can speak only for myself. We will go into the matter.

Mr. RICH. Poll your committee and find out.

Mr. WHITTEN. I am sorry but the gentleman can pursue whatever course seems advisable to him, but I cannot poll the committee in advance.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LABOR AND FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY APPROPRIATIONS, 1947

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6739, an act making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. HARE, TARVER, ROONEY, NEELY, ENGEL of Michigan, KEEFE, and H. CARL ANDERSEN.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL ACT, 1942

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 689 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That notwithstanding the provisions of any other rule of the House immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 371, extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942), as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, and all points of order against said joint resolution are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently no quorum is present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call, 345 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENDING EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL AND STABILIZATION ACT

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 7 minutes. I shall later on yield the usual 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order House Joint Resolution 371. It provides for 1 hour of general debate, after which the resolution will be read for amendment. Points of order against the resolution have been waived.

ACTION UNUSUAL

Some Members may ask whether the action of the Rules Committee was unusual. I will say without waiting for the query, yes, it is, but we have precedents for the action that has been taken by the Rules Committee. You will recall that a rule was given to the Case bill, though it had not yet been introduced and had no number, while the bill made in order by this rule, House Joint Resolution 371, was already formally before the House.

The Committee on Banking and Currency was precluded under the rules from calling a meeting to consider the joint resolution that was introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE]. Realizing the importance and the seriousness of conditions that existed throughout our country, I called a meeting of the Rules Committee, and I am pleased to say that I am thankful to the majority members of the committee that they agreed to report this rule making the joint resolution in order. They, too, realized that it is of the greatest importance that action be taken without delay.

THIS BILL OF VAST IMPORTANCE

As I stated, it was my intention to call up the resolution Saturday afternoon, but before we had an opportunity to act we were informed that the Senate had adjourned. Consequently there was no benefit to be derived in urging the House to act Saturday.

I consider that this joint resolution before us is of such vast importance to the American people that I expect all fair-minded Members, whether on this side of the aisle or on the other side, who have the interest of the American people at heart, and the interest of the consumers at heart, will vote for the rule and will vote for the joint resolution, without trying to delay action unnecessarily.

NEWS SHOWS PRICES SKYROCKET

Mr. Speaker, the facts stated in the President's message are so clear and so convincing that I feel all of us, without regard to party affiliation, must realize the need for immediate action to save the country from plunging into a ruinous inflation.

If there are any remaining doubts as to the need for continuation of price control, surely a perusal of the day's news will convince the most skeptical. The majority of American businessmen are anxious to save the Nation from a boom that can end only in their own economic injury, but there are always some who, with a reckless disregard for their own and their country's welfare, will "get while the getting's good."

BEEF AT $1.75—NYLONS, $1.95

I have just been handed a brief summary of news from the news tickers. Let me mention a few of the items:

New York: Hindquarters of beef selling at 60 cents a pound wholesale, including waste, forces retail price up to $1.75 a pound.

Rhode Island: Nylons up from $1.35 to $1.95.

Chicago: Livestock up $1 to $5 per hundredweight.

New York: Cotton up $4 a bale.

New Orleans: Cotton up $5 a bale.

Chicago: Corn up 41 cents, selling at $1.85.

Boston: Room rentals up $5 to $10 weekly; residence rentals up, for instance, from $36 monthly to $45 monthly.

Memphis: Rents up 100 percent.

Philadelphia: Rents up. Example—from $90 to $150 a month, effective immediately, despite legal provision of 30-day notice.

St. Louis: Rents up 15 to 30 percent.

Chicago: Some rents more than doubled.

Miami: In one apartment hotel rent increased from $55 monthly to $160 monthly; maid and linen service eliminated.

Laguna Beach, Calif.: Resort rentals changed from $35 monthly to $10 a day.

BUTTER SELLING AT 99 CENTS

Here in the District of Columbia frying and roasting chickens are up 14 cents a pound. Oranges have jumped 50 cents a case. Fresh fruits and vegetables are selling to the highest bidders, with all price tags removed. Butter is selling at 99 cents in some stores in Washington and at $1.10 in Maryland. The price of scallops and crab meat advanced 35 percent. Tires went up from $16.25 to $21.75.

These, as I have explained, are merely news stories hot off the ticker, and you will read more details in today's and tomorrow morning's papers. I am told that some restaurants have increased prices 50 percent.

SUCH ADVANCES UNFAIR

I think it is unfair and un-American on the part of the irresponsible dealers responsible for these breath-taking advances to take advantage of the emergency; and I appeal to the decent dealers, if they have their own interest and the interest of the country at heart, to desist, and to comply with the appeals of the President of the United States and their own business and trade leaders.

Surely they should realize that if a wild inflation comes with its aftermath of depression and panic it is the small businessman who will suffer most and the small manufacturer who will be wiped out.

SMALL COMPETITORS CAN BE WIPED OUT

It is not unreasonable to suspect that the enmity of the National Association of Manufacturers for price control is based in part on the belief of the huge manufacturing interests that they can eliminate competition, and their virtual monopoly can be made absolute.

Certainly it will inure to the benefit of all business and all manufacturers if they will hold prices in check and not permit themselves to be swayed by greed to increase profits unfairly and without justification.

WARNING TO CONGRESS

At the same time these newspaper stories are a grave warning to us here in Congress to act promptly and fairly in protection of the people. Perhaps some of those who voted to sustain the President's veto did so under the misleading pressures of the National Association of Manufacturers and similar organizations and the powerful propaganda lobbies they have maintained to fight price controls. Surely they can see now that the anti-OPA lobbies have viciously misrepresented the facts.

As I stated here Saturday, this should not be a fight between Republicans and Democrats; it is a struggle between the desire of the people to make a living, and the desire of selfish interests to make a killing.

SHORTAGES ARTIFICIAL

I am not opposed to people making a fair return on their investments, Mr. Speaker. I believe in free enterprise; I myself have been in business. But free enterprise cannot be free if it uses its freedom to unjustifiably gouge the American people, as obviously some people in business are doing right now in this critical situation; and if that kind of freedom of enterprise is long indulged in it will lose its freedom entirely in the ultimate crash between the just anger of the people and being gobbled up by powerful trusts and monopolies who can ride out the crash.

We know that in all too many instances there has been no real shortages of goods where shortages were supposed to exist. The goods are being withheld from the market by greedy speculators and hoarders. If the food, the fabrics, and scores and scores of other high-demand articles had been put onto the market as they were produced there would have been few real shortages.

BUYERS CAN STRIKE ALSO

The American people can play that game too.

If the speculators think they can make a killing in the next few days, they are mistaken, because I know the consumers of the country will resent it, and they too can strike and can withhold their buying until these greedy men come to their senses.

I presume that my Republican friends who have been disarmed by the President's honest, straightforward, and positive presentation of evidence and facts will revert to name calling, and will charge that the Washington bureaucrats want OPA to be a continuing and permanent agency. Such insinuations and other unjustified charges are deplorable; they are unfair and anything but statesmanlike.

OPA DOES NOT DESTROY FREE ENTERPRISE

They will shout that free enterprise is being destroyed. I ask them: Have we free enterprise today when a few large groups can dominate the basic prices of everything we consume, and can withhold their products from market while their warehouses are bulging with unsold merchandise, in order to create artificial shortages and gouge the American public with falsely inflated prices? They willfully close their eyes and refuse to see that we are on the brink of economic crisis and chaos. Their shortsighted policies cannot aid them in gaining political advantage in the next political campaign; on the other hand, the just anger of the American people may well consign them to political oblivion for years to come.

I hold in my hand over 350 telegrams, and I have received thousands of letters and petitions to extend OPA in the face of continuously rising prices; how will millions of people with small incomes exist if the cost of living is constantly increased and their incomes are held constant?

IN ROOSEVELT'S MEMORY, EXTEND OPA

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me remind my colleagues of the prayers we offered this morning in memory of the greatest and most humanitarian of all our Presidents, who gave his life for the common people, and to express the hope that in his memory and in his example fair and honest consideration will be given to the legislation before us by all Members, even by the bitterest opponents of OPA. I know that if he were with us today he would strongly urge us to act favorably, and to extend price control, not permanently, but for at least 1 year. That this will be done I am sure, after you have seen what avaricious landlords, manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers have done in less than a day without price control.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order consideration of House Joint Resolution 371, extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended. All points of order against said resolution are waived. General debate shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue for not more than one hour, to be divided and controlled equally by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, after which it shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

I am opposed to this resolution because, like everyone here, I am convinced that unless Congress completely "bends its knees" in subjugation to the bureaucrats administering OPA, that we unfortunately cannot have any price-control legislation. After listening to the veto message of the President, after listening to his radio message to the American people, probably written by the OPA bureaucrats, it should be obvious to all of us that there can be no compromise, no mutual understanding. It should be apparent that there is only one way to settle this controversy to satisfy the President and that is for the legislative branch of our Government to completely capitulate and surrender to the executive branch. After 14 years of association with you, I feel certain that this you will not do. By so doing we would be weaklings. We would not be entitled to the respect of those who send us here. We would be surrendering a principle that undoubtedly would return to haunt us. Nothing would be more detrimental to our system of Government than to have the Congress of the United States meekly accept the dictates of another branch. By so doing we would be nullifying the protection of one-third of our branches.

On the floor of this House our beloved Speaker stated when this legislation was before us—I quote—"that in his opinion Congress would not pass a continuing resolution." I agreed with that statemen. I am of the opinion now, that even should we pass this resolution, the price-control legislation cannot be enacted because the great majority of the people of this country want less controls and the membership of this body knows it. With this in mind, I ask you how can legislation be enacted. Is it not useless for us to spend our time attempting to do something that we know to be impossible. Yes, we can pass this resolution extending the act for 20 days during which time the Banking and Currency Committee can endeavor to present us with another bill, a bill which I predict after consideration by this body will have less controls, and will consequently be vetoed by the President. We know the feelings of the other body and we can imagine the importance of days of debate over on the other side of this Capital.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask you this. How can this Congress be honest with itself, how can we be consistent, if after months of profound study and consideration, we now about face and pass hurried legislation within the next few days with no additional evidence available, but with exactly opposite meanings and purposes? It should be obvious to all of us that the executive branch wants what it wants, nothing we will pass will receive approval except a measure free from our judgment; nothing but a measure as dictated by the bureaucratic administrators of the OPA. I am not willing to throw aside the judgment of this body to appease these bureaucrats. I am unwilling to accept the arbitrary position of the bureaucrats that either Congress is unfit and incompetent or dishonest.

Mr. Speaker, we must never forget that Mr. Truman has ignored the advice and council of his leaders on Capital Hill. I feel that he must know that you presented him for his signature the best compromise possible. Why should he subject you to humiliation?

Now this administration is attempting to scare Congress by a flood of telegrams. I refer to the many communications we have all received the past 48 hours. In answer to these last minute messages I would refer you to the many letters you have received from thousands of your people who have been penalized by the many unfair practices of those charged with the administration of OPA. In this grave hour we must not forget them.

Neither must we forget the months of hard work of the members of our Banking and Currency Committee. Weeks after weeks they heard conscientious and patriotic Americans from all walks of life. Who were these people? Small businessmen, manufacturers, consumers, spokesmen for agriculture, stockraisers, lumbermen, laborers, administrators for OPA. The measure Congress passed was passed after considered judgment. One that passed the acid test of careful and patriotic thought. Now do we wish to send them back to bring forth a measure for which they could have no respect? That is all that is acceptable to the administration bureaucrats.

Although, I believe that we should not take off basic price controls which would permit speculation; that we should not take off rent controls I voted against the vetoed bill because while the President thought it too moderate, I thought it too severe. I was of the opinion that it left too many unwarranted powers, too many control decisions to those administering the act. Therefore, last Saturday, along with many others I found myself in an ususual position. I sustained the veto of the President because it was too drastic—while he vetoed it because it was not drastic enough. I repeat, I was not alone in this predicament. I merely mention it now in attempting to illustrate the futility of our labors. A compromise is impossible.

Mr. Speaker, I trust this resolution will be voted down. Only by casting aside our considered judgment after extensive hearings and by shirking our responsibilities can legislation demanded by the President be enacted. For one I am not willing to do this.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is it not a fact that OPA legislation died at midnight last night?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is true.

Mr. RICH. Then could something that is dead be continued? Would it not require entirely new legislation to revive it?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Well, that has me also confused. I repeat, it is merely shadow-boxing if we force a committee to go back, then come in here and lose all its respect and the respect of the Congress if they make an about-face and bring in new legislation which they will be compelled to do if they desire Presidential approval.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would like to ask the gentleman, why is this resolution worded as it is, extending the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, rather than the enactment and continuance of those acts?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I cannot answer the gentleman because the Banking and Currency Committee never met. The chairman of that committee came up and asked on his own motion for a rule. I do not believe they even took the trouble of going before the Banking and Currency Committee to ask the desire of the other Members.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Along the same line as the question raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, this resolution simply amends certain clauses of two laws which are now dead. Should we not, first, reenact the entire law, then amend certain parts of that law?

Mr. GRAHAM. We are dealing with two acts, not one.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I reiterate, I cannot understand why we should force the Committee on Banking and Currency to go back and attempt to bring in legislation when, according to the President's veto message and his message over the radio, there can be no compromise. We know full well that the people of the United States want less control and the bureaucratic administrators of the OPA want more control. Are we not shadow boxing here by taking the time of the Congress to even discuss this proposition?

Mr. GEELAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GEELAN. The gentleman is not making a correct statement. The gentleman states the committee will be doing an about-face on this measure. The committee did not bring the bill in as it was passed by the House; therefore the committee could very well stand on the bill that it reported.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I may say to the gentleman that in the event the committee comes in with another bill there will be less control than in the bill vetoed by the President and the President will more hastily veto the next bill that is presented.

Mr. GEELAN. What the President is asking for is to allow the people of the United States to tell the Congress of the United States how they feel about this, and they should be given that opportunity.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, for the past 48 hours there has been a flood of telegrams coming to us. May I also ask you to just read the mail you have received over the past 3 or 4 years. Read again the letters that you have received from your small business people, from the consumers, from the farmers, from the small manufacturers, and that will give you every reason to vote against the pending resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I know that all of us feel badly because the President of the United States did not follow the advice of the leadership of this House and Senate. I know that those gentlemen fought gamely. Again, perhaps, we shall see the spectacle over in the United States Senate where they will be days and days not settling anything, because we know that there cannot be any compromise on the OPA, that it is a dead issue. The only compromise is to pass a bill giving to the President of the United States and these bureaucrats everything they desire. This, in my opinion, the Congress will not do.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Why join the panic? Why not give the American producer a chance for freedom? This morning I had a telephone call from the Middle West and I was informed that just as the grain was beginning to move to the legitimate dealers so the people could have food, instead of going to bootleg distillers and other bootleggers, over the radio came the false announcement that Congress had passed a continuing resolution by unanimous consent immediately after 12 o'clock.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I say that every one knows that this is shadow boxing. There can be no compromise.

I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Michener.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I want to impress upon you the fact that at midnight on yesterday, by direction of the President of the United States and a minority of those Members of the House voting to support his veto, OPA ceased to exist.

There is no Office of Price Administration at this hour. Confusion and uncertainty reign supreme in the land. The President, in his veto message and in his radio speech to the country, predicted such dire results from the death of OPA that there is reason for prudent people to be alarmed. Reconversion has already been so delayed by strikes, misunderstandings, and the resulting lack of production, that a further period of uncertainty will surely make the picture worse. Yes, OPA is dead, but the President has indicated that he has a solution which he will ask the Congress to enact forthwith.

Mr. Speaker, there can be no stability warranting greater production, reasonable prices, and jobs for all during this hiatus. This controversy must be settled and settled as soon as possible.

We are confronted with a condition and not with a theory. For more than 5 months, the Congress has struggled valiantly with the OPA problem. We must not forget that there are three distinct lines of thought in the country. One group believes that our country has outlived the free enterprise system. They would have economic planning, implemented by bureaucratic control and regulation, from here on out. Another group would have none of price or rent control. They would wipe it out lock, stock, and barrel. Then there is another group in between, composed largely of those who are opposed to price control as a permanent part of the American system of government, and who believe that this war agency should be eliminated just as soon as the economy of the country will permit. They realize that when the Government entered upon the venture of supervising production, fixing prices, and regulating when our people can sow, when they can reap, when and where they can buy and sell, it got a bear by the tail, and it is an angry bear. Today he is going around in circles chasing his tail, and we must be mighty careful how we let loose; if we are not, certain groups of our people are going to get severely bitten. Those who have fixed incomes, as well as those who will not, or cannot strike to enforce their demands, must not be forgotten.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. All we are hoping is that the tail will not pull out.

Mr. MICHENER. I hope not, for if it does these groups will either get a hard fall, or a painful bite.

Mr. Speaker, while we have no OPA at this hour because of the Presidential edict, certainly the blame cannot attach to the Congress. True, the bill sent to the White House was a compromise. None of the three groups which I have mentioned had their way in writing it. As so forcibly stated to the House by our distinguished Speaker, it was the best compromise possible.

OPA was of value during the war. However, its administration has always been faulty. The Administrator has been arbitrary, unyielding, impractical, and domineering.

Chester Bowles, the Administrator, is an advertising man. His experience in the past has been that of a propagandist. He lacks practical business judgment and know-how to accomplish in the production field. In short, regardless of his intentions, he has been a failure as head of OPA. Certainly there are men of experience in the country who would do a better job. That is all water gone over the dam, however. Because of the attitude of Mr. Bowles, apparently supported by the President, all price control has been eliminated. Possibly we are attempting a futile thing. However, the President is pleading for just 20 days to work out a solution and bring before the Congress a new proposal that he says will be effective in the price-control and production field. If the future is to be judged by the past 5 months, the passage of this resolution will be but an idle gesture. Nevertheless, he may submit some simplified plan and name a new, practical administrator. There has been much over the radio and in the press within the last few days suggesting that Mr. William Jeffers, former rubber administrator, was being considered to take over OPA.

Somebody has responsibility for either proper administration of sensible price control or its abolition in a way that will not bring so much distress to our people. The Congress recognized this responsibility and sent to the President the best compromise possible. The President threw this handiwork out the window and pleads for but 20 days' additional time. Under present circumstances, this is the President's baby. In the meantime, he has told industry, labor, the farmers, little business, and big business to keep things in status quo for a few days until the Congress has time to consider his new plan. During that period we will have a sample of what is going to happen if price control is abruptly removed with nothing but moral suasion as an incentive.

For my part, I do not believe that the Congress should assume the responsibility which the President has assumed. Fifteen or twenty days is not a long time, it will pass very rapidly, and, unless the President has something up his sleeve that he has not yet shown to the Congress or to the country, there is little possibility of OPA's revival beyond the 20 days. This whole OPA matter is a hot potato and I do not propose to let the President hand it back to the Congress just for the sake of getting rid of it. As a practical matter, that is what his veto message amounted to. Be it remembered that this spiral of increased costs had its inception in the President's order requiring increases in wages and, thereby, in cost of production.

Evidently the President has been the recipient of a mess of bad advice. By his act destroying every vestige of OPA he has not only killed price control, he has taken rent control along with it. If rent control is desirable, and the President objected to other features of the bill, the rational course would have been to sign the bill, save what was good in it, and submit proposed changes. He pursued the other course. Indeed, his course is most unusual and lacks every element of cooperation between the Executive and the elected Representatives of the people. Who is Chester Bowles that he, an appointed bureaucrat, should tell the Congress that it must accept his dictation or there will be no OPA?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WILSON. Does the gentleman from Michigan feel that 20 days will give the President time to clear any price-control bill that this Congress would pass with Sidney Hillman and his "Red" outfit?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, possibly other members of the Rules Committee will discuss in some detail those from whom the President receives his advice, those with whom he clears. I have very definite views concerning some of these advisers, politicians, and self-seekers. However, that is beside the question here, and I do not want to inject anything political in these remarks. This should not be a political issue.

In conclusion, I want to reiterate that OPA should be done away with the very minute that this can be accomplished with safety to our country and without great suffering to our people. Prices have materially increased under OPA; they will continue to increase in some cases, with or without OPA. As production is stepped up, supply will come into balance with demand; and when that happens, there will be no more necessity for OPA.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I cannot feel that it is exactly fair for it to be said that the existing situation is the fault of the President. I think the record shows that the President of the United States months ago called to the attention of the Congress the desirability and necessity of doing something about the OPA. Congress did not do anything about it until just a few days ago.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the minority leader.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman why Congress did not act? Whose fault was it, probably, that Congress did not act?

Mr. CLARK. Probably a little on each side of the aisle.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Who has charge of the legislative program?

Mr. CLARK. I think the gentleman knows the Democrats do and probably will continue to do so for some time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The rest of this year.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I am very glad to have you assume responsibility.

Mr. CLARK. To be perfectly candid and frank about the matter, I was only making the point that I do not think Congress skirts are entirely clear in this matter. We have got into an unfortunate situation, but to the average American citizen it will not be reasonable or sensible that the Chief Executive and the Congress cannot get together and do something sensible and effective to prevent what is in my judgment the greatest economic crisis that has ever existed in the United States. If we do not do so, and the dire results that are entirely possible by reason of that neglect carry this Nation into economic chaos, we should not be unmindful of the fact that the whole world may be affected. Let us not forget that we are really the last sound, stable, and solvent Nation in the world today.

I think we ought to take this 20 days. The existing situation is as much or more our fault than it is that of the Chief Executive. We should not quibble about that. Let us vote this 20 days' extension and see if we cannot within that time do something that will meet the necessities of a grave situation.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the matter of the time just referred to by the gentleman from North Carolina, I think it might be well to call attention to the fact that the price-control extension was passed in the House of Representatives the 18th of April last, which was quite some time ago.

The President's veto of the OPA bill will make good news in Moscow, but his action shows a reckless disregard for the welfare of our country and of the views of the Congress, which represents our people, and his own party leaders in the Congress. Although he has insisted that the whims and the policies of the bureaucrats must be continued without correction, Mr. Truman's veto message expresses approval of many of the provisions of the bill which Congress sent him. The inconsistency in his attempted justification of his position causes him no apparent embarrassment.

The truth is the President is the misguided follower of the most violent partisans of the New Deal. They told him to abolish the War Labor Board last year and he did so. They told him the country faced deflation and they were wrong. They told him the Government should seize the steel industry and the coal mines and write labor contracts. He followed their lead. They told him labor should get wage increases and the employers should have no compensating price increases. They told him that producers could be made to produce at a loss—and shortages followed and production was paralyzed.

They told him the Government's erroneous fiscal policies must be pursued without correction, and no steps have been taken to correct the basic difficulties confronting us. The value of the dollar continued to decline.

Meanwhile these factors were mounting, and were forcing black markets and rising prices. OPA itself granted 824 industry-wide price increases since VE-day, and thousands of individual price adjustments which increased the cost of living.

Finally Congress acted and sent the President the Case bill, by an overwhelming vote. The New Deal politicians told him to veto it and he did so. Congress sent him the Hobbs bill and he says he has submitted it to the departments, which means the New Deal bureaucrats, for their advice. Congress sends him an OPA bill designed to deal realistically with the demands of a situation which the bureaucrats created. Once again they tell the President to override Congress, and the President responds accordingly. These things do not merely reflect incompetence and bungling. They are purposeful, willful acts designed to produce the very plight in which the country finds itself. They are part of a policy looking to demands for a nationalization of business and for a socialist economy. These New Dealers give impetus to their program through thousands of Government propagandists. They aim to destroy the Congress and to substitute bureaucracy and a Washington dominated and controlled economy.

The crisis confronting the country has been deliberately created. It is politically inspired to the end that government shall direct the American economy and control the American people. And the President has been victimized by the planners and the plotters who bring this about.

Congress is entitled to the support of the American people. This is their Congress—fighting for the people, for the American system, against the bureaucrats. The issue was inevitably bound to come to a head. The "Macedonian cry" we now hear is from the President—for the bureaucrats and the New Deal.

However, we have an immediate problem, the handling of which has tended further to division among the American people. It has been precipitated by the New Deal and left wing bureaucrats who have manned our agencies and our bureaus and who are the advisers to the President. How it happened, important though it be, must be set aside for further discussion under other circumstances. I feel that the important thing now for me as a legislator, is to recognize the practicalities and to do what I can for the immediate and best interests of the country under the conditions prevailing.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the resolution which we have before us provides for the extension of OPA until July 20, a period of 20 days, during which time it is hoped that the objections of the President to the extension bill passed by the Congress can be ironed out in a satisfactory manner. I very much hope that they can. I do not know whether the predictions of uncontrolled inflation will come to pass if OPA is not extended. No one else knows. But I am very much afraid that we would experience a period of inflationary prices in cost-of-living items that would be disastrous to the great masses of people who work on fixed salaries, wages, and fixed incomes. We must not take that chance. The differences between the Congress and the President must be composed in the interest of the welfare of the Nation. The greatest good for the greatest number demands retention of adequate but sensible price control.

Personally, I believe it desirable to continue price control for a period of 12 months, and I so voted when the bill was up in he House. I do not believe that any essential cost-of-living items should be arbitrarily lifted from price control, and so voted when the bill was before the House.

It has been said on high authority in both the Senate and the House, that if the President vetoed the bill passed by the Congress, there would be an end to price control, as the Congress would not yield on any of the questions in disagreement between the legislative and executive branches. The subject is too vital to the Nation to accept this defeatist attitude. We are confronted with a condition of the utmost gravity. Regardless of who is right, or who is wrong in the controversy, it is imperative that we rise above the personal animosities that have been engendered in this controversy, and do something that will control the prices of essential cost-of-living commodities until the natural law of supply and demand can again function.

I, therefore, strongly favor the resolution to extend the present act, pending further legislation. However, I do not believe that a 20-day extension will be effective. It has taken us nearly 6 months to get through the bill which was vetoed. Some months ago, I expressed on the floor of the House the hope that Congress would act promptly on this vital subject and not wait until the last minute and leave the Nation in the present uncertainty in which we find ourselves.

I do not believe, in the first place, that Congress can act calmly and adequately within the brief period of 20 days proposed in this resolution. In the second place, in all fairness to the administrators of the OPA, whatever changes are made in the law should be made far enough in advance of the effective date so that the OPA can have the opportunity to study them and be prepared to put them into effect when the law goes into operation. To pass an amended act and require the OPA to formulate its regulations and put them into effect overnight, or within a few days, places upon that agency an impossible task that would be unfair both to the agency and to the public, and would add to the confusion already existing.

I, therefore, suggest that the resolution be amended to extend the present law for a period of 60 days, instead of 20 days.

We can all sympathize with the impatience of the American people to be rid of the rigid, and often foolish and unfair, regulations, and the petty persecutions that some officials of the OPA have visited upon innocent people. But this question now before us is whether it is better to put up with the present annoyances, inconveniences and often injustices, or do away entirely with price control and take the chance of uncontrolled inflation with all of its attendant evils and sufferings.

I am not willing to take that chance and I say so with full knowledge and after extended investigation of the many just complaints that have been lodged against the administration of the OPA.

The Special Committee to Investigate Executive Agencies, of which I am chairman, held weeks of hearings on complaints of arbitrary and unlawful activities on the part of the OPA. We made several reports to the Congress, critical of the agency's arbitrary and capricious abuses of its authority. We thought and still think that it is highly desirable that these abuses be corrected, and corrected promptly. We have not hesitated to say so, either in our reports or in our conferences with Mr. Chester Bowles and his advisers. And yet, when it comes to the question of abolishing price control, or putting up with the inadequacies and injustices of its present administration, I unhesitatingly advise that we adopt an extension resolution for a period of 60 days, instead of 20 days, and settle down earnestly and calmly to a fair solution of the differences between the Congress and the President.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that this resolution is sufficient, in view of the fact that the OPA expired last night at midnight.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. I do not think anybody is going to try to violate this resolution if the Congress passes it and the President signs it. I think that is a question that is not practical.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman feel that it is good legislative practice to try to amend a law which has expired?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. As a matter of fact, the last paragraph in this resolution undertakes to revive the law. Whether it can do so constitutionally or not I do not answer; but I say that for all practical purposes it will revive the law.

Mr. COOLEY. Why would it not be well to amend the resolution so as to reenact the law if that is what you desire to do?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I feel very deeply about inflation. I said the other day and I say now that we passed a workable bill. I do not believe that we are going to be able to get any more rigid control bill than the one we passed. I am afraid the other body will insist on removing controls from all foods. The Members of this House do not realize how hard we did work to persuade the conferees of the Senate to leave controls on food. The conferees of the House were finally successful in persuading the conferees of the Senate to let controls stay on food, and I think they ought to be on food, clothing, and rents for a while longer.

I do not believe we are going to get a better bill.

I am satisfied that the bill that we passed would have worked.

I believe the President has made a mistake in vetoing the bill the conferees and the leaders of the House and Senate asked him to O. K., but if he thinks he can get a more rigid bill or if he thinks he can get any bill at all let us give him the time stipulated in this resolution, because I feel deeply we must have control on scarce commodities during this emergency. If we cannot get any more satisfactory bill for the present than we have passed, I believe if we repass the same bill the President, upon mature consideration, will sign it.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, when this rule came before the Rules Committee, and before it was brought to a vote, we discussed it rather thoroughly, and then when it was finally brought to a vote after the Senate had adjourned, I voted against it for several reasons. First of all, I questioned then, and I question now, whether the Congress, by House Joint Resolution 371, can legally and constitutionally extend a law that has already died, that has already expired, and that no longer exists; and I think the courts will have something to say about that.

Second, I examined, and questioned very carefully and fully, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] chairman of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, when he appeared before the Rules Committee last Saturday and asked for this rule. I asked him whether or not in his opinion the House could in the short space of 20 days prepare and enact price-control legislation that would be satisfactory to the Congress and to the President, when we have failed to do so after 4½ months of hard work and full consideration. The gentleman's answer was that he did not know. He said very frankly and very honestly that he could give the committee no assurances that any legislation could be presented which would be enacted by the Congress or approved by the President. And then, finally, I had this in mind: There is a fundamental issue involved, a fundamental difference of opinion, between the Chief Executive on the one hand and the Congress on the other. The Chief Executive has seen fit to veto the price-control legislation Congress has sent him, despite the sincere counsel and advice of the legislative leaders of his own party in the Congress that the measure was the best that could possibly be expected from the National Legislature, and should be signed by him. By his action the President, and he alone, killed price control, killed OPA, and killed rent control.

This difference exists between the executive and the legislative branch. We do not believe here that there should be a continuation of these permanent controls, of all these broad powers, but that there should be changes and amendments in the law; while the President has followed the advice of Chester Bowles, the bureaucrats and the left-wingers, and he takes the position that there should be no change, or practically no change, and that the powers, the broad and great authorities, that he has exercised, either directly or through his bureaucratic agencies, should be continued, perhaps indefinitely, because he asks that they be continued until June 30 next year without any real break in subsidy payments.

That is the fundamental difference and that is the fundamental issue before us. So I suggested, and I did so, not facetiously at all, but in all seriousness, to the Democratic leadership present before the Rules Committee that the one honest, fair thing to do to settle this issue was to bring in an extendure resolution, not for 20 days, because we know nothing is going to be done in the 20 days. In fact, we are back, right now, where we were when we came in the first of last February, and at the end of 20 days we will be back again where we came in today, in exactly the same position we are now. So I suggested that the administration and the leadership, which has the voting power in, and control of, the committees having jurisdiction of this measure, bring in a simple resolution extending price control "as is" for 6 months, or until December 31, 1946, and give the Congress and the people the opportunity to pass upon the clear-cut issue whether they want to continue OPA as it is, or want something else.

Mr. Speaker, this is a Democratic administration. The President of the United States is the head of the Democratic Party. He has seen fit to deliver a political veto, and a political message to the people of the United States in his recent address. This Congress, the House and the Senate, is controlled by heavy Democratic majorities. We have able Democratic leadership in this and the other body, and I am sure that regardless of what any of us on the Republican side, on the minority side, of this House, or the other body, might think about this legislation, the Democratic leadership and majority in the Congress of the United States can enact any kind of legislation they want. It is a strong leadership. They are able, they have the capacity to lead. So, let the Democratic leadership demonstrate its capacity and assume that responsibility.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Let the great majority here measure up to its responsibility, let them assume the leadership in this great hour of crisis, and enact the kind of legislation it wants regardless of what anyone else may think about it. Then the country can decide next November, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday, whether it has been right or wrong. That is the challenge. It is their responsibility. Let them live up to that responsibility.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman support an amendment to extend it say to January 20, 1947? That will be 3 weeks after the new Congress reassembles.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No; I would not. But that does not make any real difference. You have the votes on your side of the aisle. You have the responsibility. You have a majority of 50 or more in the House, and 18 or 20 in the Senate. Why do you not use those majorities, if you can control and order your own party and if you have the leadership that you should have, for you are next to the ranking member of your commmittee, and enact the kind of legislation you want? That is your right, your duty and your responsibility.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, it is all too plain that our American economy is once more rushing toward the brink of disaster. Already the danger signals so well remembered from the debacle of 1929 are unfurled.

If any added proof is needed of this warning let me read into the RECORD excerpts from an Associated Press dispatch of Saturday last on the situation on the New York Stock Exchange.

The following table shows some industrial issues which have capped their 1929 highs—adjusted where stock splits have occurred:

	High, 1929	High, 1946
Celanese Corp	57⅞	83½
Chrysler	135	141
Douglas Aircraft	45½	108⅞
Loew's, Inc	28⅛	41
May Department Stores	54¼	70
Phillips Petroleum	47	73¼
Sears, Roebuck	45¼	49⅝
Swift & Co	34¾	41⅛
U. S. Gypsum	91⅜	132
U. S. Rubber	65	80
Wilson & Co	13½	19⅞

In late June the Associated Press average of 20 industrial stocks stood at about 105, or only 29 percent below the 1929 record of 146.9. At the 1946 high it was 25 percent under 1929.

The current level of the market as indicated by the Associated Press averages is corroborated by other well-known price gages.

Barron's index, based on the market value of all shares listed in the New York Stock Exchange, was 23 percent below the 1929 peak on May 31, last date for which the index was computed. The industrial component was only 14 percent under 1929.

Standard & Poor's weekly index of 354 industrials was 19.8 percent below 1929 on June 12 this year.

Stock market analysts have put two labels on the 1946 market: First, it is an inflation market; second, it is one of the thinnest markets on record.

The logical sequence to uncontrolled prices, Mr. Speaker is a runaway market in which millions of Americans will again lose billions of their wartime savings.

The Congress cannot ignore this situation. We must set up at once a sensible procedure to check this inflationary hurricane. To do this effectively, the Congress must have some definite commitment from our manufacturers, processors and from labor groups that the "line" once set by legislation will be strictly adhered to. Any other course is fraught with grave danger to our future economy.

As a friend of 20,000,000 union workingmen, I urge the House to vote approval on the pending rule.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the majority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] are very clever, and as we follow them through the sum and substance of them would be that a minority party in our constitutional set-up has no responsibility; that under our set-up the minority party is an opposition party like it is in any other parliamentary government. Under our form of government, the minority party has its responsibilities, the responsibility of constructively criticizing, the responsibility of constructively proposing, and the responsibility of supporting good legislation. My good friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] thoroughly realizes that, but in his genial and able and subtle remarks he seeks to throw this responsibility only on the majority party, in this case the Democratic Party, a theory that has no place under our two-party system.

The debate has been very fine, and I am not going to enter into the realm of politics, except the brief observation I just made, which is not of a partisan nature. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] very ably presented the situation from the minority angle. Other Members from the majority side have spoken.

We are faced with a condition and not a theory. I am not going to blame Congress or blame anyone else for the present situation. Months ago I saw the probability of it, and I sent a memorandum around urging early action in committee. Now, as practical men, we realize that when a minority of any committee wants to delay, that it is pretty difficult for the majority and the chairman of a committee to prevent delay. You cannot accuse Members, whether they are of the minority party or of the majority party, of filibustering in the committee when they want to have any number of witnesses appear before them. Those who have been here for years are too well acquainted, from a practical angle, with the operation of committees to know that you cannot arbitrarily cut short hearings when a minority, whether political, or a combination of Republican and Democratic Members constituting a minority, want to have hearings held. In any event, hearings went on, and on, and on, in this branch and in the other branch, and the bill was presented to the President Saturday, June 29, with the law expiring on Sunday, June 30, at midnight.

The President of the United States immediately sent back his veto.

There has been some misunderstanding, as far as I am concerned, about the leaders' talk. I frankly told the President that I thought it was a very poor bill that we had presented to him. If I may use the phrase I did use, privately speaking, and which I know will not be misunderstood in this Chamber, I said the bill was "rotten." I urged the President to sign the bill if he felt he had the ability to control prices, but if he did not think that under that bill he would have the ability to control prices in the national interest of the people and the country, then I did not expect him to sign the bill. He had his constitutional duty to perform. We did ours by sending the bill to him. I do not think it is fair to criticize any person for exercising his judgment and his conscience. One can disagree, I agree with that, but to impugn the motives of any man I do not think is fair.

In any event, we are faced with a condition, and I urge the passage of this resolution today. All we can do is do the best we can. Speaking as the majority leader of this House, I serve notice on the country that whether Members vote for the resolution or not, we are doing the best we can as quickly as we can.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McCOWEN].

LIBERTY OR THE OPA—WHICH?

Mr. McCOWEN. Mr. Speaker, at 12 o'clock midnight last night the Liberty Bell rang again and "proclaimed liberty throughout the land unto the inhabitants thereof" in strict harmony with the inscription made on it long before the American Revolution. Liberty throughout the land, by the death of the OPA, and freedom were restored to Americans to make men who were free before World War II, free again. The question now is, Will this Congress preserve this newly restored liberty by not reenacting the price-control law? The statutory death of the price-control law ended bureaucratic terrorism and despotic control over the lives of Americans in many fields of business. It should not be renewed at this time. A price-control law that has caused a black market of so great an extent as now exists, that has created a scarcity by having ceiling prices below the cost of production, and that has humiliated honest Americans by persecution in the name of prosecution, much like the star-chamber methods of old, should remain dead.

Some would renew the Price Control Act for fear of inflation, if it did not exist. This fear, in my opinion, is not well founded. Much inflation existed under price control. There will be some increase in prices when controls are removed whether it be now, 6 months from now, 1 year from now, or at any other time. But when those controls are removed production will be free to increase and will increase rapidly. The law of supply and demand will reduce prices to some degree of normality and people will be able to get the things they need. Production will prevent inflation to a large degree.

A greater issue is involved in price control than the mere question of dollars and cents. It is the question as to whether we shall have regimentation in general by the Federal Government or whether free enterprise shall exist, and, as a consequence, whether freemen shall remain free. Those who fought and won the American Revolution risked the loss of all their earthly possessions, as well as their lives, for freedom, that freedom which has been handed down to us. Is it not up to us to preserve that freedom by ending a planned economy now? One of the big steps in that direction is to let the dead OPA remain dead.

Let us show the world that the Government of the Republic of the United States is the servant of the people, and not its master. Let us show the world that Americans in time of peace can run their own affairs honestly, intelligently, and right, and that democracy lives in the United States, by not reenacting a price-control law now.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire to do so may extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD on the pending legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, all sensible people want to do all things that are necessary to prevent inflation. I think we can all agree on that. As to how to obtain this objective which we all agree can be obtained there is considerable division. While I voted to override the President's veto, believing as I did the price-control bill as passed was the best bill we would be able to obtain, I am perfectly willing to make a further effort, and therefore shall vote for the resolution under consideration. If this further effort proves successful we will all become the beneficiaries of the effort; if, on the other hand, it proves unsuccessful we will be in no worse fix than we are today. We, therefore, have everything to gain and nothing to lose by supporting the resolution.

I hope it will be the pleasure of the House to adopt the resolution.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I insert the following:

I would like to vote for rent control effective until we are able to build more houses, and the law of supply and demand will take care of the situation. I do not want to see people evicted from their houses and on the streets, but OPA should have given some relief to those landlords who lost money under OPA regulations when their expenses of operation increased greatly.

I am now and always have been against subsidies. With people making high wages, we can keep our Treasury from going on the rocks by stopping those subsidy payments which never should have been made. That system was started in Germany, and see what happened there. We do not want it to happen here.

The law of supply and demand is our best and most efficient price regulator under the private enterprise system. It will protect the farmer, the merchant, the manufacturer, and the worker. It made America great. I am against this bureaucratic government. It is foreign to our Constitution, and to our Government, previous to the New Deal. I never supported it in the past, and I am too much of an American to vote for it now. By the methods of inefficiency employed, price control as administered by the OPA has done more to make merchandise scarce than any other agency of government. Many of the regulations have been most ridiculous, no business in them. The OPA has hindered production, thus increasing the black market and causing higher prices, and creating scarcities. OPA creates more black markets than prohibition ever did, and we have seen illegal selling of all kinds of produce at ever higher prices. Scarcity is more and more apparent in many commodities.

If we do not give everything away to foreign countries, our supply will catch up with demand in a few months. The majority of our people are honest businessmen, and I do not look for the honest manufacturers, merchants, and farmers to gouge the workers and attempt any excessive profiteering. I believe in our people, and want to see them given a chance. I am against bureaucratic government and regimentation. I believe in our Constitution, and have always supported it and will continue to do so. Working under that Constitution has made America a great Nation. It is high time to stop tearing it down.

The OPA died last night at 12 o'clock.

This resolution is not constitutional to reenact OPA. You should pass a new law if you want to revive the OPA. When a thing is dead, it is dead—you cannot put life in it. Let us do things constitutionally; you all took an oath to do so.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, in the last month, President Truman has demonstrated on two different occasions his capacity as a great leader in this afterwar economic emergency. His first demonstration of fearless leadership was the vetoing of the Case bill, disregarding the great pressure brought upon him by antilabor forces throughout the country. His veto of this measure was upheld by the narrow margin of five votes. It is my firm belief that had President Truman not presented his temporary emergency legislation to the joint session of Congress on the previous Saturday, the Case bill would be on our statute books today. His leadership on that occasion averted the further rise of industrial unrest and confusion and today we can see economic peace on the horizon.

His second demonstration of great leadership was when he vetoed the impotent and emasculated OPA legislation last Saturday. By that veto he served notice on the special privileged pressure groups of this country that they cannot amass postwar profits at the expense of the American consumers. His veto of a weak and impractical price-control bill assured the millions of Americans that they had a champion in the White House who will fight to preserve their savings, defense bonds, wages, insurance policies, homes, and their future security.

Every Member of Congress who has the interest of the consuming public at heart should vote for this continuing resolution—House Joint Resolution 371—which will make the present law effective until July 20, 1946. Within the next 20 days I hope Congress and the Senate will join on the passage of a rigid and stable price-control law which will carry through this emergency and save us from a paralyzing inflation and industrial turmoil.

RENTS SHOULD BE CONTROLLED

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, this resolution asking for the continuance of the OPA for 30 days should be defeated. I spent the week end in one of the country's greatest industrial centers. I spoke with many people and overheard a great many conversations. I found that there is a genuine fear existing in the public mind because of the President's veto action.

I learned, however, that the fear centers around rents. I have always felt, and still do feel, that rent control should be retained, but in all cases the administration should be in the hands of local authorities. I read an Associated Press report on Sunday which said that in most of the States the Governors have the authority to set up rent control. The report stated further that the Governor of Pennsylvania has this authority. I have since been informed that he has asked the Attorney General for an opinion on this matter.

This gives me reason to believe that should necessity arise our Governor will take appropriate action. My reasons for wanting this control in the hands of local authorities is because I believe that they will adjust the glaring inequalities that have been tolerated under the OPA administration.

So far as other controls are concerned, I learned that people want food and are not so much concerned about the price. I heard many people express the belief that while prices will undoubtedly rise, the prices will still be lower than present black-market prices. About 1 week ago I saw practically a new sedan stop in front of a grocery store here in the capital. The driver got out, opened the trunk of the car, pulled out a quarter of beef, and carried it into the store. His trunk was packed solid with meat. It was about 8 in the evening. Legitimate slaughterers or dealers do not handle meat this way. No doubt, this turned out to be expensive eating for those who had the price.

The trainmaster in the railroad yards at Pittsburgh, who has handled all the livestock coming from the West for nearly 25 years, informed me that during the last 6 months more livestock passed through the Pittsburgh yards, where they are unloaded, fed and watered, than have at any other period during his time.

Shipments are at their peak at this moment. Very recently three men came into the yards as he was making up trains and inquired about three carloads of cattle they had in transit. He pointed out their cars and they requested him to put them in a train that had just been made up. He informed them that they were too late, the train would leave shortly, and that he would put their cattle in the next train, which would leave in a few hours. When they became insistent and declared they must have their cattle in New York at the earliest possible movement, they offered him $100 per car to get them in the first train. The cattle did not get away until the trainmaster included the cars in the next train 6 hours later.

Now, talking about black market, here is a case where these fellows purchased cattle at ceiling or above, came to Pittsburgh from New York to expedite their shipping, then slaughtered the cattle somewhere in black-market fashion, losing all the offal, hides, and so forth. This made expensive beef for somebody, and no doubt a lot of money for the black-market racketeers. Could this beef have gone into an open competitive market no doubt it would have reached the public at a much lower cost than it did otherwise, and the byproducts, so much needed, would have been utilized.

Hon. C. GROSS:

OPA will die Sunday at midnight. Please ask Congress not to write another OPA bill. I want clothes for my body, household goods for my home, and food for my children. I trust the merchant will not raise his price more than to cover the OPA profit loss. I am willing for the merchant to have it.

A HOUSEWIFE.

To Congress:

Hon. C. GROSS: OPA is dead. Please do not write another bill. We will soon have the scarce articles we are longing for: Meat, butter, pepper, sugar, bread, flour, and so forth.

HOUSEWIFE (10 of a family).

JUNE 29, 1946.

Hon. C. GROSS:

OPA goes out Sunday night, and I am very glad. Now I can shortly get the scarce articles I have needed so badly. Butter will be back, and then I will not have to chew dry bread. I feel very poor in a land which at one time knew no scarcity.

A DEMOCRATIC VOTER.

JUNE 29, 1946.

Hon. C. GROSS:

OPA expires Sunday night and I feel sure we will now get prosperity. Burn OPA bill. We will get all the scarce goods caused by the OPA. It should have been kicked out last year. Why is it Truman does not declare the war over? Politics, I suppose. He is holding all the war emergency agencies, causing higher national debt.

A MOTHER OF FIVE CHILDREN.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: OPA is dead. Please bury it deep before it smells.

A DEMOCRATIC VOTER.

Hon. C. GROSS,

Washington, D. C.:

Now OPA is dead, please bury it deep in the ash pile.

AN OLD-LINE REPUBLICAN VOTER.

YORK, PA., June 30, 1946.

Representative CHESTER GROSS,

Washington, D. C.:

We applaud the return to the law of supply and demand for merchandise pricing, and suggest a 15 percent approved increase on rents.

Mr. and Mrs. A. E. CROCKETT, Jr.

BELAIR, MD., July 1, 1946.

Hon. CHESTER H. GROSS:

Your support of President's veto is commendable if followed by active effort to reinstate price control over rents and scarce commodities. As a life-long Republican, I urge support of extension act, but this action is probably too sensible to be expected.

C. CLARK GAILEY.

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Speaker, many of the speakers from the Republican side of the House in this debate on the extension of OPA have been laboring over the fact that the Speaker called on the House to vote for the passage of the conference report. They try to maintain that we who voted with the Speaker will be inconsistent unless we now vote against extending price control. Let me point out that had we not voted on the conference report there would have been no dramatic veto message. Had the House voted the conference report down it would have meant an undramatic end of OPA and the real issues involved would have not been brought sharply to the attention of the people. Had it not been brought to the attention of the people we would not have this opportunity today to vote for this resolution to extend OPA. A lot of crying has come also from the Republican side of the House because of the gap between the expiration of OPA and this extension resolution. Let me also point out that had the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] not objected to the immediate consideration of the extension resolution on last Saturday that the resolution may have been passed before the expiration of the old law.

We should not quibble longer about bygones. Let us consider the problems facing us today and pass this resolution to extend OPA.

Mr. BYRNES of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I voted against the conference report when it was before this House last week. I voted to sustain the President's veto of the bill. I voted not to sustain the reasoning of his veto message, but to sustain the effect of the veto, namely, to put an end to the unreasonable, unrealistic control that has been forced upon the American people by the administrators of OPA.

Fundamentally I believe in a reasonable control during this transition from producing for the devil of war to producing for the American people. But I have been in this Congress for 1½ years, not long as compared with most of the Members, but long enough to have seen the operations of OPA and come to the definite conclusion that we cannot expect a reasonable, realistic administration of any act which we might pass. There is ample evidence of this fact in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where daily Members of Congress have called attention to the unreasonableness of OPA in solving our problem of production. Anyone who has had any relation with OPA—and we all have had many—knows that their attitude has always been one of adamant arrogance. They have hindered rather than aided production. They are all so wound up in their own rules, regulations, and orders that our entire production facilities have been stymied.

The arrogant frame of mind of the OPA has been demonstrated during the time Congress was considering the extension of control. Chester Bowles and other spokesmen for OPA have consistently taken the position that the law had to be extended as is—without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i"—the way they wanted it. That was their attitude last week end. That is their attitude today. If we are looking for a place to put the blame for killing price control, let us put it where it belongs, on Chester Bowles.

Mr. Speaker, the phase of the discussion that troubles me most is the underlying lack of confidence in the American people and the American system of free enterprise which is evidenced by the scare artists and calamity Chesters who picture absolute chaos in this country if we do not keep control over the people and business. Our people are pictured as being so greedy that some superman in Washington must hold a club over them. That our people are so ignorant that they will buy anything offered to them and at any price. As for me I have greater confidence in the intelligence and honor of the American people. I have confidence in that system which has made us great—the free-enterprise system. At least give it a fair chance.

The adoption of this resolution can only add more confusion and more uncertainty to our already overstrained economic system.

The solution to our problem is full production. The adoption of this resolution will only delay production further.

Mr. LEONARD W. HALL. Mr. Speaker, when we had the OPA bill before us in the House, I made my position clear. I have been against any sudden or abrupt termination of OPA. And as I stated during the time of our consideration of the measure, I felt that despite its deficiencies, and the sum total of the harm it has worked, I believe that to terminate its life without providing something better in its place, would bring us even greater disorders, injustices, and harmful consequences.

Those disorders are now upon us. Chaos may well be around the corner. Only reason, self-restraint on the part of the whole country can save us. But these disorders will not come by action of the Congress, but by the action, practically unbelievably, of the President of the United States.

Today, by his direct action, rent control is terminated; there is no ceiling on any item of food; there is no legal restraint on any item going into the cost of living; there is no restriction of any kind. The lid is off. And the President took it off.

The President's veto of the price control extension bill was a reckless gamble. Mr. Truman took the position that he was willing to wreck all price control if he did not get the kind of control he wanted. He gambled to get his "all or nothing bill" and he lost.

It would have been real statesmanlike action on the part of the President had he signed the measure presented to him and then made his arguments to the Congress and the people for the corrective amendments he felt were imperatively necessary. In that way he could have built a basis for improvement of the bill, afforded a ground for compromise.

But like certain labor leaders he gave way to reckless action first and having done that he wants to build anew when he really has not got a base on which to work. We are now in the position of having to start from scratch, and in the meantime the people of the country lack the protection of any price control policy at all. That is an impossible situation and therefore I will certainly support action to continue the old law on a temporary basis.

What a comparison between President Truman and the far-sighted, sound planning of Governor Dewey. One minute after midnight of June 30, Governor Dewey put into operation the State law that he had readied and that was waiting on the shelves in order to take care of any untoward development affecting Federal control of rents. Possibly Governor Dewey had a prophetic feeling. But he was right, in any event. He was not willing to rely on what this administration might or might not do to protect the public interest incident to rent controls. Naturally I am proud of New York State's position and that we have a governor who knows not only when to move but who has planned the right move; and who is not put in the ludicrous and sorry position of an executive who guesses wrong, acts wrong, and who seemingly can do little but to recommend, and regret and get nowhere.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the veto by President Truman of the latest version of the so-called price control law has once more put before the country the question of what to do about price control and prevention of inflation.

The bill passed by the House for the extension of the price-control law was, on paper at least, an improvement over the old one. The same may be said for the bill as it passed the Senate. In my judgment, the bill finally agreed upon was not as good as either.

Congress is now being asked to pass temporary legislation keeping the old law in effect for a short period while we determine what should be done next. While the extension will probably be granted, nevertheless, I wonder what good will be accomplished by it. Is it not another postponement of the great decision which sooner or later must be made?

A strong majority of Congress and of the country want a return to competitive private enterprise at the earliest possible date. There is some difference of opinion among this group as to when the return should be attempted. Congress has been trying to chart a course which would provide for a gradual return. It has sought to set up machinery for decontrol when the supply of a particular product approximated the demand. The OPA on the other hand has abundantly demonstrated that it will maintain controls as long as it can. After months of honest effort, all attempt to reconcile these widely divergent views have failed. It is difficult to see how any different result would be reached in the next few weeks.

After all, what is the real difficulty? Is it not in the maladministration of the law by the OPA? The Washington cell of the gigantic machine has been manned by people who have done no more than render lip service to the free enterprise system. Whenever a decision had to be made between capitalism and socialism, its decision was usually on the side of the latter. For example, amendments have been made by both the House and Senate to require ceiling prices to reflect costs plus a reasonable profit. It was always my view that the original law contemplated that very thing. The Congress has consistently sought to outlaw profiteering; the OPA has done its best to eliminate profits.

The OPA, through its spokesmen, has proclaimed its willingness to abandon controls when the supply was abundant. But their conduct has been to the contrary. The real difficulty with meat has not been in the short supply. There are more cattle than ever. Packing plants are adequate and now that the war is over, there should be no shortage of labor. The trouble lies in the black market which the OPA does not seem able to stamp out. Consequently, legitimate packers are idle and there is a scarcity of meat at regular dealers. The largest producer of oatmeal in the country was closed a short time ago. Creameries are greatly handicapped by OPA regulations and many of them are not operating. Farmers are uncertain what to do.

There may be a difference of opinion as to what to do next but there is general agreement that the present attempts at price control have been futile.

As the real trouble lies in the administration of the law, why not apply the only remedy that will be effective. The OPA has grown to be a gigantic octopus, strangling the life out of the country. If the law is allowed to expire, that does not mean that Congress is powerless to take whatever steps are necessary to protect the national economy. It has been suggested, for example, that control of rents is still needed. If that be true, why not pass a simple law covering rents and provide that its enforcement be put in the hands of local people. I am satisfied the people would cooperate and that better results would be secured in this manner than through some large bureau in Washington trying by multitudinous regulations to regulate details in the far reaches of a great country.

Eventually we must return to the American system of competition and free enterprise. How much longer can we postpone that return without creating a situation which will make the return impossible? Private enterprise and free government are dying all over the world. Has not the time come for this great country to reaffirm its confidence in the type of government which has made us the greatest Nation on earth.

The people say we are taking a great chance if we do not continue OPA as our guardian. That may be true. But are we not taking a greater risk in allowing an ever growing bureaucracy and expanding government controls to sap our independence, our vitality, and our courage?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who believes in price control. The particular thing which I think we should retain is rent control. The area from which I come is so short of houses that without rent control prices might soar to unprecedented elevations. We are in a curious situation at this moment. The Congress passed a Price Control Act after very prolonged hearings before the committees of both Houses. When the bill was before the House, numerous amendments were submitted. I voted against all of the amendments but two of them. The bill which we passed was changed by the Senate. The conference committee finally agreed upon a bill and the matter was submitted to us for our ratification. I voted for the conference report. The Speaker expressed my viewpoint in much better language than I could myself. Therefore, I am taking the liberty of quoting his statement at the time we were considering the conference report which contained a bill which the conferees had agreed upon. Here are his words:

> Two elements are warring against this conference report. One of those want no price control at all. If this conference report is voted down, they will have their way. Others say that they want more control than is contained in this bill. If this conference report is voted down, they will get nothing because there will not, in my opinion, be any price-control legislation at all. If this House will not vote up this conference report, it certainly will not vote for a continuing resolution and continue the law as it now stands. Even though the House were to pass a continuing resolution, the leaders of the Senate are doubtful if it has a chance on earth to pass there. So if we want to control any kind of food prices and if we want to control rents and not have people turned out into the streets—as they will be turned out—the only alternative is to vote up this conference report. The responsibility is here. I will not, as far as I am concerned, by my vote here this afternoon shoulder the responsibility of killing all price control.

We all know that the President vetoed the bill. That is his constitutional privilege but I for one was willing to take the bill that was agreed upon rather than gamble on having no price control.

There are other items in which we should retain price control, such as food, clothing, appliances, and so forth. Decontrol should be gradual rather than abrupt and the bill which was vetoed did provide such decontrol.

However, not being able to get the kind of a bill I wanted I was willing to accept the best kind of bill that Congress would adopt. It is significant that in voting upon the conference report 265 Members voted for it, including many strong advocates of price control and including the chairman of the committee which wrote the House bill, the ranking Republican Member and the ranking Democratic Member, the majority leader of the House, and the minority leader.

When the President presented his veto we were confronted with this situation: The law would expire the following day which was a Sunday. The problem was, Shall I vote to sustain the veto and thereby take a chance of completely giving up price control or shall I vote to override the veto and accept the bill which all of the leaders in both Houses of Congress said was the best bill that could be gotten out of this Congress? I chose to take this bill and I voted to override the veto. However, not enough Members voted to override the veto and therefore although only a minority of the Members of the House voted to sustain the veto the law was killed.

We are now confronted with the problem of revising the law which was killed by a minority number of the House Members plus the President's veto.

While I intend to vote for the resolution granting 20 days in which the former price control bill shall remain in effect I have little hope of getting any more in the way of price control than there was in the bill that the President vetoed and which was adopted by the overwhelming vote of the House. To me it is very unfortunate that the President disregarded the advice of the leaders of his party in both Houses of the Congress, of the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate. Uncertainty has been cast into the situation. No one knows what is going to happen and all production will be on an uncertain and in some cases on a chaotic basis until a new law is passed or rejected. The result may be that we will have no price control at all although I am predicting that we will perhaps obtain about the same type of bill which we have approved prior to the President's veto.

Unfortunately the public has been inflamed unnecessarily by a very partisan discussion as to the effects of the bill upon which the Congress finally agreed. There are many able and disinterested people who believe that this bill would be workable and in any event it would be far better than no bill at all. Some of the weird administrative monstrosities which the OPA put into effect is what created the violent opposition to the OPA. The unfortunate thing is that because of this the American public may reap the whirlwind of the administrative ineptness of the OPA. I am hoping that we can get a workable bill with perhaps a little more control than the former bill contained but at the present time this looks extremely doubtful.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, it is not often that I ask for time to speak on a resolution from the Rules Committee making in order the immediate consideration of a measure in the House. During the 10 years that I have been a Member I do not believe I have asked for this opportunity 10 times. I do not believe I have asked the privilege on an average once a session. The time is naturally limited on the rule and usually I prefer to speak on the measure itself in general debate or on amendments. However, this time is an exception, because it is urgent and because I am for the measure without amendment as this resolution makes it in order.

This legislation is of transcendent importance. Our country is in an appalling economic crisis. Very much depends upon our decision. I am ascribing sincere motives in many of the moves I have seen in connection with this, both friendly and unfriendly to OPA, and, while I may be naive, there seem to be as many close questions on which my colleagues differ, perhaps as many controversial but valid contentions, as there are fallacious arguments. Of this one thing I am sure, that the vast majority of American citizens want, demand, and must have continuation of price controls on the necessities of life until such a time as supply and demand are about equally balanced. If the Government fails to furnish those controls, the Government has fallen down in its duty. I have by every act and vote of mine, directly or indirectly connected with OPA, endeavored to support the Government in the fulfillment of this solemn duty to all American citizens.

We have heard a lot of sophistry today and last Saturday and for many previous weeks, in regard to who is to blame for the present predicament and what ought to be the proper course of action and what is the real significance of this or that vote on the various proposals touching OPA. When I hear lawyers on opposite sides of a controversial question, and often members of opposite political parties, using arguments that sound so persuasive, and yet I know are as full of holes as a colander, I think of that lawyer of whom Abraham Lincoln spoke who could by a clever arrangement of words prove that a horse chestnut is a chestnut horse.

As I have listened through hours of this discussion I have felt within my own heart almost convicted by their arguments of inconsistency. Some arguments are so powerful they make black look white. I know solemnly that I wanted to preserve and continue as long as necessary an effective and sound OPA, but some of the sophisticated political reasoning, which have been expressed today have almost convicted me of having killed cock robin.

Yes, I voted on April 18 for the OPA extension bill when it was up for final passage originally in the House. Does that mean that I went off the deep end in my enthusiastic support of it? It certainly does not—not of that measure. My "yes" that day on April 18 was a very feeble "yes" to a measure that had been emasculated the day before by many crippling amendments. The RECORD will show that on every roll-call vote taken in the House on April 17 I voted "no" because I felt that these amendments were dangerous amendments. I voted "yes" on final roll call only that we might have a bill on which the other body, in our two-Chamber National Legislature, could work in order to keep price control beyond June 30.

When the conference report came back to the House on June 25, I was little better satisfied with it than I was with the House version on April 18, but not being an expert in such intricate business problems I felt that although business undoubtedly had the advantage in its general nature and provisions, this bill was better than nothing and therefore I voted for it on agreeing to the conference report. However, when a ringing veto came from the President on June 29, and my eyes were open to things that I had not seen before, I voted to sustain the President's veto. He said it was an impossible proposal. I agree with the President that if we are going to have wild, runaway inflation, and that such is inevitable, we had better have it without a law than to have it encouraged—yes, guaranteed—by a law which I by my vote helped to pass. Yes; the President did ask for it, asked several times, but he asked for bread and we gave him a stone.

What then is our present problem? Clearly it is our duty to extend the present OPA law as is for a short period and meanwhile attempt to write a law which will contain only the necessary controls, and also provide for decontrols where such controls are no longer needed. I agree with my colleague who said we had spent more than 20 weeks writing a measure according to the pleasure of business and looking after business interests and profits, therefore the Congress of the United States might very properly give at least 20 days to safeguarding the interests of the American people. I shall vote for the proposal to extend OPA for 20 days and hope that decontrol provisions may be written into law to ease the transition from wartime economy to peacetime economy in a safe and sane way. Let us remember that we are dealing with the very lives of our people, as we legislate on this vital matter, dealing with lives just as surely as we did during and just preceding the war. It is a solemn thing to deal with human lives.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the rule under consideration makes in order for the consideration by the House, House Joint Resolution 371. Without legislation the OPA terminated on June 30, 1946. Bills were introduced in the House and Senate to modify the OPA and to extend its life. These bills were referred to the Committees on Banking and Currency of the House and Senate. Both committees gave everyone an opportunity to testify for and against the bills and to make recommendations and suggestions. Each committee, after these extensive hearings and many executive sessions of the committees, reported their respective bills to the House amending and modifying the OPA Act.

The House, after long debate and consideration, passed a bill by an overwhelming majority and the Senate did likewise, and as there were some differences in the two bills, they were referred to a conference committee made up of Republicans and Democrats from the Banking and Currency Committees of the House and Senate. After 2 weeks of consideration, this able conference committee agreed on a compromise bill and made a favorable report to their respective Houses. The House and Senate adopted the conference report by an overwhelming majority and then it went to the President and was vetoed by the President. We received his veto in the House last Saturday, June 29. While a substantial majority of the Members of the House voted to override the veto, they lacked 34 votes of having a two-thirds majority. Nothing could be done to restore OPA, which expired on Sunday night, June 30. The veto of the President killed the bill.

Speaker RAYBURN, Democratic Majority Leader MCCORMACK, and Mr. SPENCE, author of the OPA bill, urged the House to accept the compromise bill and stated that unless the compromise bill was accepted there would be no legislation on OPA at this session of Congress. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], the ranking Republican on the Banking and Currency Committee and one of the conferees, and other Democrats and Republicans, made the same statements, and we are advised that Senator BARKLEY and other administration Democrats and leading Republicans urged the Senate to accept the compromise bill, and the House and Senate did accept the compromise bill by an overwhelming majority. These Democratic leaders of the House and Senate and strong friends of the President called on him and urged him to sign the bill, but no doubt to their surprise, as well as to the surprise of the Members of the House and Senate and the country, he, at the request of Bowles and some other New Dealers outside of the Congress, vetoed the bill. It came to the House on Saturday, June 29. It takes a two-thirds majority to override the veto of the President. Through the strong pressure of the administration, less than a two-thirds majority voted to override his veto, although a substantial majority did vote to do so. Therefore, the veto of the President killed the OPA legislation. Very few persons expected him to turn down four and a half months of earnest work of Congress on this important subject and turn down the recommendations and advice of his congressional leaders in the House and Senate.

Of ours, Mr. Bowles and his OPA'ers and some other left-wingers are very happy. Now the President and his New Deal friends are very unhappy. They are busy putting out propaganda trying to blame this situation on a few Republicans. They are busy again trying to deceive the American people. The President and Chester Bowles must carry the full responsibility of killing OPA. You may ask why they wanted to kill that OPA bill. That bill was the only thing that could have extended the OPA. There were several reasons. The bill took from the OPA the control over food prices and placed this authority in the hands of Mr. Anderson, the Secretary of Agriculture, who has had actual experience in cattle raising and stock raising and other agricultural activities. He also served for many years on the Committee on Agriculture of the House and was a member of that committee at the time he was appointed Secretary of Agriculture. The OPA'ers certainly did not want that done.

The OPA has had turned over to it billions of dollars in the way of subsidies. The bill provided for the elimination of some subsidies now and the gradual elimination of others so that all subsidies would have ceased by December 31, 1946. The OPA'ers wanted to play with these billions of dollars of subsidies and to fool the American people. These billions were used to help pay the grocery bills and store accounts of the rich as well as the poor widow. Of course, we had to borrow the money and thereby increase the national debt. This was clearly unjustified. When the American people had more money to expend than they had ever had, why should the Government borrow the money, increase the national debt and taxes, to pay the grocery bills and store accounts of the rich people of this Nation and then Bowles and his crowd took credit for reducing the prices on commodities and consumer goods? Mr. Wallace and some other New Dealers had told the people of the Nation that wages could be increased from 30 to 50 percent without increasing the price to the producers. Of course this was ridiculous, but they tried to force the producers to absorb these enormous increases of wages and costlier materials in production with the net result that hundreds of thousands of small businesses were put out of business and thousands of others were forced into the black markets to save their businesses, and this all meant a slowing down of production.

Every one who knows anything about the subject knows very well that scarcity of consumer goods forces prices up, creates black markets, destroys the equitable distribution of available consumer goods and increases the threat of inflation and the real answer to the control of prices is plenty—an abundance of consumer goods to meet the great demands of the people. We cannot have abundance without full production. We cannot have full production unless the producers, processors, and distributors of consumer goods are given a price that will cover the cost and a reasonable profit. Mr. Truman and his New Dealers entertained the unsound economic policy that you could have full production, processing, and distribution without a fair and just price that would take care of the cost as well as a reasonable profit. Mr. Bowles and Mr. Wallace have many admirers urging that the OPA continue as is and without any profit motive and without the producers being assured of even the cost of production. This might work in totalitarian countries for whom we are now stripping our country to provide food and clothing but it will not work in free America. Each one of us should be willing to pay such price for our products and goods as will enable the producers, processors, and distributors with proper management to pay the cost of production, good wages, and a fair profit.

The bill that the President vetoed also contained a provision for the final ending of the OPA. That, of course, was one of the bitterest pills for Mr. Bowles and his wrecking crew. As we have stated, the bill had many other splendid features. There was almost unanimous agreement that there should be reasonable rent control until the housing shortage could be relieved. Mr. Truman, by his veto, killed rent control.

THE FOUR IMPORTANT OBJECTIVES

We have now had OPA for more than 4 years. The Congress in establishing the OPA contemplated four important objectives: First, to stabilize prices; second, to provide for an equitable distribution of available supplies; third, to prevent black markets; and, fourth, to lessen the danger of inflation. Ninety-nine percent of the American people must know by this time that not one of these objectives was achieved, although the OPA was given the power and billions of dollars to accomplish these purposes. No one has ever possessed greater power than the OPA and they even exceeded those powers by their Executive orders, rules, regulations, and interpretations. It was strictly a war emergency measure and was never intended for peacetime.

The administration has had the Congress to appropriate four and one-half billion dollars—$4,500,000,000—for subsidies alone. The OPA has had hundreds of millions of dollars for propaganda and to administer the OPA Act. They have had a veritable army of Federal officeholders.

FAILURE, FAMINE, CHAOS, AND DISCORD

After having exercised all of these extraordinary powers, spent billions of dollars, and harassed the American people for the last 4 years, what do we find? Failure, famine, discord, and chaos. The lives and health of tens of thousands of the American people have been and still are threatened because of the lack of nourishing food. Livestock and poultry have starved to death. Hundreds of thousands of business concerns have been bankrupted and destroyed. Working people have been forced to quit their employment because of lack of food. The wives, mothers, and daughters of this country were willing to stand in line for hours to get a piece of meat, a quarter of a pound of butter, a little sugar, and a few vegetables to feed and nourish their families. They thought and we believed that when the war ended in Europe 15 months ago and especially when it ended in Japan nearly a year ago, that they would be relieved of this burden and that we would have more food; but as the weeks and months have come and gone, we find less and less food, prices have soared all the way from 25 to 200 percent on many necessities. More than 75 percent of the transactions in consumer goods and especially food, lumber, and clothing, are handled in the black markets or in some elements of the black markets, either in actual overcharges, shortage of weights, lack of quantity, or lack of quality.

The black market is one of the greatest curses that has ever come to a great people. Through the mismanagement, tyranny, oppression, favoritism, and corruption of the OPA, millions of honest Americans have been forced to resort to practices that are entirely foreign to our great people. The people of my district and others have appealed to me to aid them to secure food and feed and to have allocated to the grain-processing mills corn, wheat, oats, and barley, but we have been told recently that there is no corn or wheat available. This administration caused the black marketeers to leap with joy when our Government became the greatest black marketeer of all in the Nation. A ceiling price was placed on corn, wheat, and other grains. The owners of these grains could not sell them to the mills for more than the OPA price and the mills could not pay more than the OPA price, but the Government came along and told the owners of wheat and corn: "If you will sell your corn and wheat to the Government and make it available for this country to ship to foreign countries and give it away, the Government will pay you 30 cents a bushel above the OPA price." What is the result? We had hundreds of millions of bushels of corn and wheat made available for shipment to foreign countries, but over 90 percent of the wheat and corn mills of Kentucky and the Nation were closed down and the American people find themselves faced with famine.

The Government itself, as we all know, broke the OPA line in prices as well as in wages and cost of materials. We must get back to honest business, free competitive enterprise, constitutional government, and the real American way of life. We must get away from regimentation, from tyranny, oppression, favoritism, and corruption in government.

THERE MUST BE A CHANGE

Mr. Bowles and the President want the Congress to continue OPA as is, with one of the blackest records of any governmental agency in the history of this Nation. There must be a change. These conditions cannot go on. It will turn this great, free country into a totalitarian government. The liberties of the American people will be wiped out. The Congress, by an overwhelming majority, attempted, after months and months of careful study—in fact, after observing the OPA and its doings for more than 4 years—to make such changes as would correct these conditions, restore honest, private enterprise, eliminate the black markets, and lessen the threat of inflation. There will be temporary rises in prices. In fact, the OPA planned to increase prices. The new prices were already set up. Some increases were absolutely necessary. The Government, out of the tax-and-bond money of the people, had been paying from 4 to 9 cents a pound in subsidies on grocery bills and store accounts of the people. The subsidies will be cut out.

The increase for the railroad workers and the increase in prices for steel and other materials made it necessary to increase transportation rates and this was applied to the consumers of coal. The cost of bituminous coal production was increased on an average to about 50 cents to 60 cents a ton and anthracite coal more than 90 cents a ton. All these things helped to increase the cost of production and, therefore, there had to be some substantial increases under the OPA, but let us not forget whatever bad conditions we have had, up to this time, have been under OPA and if the resolution is adopted by the House and Senate that is now before us, extending the OPA until July 20, then whatever conditions are prevailing up to July 20 in the way of prices, black markets, lack of consumer goods, and threat of inflation, must be justly laid at the door of the OPA.

I voted for the amended OPA bill. I voted to pass the bill over the President's veto, and if the President had signed the bill or if two-thirds of the Congress had voted to override his veto, we would not have the disturbed conditions in the country today. Of course, the President and the OPA'ers have become alarmed and they now insist that we extend the OPA for 20 days to see if some bill cannot be worked out to save the situation.

An overwhelming majority of the House, including myself, will likely vote to give 20 days' time to see if some legislation cannot be worked out that will be fair and just to the American people as well as to the producers, processors and distributors of this country. The President's leaders in the House and Senate have expressed the opinion that they did not believe a better bill could be passed than the one the President had vetoed. I certainly will not vote for an OPA bill without modifications that will prevent conditions that have been prevailing under Chester Bowles and other OPA officials. I do not propose for the people of my district to continue to suffer from the maladministration and oppression of this group of bureaucrats here in Washington. If the President would name an honest and able administrator who believes in the American way it would help.

The Democrats have a majority on each and every committee of the House and Senate. They have a substantial majority in the House and Senate. If Mr. Truman would quit listening to the PAC and other radicals and left-wingers and give more consideration to his own leaders in the House and Senate, a bill could be worked out that would provide for the gradual closing out of the OPA, with full protection to the American people and unless such a bill is passed, I certainly reserve the right to oppose it by my voice and vote.

In extending this resolution, it is the purpose of the overwhelming majority of the House to take away from Mr. Truman any excuse to cooperate with the House and Senate in bringing about a solution that can be approved by the representatives of the people in the House and Senate and that will be fair to the American people generally as well as to the producers, processors, and distributors of products, goods, and supplies. If the President and his party want to pass some bill, they have the votes to do so. The President and his party killed OPA and it is now up to them, with their majority and control in the House and Senate, to back such a bill as can be approved by the Congress and that will be just and fair to the American people.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAVIN].

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest as my distinguished, able, and good friend from Massachusetts, the majority leader, again rose to great heights. I think we should clarify the situation here today as to who is responsible for the situation that exists. Therefore I shall read the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Texas, the Speaker of the House, delivered here several days ago. He said:

> If this conference report is voted down, they will get nothing because there will not, in my opinion, be any price-control legislation at all. If this House will not vote up this conference report, it certainly will not vote for a continuing resolution and continue the law as it now stands. Even though the House were to pass a continuing resolution, the leader of the Senate is doubtful if it has a chance on earth to pass there. So if we want to control any kind of food prices and if we want to control rents and not have people turned out into the streets—as they will be turned out—the only alternative is to vote up this conference report. The responsibility is here. I will not, as far as I am concerned, by my vote here this afternoon shoulder the responsibility of killing all price control.

So we followed the leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Texas, who in a very sincere, honest, clear, and aggressive manner presented the whole situation to us, and we acted on his recommendations, it was vetoed by the President and now it is again brought back to the House for reconsideration and vigorous appeals are made to continue it, after 435 duly elected Members of the House of Representatives and 96 duly elected Members of the Senate have taken action expressing the will of the American people, which is now to be denied by the veto. We are asked again to renew it. The time has come when the responsibility should be placed where it rightfully belongs.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MATHEWS].

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, my time is short but there has been one point raised here this morning which is extremely important and which was referred to several times, particularly by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] with reference to the statement that section 4 of House Joint Resolution 371 extended this act or revives it. I do not see how anybody can come to that conclusion from a reading of the resolution. The resolution attempts to amend two sections and then provides in section 4 that the provisions of the joint resolution, that is, the amendments, shall be retroactive as of yesterday. I submit to you that you cannot amend an act which has gone out of existence no matter how much you provide there for its retroactivity. You may revive it. You may revive it with amendments, but you cannot, it seems to me, amend an act which has gone out of existence. It seems to me legally impossible to amend an act which has gone out of force by its own provisions and then attempt to make your amendment retroactive. In my opinion, if you consider this resolution and vote it up and then consider House Joint Resolution 371 and vote for that, you will be doing a nugatory thing, and in the meantime there will be more uncertainty as to whether we have price control or not. In my personal opinion, the thing that the people of the United States need most, whether they have price control or not, is certainty. They want to know where they are going.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, week before last I visited the great State of Wisconsin. I was privileged to speak before a splendid group of Wisconsin sportsmen. I did not speak altogether about conservation. I spent a good deal of time talking about the principles of government in which I believe and what I thought would be good for the country. After the meeting was over one of the members of the audience came up and whispered to me, "I am a Democrat." I assumed that the rest of them were Republicans. They knew I was a Democrat. But in all my life I have never received a more cordial and enthusiastic reception than I got there that night in Wisconsin. It forced home to me this vital and fundamental fact, that there is a bond of fellowship between those who entertain certain fundamental beliefs and who are willing to put the welfare of their Nation first, above group interest. I come to you today not as a Democrat but as one who, like you, loves his country, who is patriotic, and who wants to see the progress of America sustained and does not want to see an uncontrolled price boom followed by a depression which we would not be able to survive with a public debt of $265,000,000,000. That would mean economic chaos which would not only destroy our country economically but might ultimately imperil our cherished traditions and institutions. We met this morning to hold memorial exercises not to honor a Democrat but to honor the memory of a President of the United States.

In opening those ceremonies our Chaplain prayed, "O Lord, purify the thoughts in our hearts with the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit." I tell you the root of our trouble today is selfishness. It did not start with World War II, but it started with World War I. A group of war millionaires was made and a group of industrialists profited from the tragedy of war. They proceeded to take off the restraints after the war was over and cut down taxes, which were needed to control inflation and pay the public debt, until their program ultimately collapsed with the stock-market crash of October 29, 1929, and we were plunged into a depression. Before that the farmer, workingman, and the white-collar man had suffered, and in the depression we all suffered. Those who William Allen White said believed that God presided over a 6-percent heaven and all was well with the world realized that they, too, lost in the depression that they had helped to bring upon us. The progressive principles of Woodrow Wilson were repudiated in 1920 for the reactionaryism and isolationism of Warren G. Harding. The patriotic unselfishness which had characterized our prosecution of World War I turned into a program of gross materialism. In his last message to the American people, delivered in August 1923, Woodrow Wilson warned us of the consequences of such a program. After discussing the causes of the revolution in Russia he predicted a world revolution if the people here and abroad continued to ignore the just aspirations of the masses and continued to make the selfish acquisition of material things their chief aim in life. He concluded that appeal by saying:

> The sum of the whole matter is this: If our civilization is to survive materially, it must be redeemed spiritually. It can be saved only by becoming imbued with the spirit of Christ and made free and happy by the practices that spring from that spirit. Only thus can discontent be driven out and the shadows lifted from the road ahead.

Never in my life have I known more discontent or the road ahead obscured by darker clouds. And the root of our trouble is selfishness. We are called upon today to act on a resolution to temporarily continue the present OPA law, with the hope and the belief that we can work out a better one. In approaching that problem we would do well to recall the prayer offered by our chaplain this morning and to realize that we are not voting for or against a Democratic President or a Democratic administration. We are voting to promote the welfare of a country which we all love and to protect institutions which we all cherish. There is not a Member of this House who desires to see rent control immediately ended. There is not a Representative of an agricultural district who believes that our farmers can successfully compete with organized industry in a mad scramble for upping prices. There is not a Representative of an industrial area who does not view with alarm the prospect of uncontrolled food prices. There is not a member of this House who does not know that in any given line of endeavor those who produce are fewer than those who consume, and that no program is a just and fair program which ignores the rights of the consumer. Yet all of us are besieged by pressure groups, most of which are seeking a selfish advantage.

When we entered the war and had under consideration a price control bill, labor strenuously objected to any effort on the part of the Congress to control wages. It finally worked out an agreement with the President which was known as the Little Steel Formula. In working out that formula, labor leaders selected the period of the highest hourly wage rates in the history of the country and refused to permit consideration of the take-home pay resulting from overtime. Future advances were to have been limited to 15 percent, but this year that formula was broken in the negotiation of new contracts calling for an increase of 18½ cents per hour. Those wage increases have resulted in increased cost of production, which must inevitably result in price increases else one of two things, and maybe both, will happen. Production will be stifled, or goods will reach the consuming public by way of the black market at prices above legal ceilings. When we undertook to frame a new wage law industry insisted on selecting the most advantageous period it had had in a period of 5 years in determining what was a fair profit, to which was to be added all subsequent increases in the cost of production. It is now quite impossible for the Congress to write a price control bill which will prevent further price increases. But Congress can and should write a new price control bill which will prevent inordinate increases and unjustified increases and which will assure the consumer a reasonable supply of scarce articles through legitimate channels of distribution while lifting price control from other items as the supply catches up with the demand.

And while we are working on a bill of that character, the Congress should continue the present act. We may not know the type of new bill upon which a majority of us can agree, but we all very definitely know what is going to happen in the absence of no price control whatever. There is in the Congress enough ability and enough patriotic regard for the general welfare to write a new bill if we be determined that our actions shall not be controled by selfishness.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time, 4 minutes, to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, section 4 of this bill reenacts the law as of June 30, 1946. I believe that is just as satisfactory and just as legal and constitutional as if you reenacted the text of the entire law.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a member of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House.

Mr. WALTER. I would like to call to the attention of the gentleman that this procedure is not without precedent. It was done when the dollar was devalued.

Mr. PATMAN. The Devaluation Act.

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. So it is not new. In addition, if it needed amending, the other body would have that privilege.

PRESIDENT NOT TO BE BLAMED

I do not see how anyone can vote against this resolution who believes in price or rent control. It is only asking for an extension of 20 days, in the hope that a satisfactory bill can be agreed upon during that time. I know that efforts have been made to blame the President of the United States, but I do not believe the President should be blamed, when the President in January sent a special request to Members of Congress to give speedy action to the OPA law, not to wait until almost the deadline; twice in May he asked the Congress to hurry and pass a satisfactory OPA law; and in the early part of June he renewed the request. Now, what held up this bill? In our Committee on Banking and Currency there were three or four Members who were opposed to OPA. I venture to say, and it cannot be successfully contradicted, they took up two-thirds of the time before that committee asking questions of Chester Bowles, Paul Porter, and other important witnesses.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not yield to the lady. I do not have the time.

Then, when the bill went to the other body, in that committee a few who opposed any kind of controls took up the time to delay and delay. The bill was delayed and delayed until it got to the President's desk one day before the day it would have expired by law.

Now, who is responsible for this? The Congress is responsible. Let us not add to that blame which we should assume by refusing a 20-day extension of a bill that was presented to the President so unworkable and so impossible to administer. The Taft amendment could not be enforced. It was absolutely impossible of enforcement or administration. People who have been on the committee, as I have, and listened to this testimony for 3 months at a time—we had Leon Henderson on the witness stand under cross-examination for three long months—know that the Taft amendment was unworkable. We have spent months on this subject, over a period of several years, and I know that the Taft amendment that was in the other bill could not be enforced. Are we now going to blame the President for vetoing an unenforceable law?

I ask that this resolution be passed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 371, extending the effective period of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 371, extending the Emergency Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I do not delude myself by thinking that I can persuade the Members to vote in any way other than the way they have already made up their minds to vote.

Mr. Chairman, we are at the threshold of something that may mean much to the weal or the woe of the American people. Nobody that I know of denies that there is still the economic pressures making for inflation as great as those that existed during the war. I am no prophet, I do not know what the result will be if we take all the lids off at this time; but I feel a great catastrophe would come on the American people.

I hear a great deal of talk about propaganda. Do not think it is propaganda that brings about this condition. There is a psychological condition sweeping over America. You talk to the common man and woman on the street and they have fear in their hearts because they know that if we make a mistake the savings of their lifetime and the purchasing power of the money they earn may be largely dissipated. I do not want to take the responsibility.

It is said that if we agree with the President we retreat. We do not retreat. I do not retreat. The Committee on Banking and Currency reported a bill to the House that I am confident the President would have signed. But it was scuttled on the floor of the House and it was scuttled on the floor of the Senate. The pressure groups had their amendments adopted, and those were the amendments the President objected to. I voted against all of them because I could see that the catastrophe might result that has resulted, and there was no other thing to do but to go along as best I could.

We had to present some bill. I was hopeful that the bill would be workable. When we went into conference the area of difference was not great. Both bills were bad, but we had to accept the best bill we could get out of the material we had. The President said it would not work. He said he could not make it effectively operate. I was hopeful that he could. I wanted to avoid what has happened, but if he cannot make it work he was most courageous and honest in the stand he took.

We have come back here and asked for 20 days. I have been asked if I can assure you that we will have a bill in 20 days. I cannot. I cannot assure you of anything. But certainly it is not an unreasonable request to ask the Congress to give us 20 days in which to attempt to work out a solution of this problem. I am confident you will do that.

Politics has been brought into this matter. I tried to be fair in the committee. I tried to give everybody a chance to be heard who wanted to be heard. The critics of the bill and those who were opposed to most features of the bill took up four-fifths of the time interrogating witnesses. Then we are charged with delay because the bill was not brought in here in ample time. If we had not done that we would have been charged with unfairness. I believe if you do give us 20 more days, we may work out something that will meet with the approval of the President. I am certainly hopeful of that or I would not be urging that we be given the 20 days unless I thought we could accomplish that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself two additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in light of the great emergency that presents itself at this time, it certainly should be the policy of the Congress to give this committee time to do something that will conform to the wishes of the President, something that he thinks can be effectively used in carrying out the purposes for which the price control law was enacted.

We will continue price control, we will continue rent control, we will continue the Stabilization Act for those 20 days. Price control and rent control are so inseparably connected in one picture that it is impossible to consider one without the other. We must give complete relief to the American people or we can give them no relief at all.

I hope you will set aside political considerations, though we have heard political speeches here. This transcends political questions and political interests, and besides, nobody is going to make any political capital by destroying price control at this time.

I desire to make the explanation of House Joint Resolution 371 section by section.

Sections 1 and 2 of the extension resolution merely change the expiration date of the Emergency Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act of July 20, 1946.

Section 3 gives the authorization for the continued payment of subsidies during the short period of extension provided for by sections 1 and 2. Just extending the act would make effective the last paragraph of section 2 (e) of the Emergency Price Control Act which prohibits the payment of subsidies by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or the Commodity Credit Corporation unless funds have been specifically appropriated. Since subsidies relating to price control are paid for out of revolving funds, this clause would not permit the payment of subsidies during the extension period. Therefore, section 3 specifically authorizes the payment of subsidies during the extension period on just the same basis that subsidies were being paid on June 29, 1946. No new subsidies would be undertaken in this period.

Section 4 covers the problems arising from the fact that there will be a gap between the original termination date of the act and the enactment of the extending resolution. If the resolution did not specify an effective date, the enactment of the resolution would reenact the Emergency Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act as of the date of enactment of the resolution. It would then probably be necessary to reissue all regulations and orders fixing prices and rents, and other problems would arise because of the interruption to the effectiveness of price and rent controls. By specifying that the effective date of the resolution should be June 30, 1946, the Congress would make it clear that there was no interruption to the continuity of the acts and regulations and orders issued under them. But if the law were made retroactive with respect to violations of regulations or orders after June 30, 1946, it would conflict with the constitutional prohibition against ex post facto laws. Therefore section 4 specifically provides that the resolution shall not operate retroactively with respect to offenses committed after June 30, 1946, and that no actions may be brought with respect to such violations. The result is that the continuity of the laws will be preserved so far as it can be done constitutionally.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, there has been presented to us a very unfortunate situation. One, I might say, that is no little embarrassing to all of us who were sincerely and conscientiously in favor of the continuance of price control but in such a manner that we would get maximum production. I am afraid that the action taken by the President has destroyed all control which we ever have had over the objectives of the House in controlling prices, and at the same time getting adequate, sufficient production, to prevent inflation.

The theory of the bill was that when the President broke the wage price line, that effective price control no longer existed, and that the only thing which would save this country from inflation was production, production, and more production. Notwithstanding any action which this Congress takes or might have taken, notwithstanding any action which the President took in respect to the bill which was sent to him, prices are going up within the next few days, and I know that if they follow their usual bent many of the people who have been denouncing the action taken by the House are going to blame the Congress for the increase in these prices. But the OPA was about to announce an increase in the price of many commodities to absorb increases in production costs; they were about to announce increases in the prices of many commodities, because today is the effective date of the increase in transportation costs on many commodities. Of course, the President, having vetoed the bill which provided for the payment of subsidies, he has wiped out all possibility of subsidies being used to adjust our economy in such manner that it will not feel the impact of suddenly taking these subsidies off.

Under those conditions, of course, prices are bound to go up slightly, anyway, within the next few days, and would have gone up regardless of what action the President took and regardless of what action we had taken.

I am not going to vote for this resolution. I do not see how I can consistently vote for this resolution after I have told this House that after the House and the Senate and the conferees on the disagreeing amendments have striven for months to harmonize all the differences in this bill, after the statement was made that that was the very best bill which could possibly be enacted, that statement being made by the leaders on both sides, a statement which I honestly and conscientiously believe. Because I believed it I advised you at that time that the President might be justified in the public mind in vetoing a bill with specific decontrols in it, but would not be justified in vetoing a bill without specific decontrols, and I told you, as did the leadership on both sides—and I was merely reflecting their attitude when I told you this—that if you voted to eliminate these specific decontrols it would put you in a position where you could safely and justifiably refuse to vote for a continuing resolution, and that if in the face of that condition, where we had gone just as far as we humanly could go to make the bill satisfactory to the President before it was enacted, he vetoed the bill, then he must take the consequences.

I cannot consistently vote for the continuation of this bill because of that, but I might say that if it is in the wisdom of this Congress that we continue these price controls for 20 days or 15 days or any other length of time, then of course we will go to work on it. The Committee on Banking and Currency will probably report out again the same kind of a bill it reported out in the first place, which was not and would not be responsive to the will of this House. The Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate will likewise report out a bill, undoubtedly, which would not be reflective of the attitude of the Members of the other body. So there we are on the wheel again, we can keep going 'round and 'round and 'round. But in the meantime, because of the President's attitude, those of us who wanted to control prices and those who thought that that was the way to do it, those of us who were conscientious in the belief that price control should be continued in such a manner that full production could be obtained, have lost all control over the situation now. We have no control over that.

I would not get up before this House and seek to contend successfully against the attitude which was existent here for specific decontrols, and I would not think that under the circumstances I could say to the Senate conferees, "You shall eliminate these specific decontrols or otherwise the President might veto the bill," because he has already done it. So we have lost control over it. The Senate will write specific decontrols in the bill. The Senate will not pass this continuing resolution. What you are going to get back in consequence of passing this continuing resolution is perhaps just the same thing you sent to the President, and probably from his standpoint very much worse.

In the meantime, we have to do something with respect to the control of rents. Immediately after the consideration of this resolution I am going to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a joint resolution which has for its purpose the reenacting and continuing of the effective control and stabilization of rents for housing accommodations. The resolution provides that any and all of the provisions of the Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, in respect to rents are reenacted and continued for a period of 1 year. We can eliminate from these disputes with respect to prices generally this question of rents. We gave the country the assurance that rent control would be continued. I do not think there are very many people in the House or in the Senate who successfully contend that we do not have to control rents during this period of housing scarcity. It would be catastrophic if we did not continue rent control. So in order that there might be good faith and in order that we may do what we wanted to do and what we understood we were doing, I have offered this resolution so that the question of rent control can be completely divorced from this controversy as to whether this temporary resolution shall be adopted or whether some bill may be agreed upon at some later date. I hope no one will object to the present consideration of the resolution when it is offered by me. I hope it will pass, and in that way we will guarantee to the people that rent control will not be affected by any action which we may take or neglect to take within the next year.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Of course, the bill which passed both the House and Senate and which was sent to the President and then vetoed by him expressly took care of the matter of rent control, did it not?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman is absolutely correct, and in vetoing the bill the President, of course, at the same time allowed rent control to lapse on June 30.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Will the gentleman explain the situation that may exist in the interim between now and the time that the bill is enacted? Goods are being billed now at prices on which there is no control. Will the reenactment of the bill affect such cases? Is it retroactive? Is there a free market now?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the resolution should reenact the provisions of the Price Control Act. I think that is what they intend to do by the last paragraph It presents a very interesting academic legal question, but probably one which will not affect price control or any action which we may eventually take.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOM].

Mr. THOM. Mr. Chairman, I am greatly surprised to see that there is so much divergence of opinion about the passage of this resolution. The newspapers carried a very vigorous and forthright statement by the chairman of the Republican National Committee, the gentleman from Tennessee, Hon. CARROLL REECE, calling upon the Congress to reenact price control for scarce articles as well as rent controls. It seems to me that that statement ought to have brought a substantial unanimity in the House to the effect that some kind of price control is necessary. However, members of his own party do not seem to respond to his call. I am sure that he has expressed the feeling of the country.

The whole country is looking to the House of Representatives for action today. We have never had a similar economic condition in which there was so much uncertainty. No man can make a contract. No man can foresee what he can do in the future so far as business is concerned. Landlords and tenants are without knowledge as to what they are going to do in the future. Contracts are expiring. If you think the Congress is going to escape the burden of responsibility, I fear you will find yourselves greatly in error because the people know that the President is calling upon us to help solve this problem and it would be futile and unwise in my opinion not to respond favorably to that call.

We must remember that when we sent this legislation to the President almost on the last day before the expiration of price control, we put him in a position of great embarrassment. That was practically a club to force him to sign what we had enacted. He has a right to use his discretion. If we had given him sufficient time he could have exercised his veto and this Congress could have proceeded, before the expiration of the old Price Control Act, to remedy any defects and to improve the measure to the best of our ability. For these reasons I think the Congress has the burden of acting, and if we do not do so we will produce a stalemate in business that will affect all lines and will be dangerous to the future prosperity of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOM] has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Miss SUMNER].

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, most people would think this too serious for political leaders to try to make such efforts toward lining up people by accusing them of playing politics if they do not vote for this, and try to make them act too tweedle dumbly.

Reference has been made to the hearings. There is an attempt to make it seem that there was some kind of a filibuster on the part of the minority. Therefore, I think you should know when your people ask you that in our committee the Democratic chairman the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE], decides who shall be the witnesses for the administration and who shall be the witnesses for the minority, and he sets the time.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Not at the moment. You can take your own time.

And he decides how long the minority witnesses shall testify. When I sat in the committee I have tried and tried to get a chance to ask a question and in order to do so, when the opposition witnesses are testifying, I had to interfere with their testimony and cut it short, and, therefore, mostly I do not even attend the committee.

In the OPA hearings we have had witnesses from every industry in the United States, I think, bar none, telling you that they cannot produce under OPA and the confiscatory OPA ceilings. The thing is too vast and complicated for such men—such little men as are these men in OPA to try to operate. Those insiders in OPA, as you know, are rather lawless men. You remember the Bankhead-Brown amendment. They have violated it repeatedly. Regardless of what law you pass, they are going to do business as usual. I think they were extremely disappointed, in reality, when you failed to pass that pale pink compromise law which would not have bothered them in the least, because when you failed to pass it over the President's veto you prevented their having a chance to blame on Congress the failures, the repeated failures, and the increasing failures which are inevitable because the OPA is one big racket from start to finish, even rent control. Rent control is only a method of keeping down rents even below costs, and making things so disagreeable that people have to sell their buildings for a song to some political racketeer, and preventing building, and in the end forcing Congress to pass the Communist Party program of housing, slum-clearance housing, costing billions of dollars every year, for which the big political racketeers who are the mainspring behind this OPA, and do not forget it, are going to get their usual hoggish share of the proceeds. The reason why high Government officials are floundering around like fish in a net, in a communistic net which they have built around themselves, is because they see by the Government statistics—and I do not mean the deceptive scrambled statistics they have fed the public—that right now their planned economy house of cards is tumbling right around their heads, and Government officials and Communists alike are going to fall with it—and you will fall, too, if you go along with them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] is a very fair chairman. There has never been a time when he did not treat each and every member of the Banking and Currency Committee and every Member of this House fairly. There has never been a time when he caused a member to stop interrogating a witness. That is evidenced by the printed hearings. From them you will find that the gentlewoman from Illinois and one or two other members of the minority took days, and days, and days, bringing back very important witnesses to the stand to interrogate them. The chairman of the committee was so fair and considerate that he invariably asked all witnesses to testify before our committee that the members of the minority wanted to testify. He never refused to do that.

The gentlewoman from Illinois insists on calling this bill a communistic bill. She has, as a matter of fact, branded every bill that comes from our committee and on the floor of this House that she opposes as a communistic bill. She said that OPA was communistic, that Bretton Woods was communistic, that the British loan was communistic, that the veterans' emergency housing bill was a communistic bill. So in calling these bills communistic I believe she is entirely wrong, just as wrong as she is when she says that our chairman has not treated her fairly. Our chairman has not only treated her fairly but he has treated every other member of that committee fairly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I assure you I did not know the gentleman from Texas was going to deliver a eulogy on me when I yielded to him.

I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of approving the resolution that is before the Committee at this time. I have been down home in recent days, I have talked with the people there. I have seen the messages that have been coming in. I believe I know what they are thinking. I have talked with veterans who are in school under the GI bill of rights and who are being paid $65 a month if single, and $90 if married. I have talked with their wives and I know something of the fear that confronts them today because of the effective emasculation of price control.

There is great concern throughout the country, and rightly so, because it is felt that if price control is discontinued or if we do not have some effective form of price control that same type of ruinous inflation that we experienced following the last World War is going to hit us again; and I believe there is no question about it. There is no way of avoiding inflation unless we continue price control. Perhaps a great deal of the confusion comes about, and probably some of the opposition to continuing price control, through reference to the agency, the OPA, itself. I do not uphold OPA for all the things it has done. I think it has done some foolish things. It has been quite unwise in many of its administrative orders. But I do thoroughly believe that we must have some form of effective price control if we are to stay out of that inflationary spiral that will ruin the small business people of this country, the farmers, wage earners, white-collar workers, the little people generally throughout these United States. I know that fear is gripping the people of this country today as they see price control going out.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Does the gentleman believe that the price control bill that passed the House and Senate and that was finally agreed upon by the conferees would have been at all helpful in controlling prices?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not know that I am competent to say. I had very much hoped from the statement made by the chairman of the committee when he presented the conference report here that it would be a workable bill that we could live with. I may say I do feel that the bill which the House passed originally was practically a farce so far as price control is concerned. I voted against every single amendment offered to that bill, not because I felt there was no merit in any of them. I think several of the amendments had some merit in them. I felt very definitely, however, that the sum total effect of all the amendments was to destroy price control completely. Therefore I can say to the gentleman I feel that the bill which we sent to the Senate was totally ineffective as a price-control measure.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. The President, having been advised by the leadership of both the House and Senate, that if the bill reported by the conference did not become law there would be no price control, in view of that, and his having vetoed that bill, if we were to pass this resolution and send him a bill he could approve, the credit would mainly go to him. However, suppose we get no price control at all, because the President has vetoed the bill that the leadership of both the House and Senate advised him to sign, and we get nothing at all, where would the responsibility rest for getting nothing?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Of course, I am not concerned with where the credit goes. I am concerned with having an effective price control to prevent ruinous inflation in this country and I do not care who gets the credit.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. It is not a question of credit. It is a question of responsibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, the situation already existing today, with no price-control legislation at all on the statute books, convinces me more strongly than ever that the proper course last Saturday was to override the President's veto and to have enacted the law as contained in the conference report.

I have spoken with a number of my friends who are members of the Judiciary Committee, and, in addition to the economic confusion pervading the country, apparently there are a great number of legal problems which have arisen and which will arise, even some legal problems connected with the resolution itself and the proper form which it should take.

I think the President made a grave error in confronting the country with this situation. Many of the consequences cannot be repaired even if this resolution is adopted quickly. That, after all, is water over the dam. Our problem today is to try to work out of the confusion created as quickly as possible and to the best interests of the country.

Personally, I feel strongly that we should vote for the continuing resolution. As a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, assuming the joint resolution is adopted, I intend to do my best to see that some workable compromise is brought in by that committee. I realize that we will have to find something that will be acceptable both to the President of the United States and to the Congress; consequently, some of us are going to have to yield our views on certain points, even as many of us did in respect to the conference report when we voted for it. There were many provisions in that report with which I disagree—some against which I voted.

I do not feel quite as pessimistic about the ability of the committee to do that as our chairman indicated he did in his opening statement. The trouble with the country today is that there has been too much rigidity of attitude, too much desire to secure one's own ends and one's own views to the exclusion of thousands of other people—too little give and take during this tough adjustment period. If we could only follow the Golden Rule just a little more closely—all of us. Personally, I am ready to yield considerably on my views with the desire and ambition to get something that will work and which will prevent any uncontrolled rise in prices. That is the essence of the problem. If we do not do that, we will have failed at this time. We will have permitted a minority to control, to the detriment of the great majority.

I believe that it can be done, and I shall do my best to have it done. The President's message, in the first part, was polititcal in its implications; it was a political speech; but when you get to the end of it where the President states what he will accept, he admits in principle the policy of decontrol which was incorporated in the bill which he vetoed. He accepts in broad principle the Taft amendment, which he so bitterly criticized by saying:

> I would not object to a provision which expressly requires the adjustment of price ceilings wherever this is necessary and would be effective to increase the total production of needed goods.

I voted against the cost plus amendment in the House, but I cannot agree with the President's view that it will be as bad in its effect as he believes it would be. In my opinion it goes too far and would be damaging. It should have been put in in changed form, but it certainly would not have produced the results he claims it would. He also indicates that he is prepared to see subsidies eliminated and scaled down during the first half of 1947. If the President and the OPA had offered this much 3 or 4 months before the bill was reported by our committee, I believe many of the sweeping and bad amendments adopted on the floor could have been defeated.

So, in general, in the President's veto message, he indicates his willingness to accept a good part of the House bill. I intend to vote for this continuing resolution and do my best to bring in a workable bill that will provide effective price control. Then if the President should decide to veto that one, I will vote for another continuing resolution and go through the process all over again.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, as perhaps most of you know, I have consistently opposed OPA legislation. I think I was one of very few that voted against it at the time it was enacted. I thought then that it was not compatible with our form of government. I thought it was undemocratic, unconstitutional, and unworkable. I still hold to those views.

But notwithstanding the views that I have entertained heretofore in regard to the basic law, somewhat consistent with my own policy for voting for liberal rules which permit the consideration and adequate debate of legislation, I have concluded to vote for this resolution, believing that it is the only reasonable thing to do in view of the fact that the President has requested it. After all, he is the Chief Executive and charged with the responsibility of effectively enforcing the laws enacted by the Congress.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON of North Carolina. It is the only possibility for any price control, then, is it not?

Mr. COOLEY. I think the gentleman is exactly right. While I doubt very much if the committee will bring in any legislation which will meet with my approval, I am willing to subordinate my views on this particular question and at least give them an opportunity to work upon the problem, because I realize that it is of great importance to the people of this country.

I do not agree that this resolution is legal, or that the effect of it will be to legally revive or reenact a law. The speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] a minute ago indicated that perhaps the resolution is not open for amendment, but it seems to me that it should be amended so as to reenact the law which expired last night at midnight. We certainly cannot revive or reenact it by merely amending it.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BUFFETT].

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to offer my testimony on the statement made here a little earlier that the gentlewoman from Illinois spent days and days questioning witnesses. I have been a member of the Banking Committee now for 2 years, and I have never seen anything like that happen.

Secondly, I do not particularly want to enter into the controversy about "who killed Cock Robin." But I do believe we are entitled to a little more information on that subject. The President says that on September 6, 1945, he urged the Congress to pass an extension law promptly.

May I ask the chairman of my committee if the President at or about that time asked him to have hearings on this law?

Mr. SPENCE. I have no recollection of getting any communication from the President. Since the President said he asked for it, I assume he did ask, but I have no recollection of it. I know this, that most of the people who are now complaining about not being treated fairly are the people who took up most of the time in the hearings.

Mr. BUFFETT. May I ask the gentleman this: If the President had sent a message directly to him, he certainly would not have turned the President down, would he?

Mr. SPENCE. I think it is very obvious I am not trying to turn him down now. I think the gentleman understands that.

Mr. BUFFETT. Yes; I do. I think the Congress and the country should understand that if the President had actually tried to secure hearings last September as his veto message indicated, he would have had those hearings promptly. I made such a request on the 26th of September. We started hearings late in February.

We are never going to get anywhere on the increase of inflation and prices as long as we keep working at cross-purposes. We have had one crisis after another here this spring, crises that are made to order for the advancement of communism not only here but all over the world. We are called on today to pass an extension of the OPA Act for 20 days because of the danger of much higher prices, but at the other end of this week we will be called upon to create $3,750,000,000 of pure inflation in the form of a loan to Great Britain.

Is it not about time to stop fooling the people of this Nation? If this administration continues its reckless loaning policy, price control becomes an instrument for the destruction of the Nation. Why not face the music now and save us from the fate of Germany and others who have been wrecked by price control.

It is time for a showdown—for the people to learn that all the price-control laws in the world cannot keep prices down as long as the Government keeps diluting and debauching our currency.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN].

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, most Members of this House have been bombarded today with telegrams from constituents, running 35 and 40 to 1, demanding the continuation of price control, not the meaningless price control which would profit the inflationists and economically massacre the people, but price control with authority to lead us in an orderly fashion through the transition period from war to peace.

The facts are clear and decisive. The door to inflation has been opened wide. The situation would have been the same had the meaningless measure passed last week been upheld. The veto was the only step the President, fully cognizant of his responsibility to the country, could have taken to throw the issue squarely at the people and let them take up the cudgels for their own protection.

Every Member of this House is now fully aware of the danger facing the country.

The people are demanding that we face the facts and act upon them. It is our clear responsibility and business to reject the exploiters and vote for this resolution.

This resolution, moreover, gives the opponents of price control, who now are confronted by the Frankenstein they created, to extricate themselves from the mess into which they plunged themselves by their own short-sightedness. There is little comfort in "I told you so" for those of us who stood firm against every effort to scuttle these inflationary controls.

The country imperatively requires now a unanimity of support for this resolution and a sober approach to the magnitude of the problems as we resume work on a measure which will be an effective answer to the inflationary menace.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, the time has come to quit making reckless, incorrect statements. It has been said that every Member has been flooded with telegrams because the President asked the public to send telegrams to their Members. I received just one telegram, and I shall read it:

Representative WILLIAM LEMKE,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

Condemn veto by President Truman. Do not favor revising old OPA set-up. Rather let OPA die a natural death.

S. B. BAGNE.

It is the only telegram I have received.

Now, let us get together and reason and find out what is wrong with the OPA.

In the first place, it is an un-American institution. It is an illegitimate child. It was born of foreign parentage. It was imported from Russia and Great Britain. Canada, New Zealand, and Australia refused to adopt this Russian-British half-breed.

The ways of the OPA are foreign to the things that made America great. Regimentation and dictatorship, in themselves are un-American. Its performance has been even worse than its foreign birth. Few people realize to what extent it interfered with and prevented full production. It has been the bottleneck of production. It is largely responsible for the empty shelves. It has not kept the cost of living down but has increased it.

The OPA has been guilty of extortion. It has illegally extracted money from hundreds and thousands of innocent people. Recently merchants and implement dealers complained that the OPA was collecting twenty-five and fifty dollars not because of any overcharge, but because they claimed there was something wrong with the sales tag. These merchants and dealers were accused of violating some OPA regulation. They were threatened with prosecution, triple damages, and imprisonment.

When I mentioned this to a merchant recently, he smiled and said, "Well, I just paid $175. I knew it was extortion, but they threatened to drag me into court. You may blame us for submitting to such extortion and corruption, but Congress is responsible for permitting such an un-American institution to be at large. This because, as businessmen, we cannot afford to be brought into court even on false charges."

Mr. Bowles claims that the OPA kept the cost of living down. The truth is the cost of living is about one and a half times as high as it was during the comparable months after World War I. Nearly everything that you eat, drink, or wear, except sugar, is higher than it was after World War I. In addition, there were no empty shelves after World War I. There was no OPA to interfere with production. You could buy what you wanted and the prices were lower than now.

I repeat, the OPA has created a scarcity of commodities by interfering with production. The longer we keep it the greater will be the scarcity—the higher the prices. We should not expect that anyone can or will produce or manufacture articles below the cost of production. No honest person except the lounge lizard expects the farmer, the manufacturer, or the merchant to produce, manufacture, or serve him below cost of production or operation.

Mr .SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday I voted to override the President's veto. I did so because I was deeply concerned about the situation in which I was afraid the country would find itself with a sudden complete cessation of all controls. By the same process of reasoning it seems to me it would be an utterly irresponsible action not to pass the pending resolution. I think the pending resolution is our very minimum duty to the Nation. Obviously, what the country needs is a transitional control of essential prices and rents until such time as production has caught up with demand. The law should provide for an orderly decontrol process, but for firm, effective control where needed. That is what we should have given the Nation in the first place. The only thing we can do in that direction today is to pass the pending resolution. I am confident it will pass. I hope it will pass without amendment.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. The same reasons for supporting a vote to override the veto also will support a vote for this resolution?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I agree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we can go back into one of the books of our childhood to find a verse which aptly describes the condition confronting us as a result of President Truman's veto of the OPA Extension Act. As I recall, it went like this:

Humpty Dumpty (OPA) sat on a wall,
Humpty Dumpty (OPA) had a big fall,
All the king's horses and all the king's men
Could not put Humpty Dumpty (OPA) together again.

I am afraid that is exactly where the country finds itself today. I voted to override the President's veto on Saturday because I was convinced that exactly this would happen. I think it was one of the most reckless and dangerous acts ever engaged in by a high executive of this country when President Truman, by Presidential veto, threw OPA into the ash can and bet the entire future stability of this dangerous transition period from wartime to peacetime on the flip of a coin, hoping that some particular philosophy of OPA which he favored might eventuate.

I shall vote today for the 20-day continuing resolution because I have always felt that there was a job for OPA to do in this country to help control prices so long as the supply fails to equal the demand. I think we require an OPA which not only seeks to control prices to curtail inflation but which also controls prices to stimulate production. We have not had that under Chester Bowles. His administration of OPA has fumbled badly the first of these objectives and it has failed even more dismally on the second.

Instead, we have had a poisonous potpourri of inept people and inane policies which were bringing us rapidly to disaster. It was in an effort to correct this bureaucratic bungling that Congress wrote the corrective amendments in the bill the President voted. I think if the President wants to have a speedy OPA bill passed by this Congress he can get it quickly by appointing William Jeffers as OPA Director. If he does not like Bill Jeffers, he can appoint Jesse Jones, of Houston, Tex. Jones is a good administrator, and the Congress and the people have confidence in his ability. I think he is the kind of man to do a job with OPA. If Mr. Truman does not like either of them he can appoint Edward R. Stettinius who did an efficient job with lend-lease but who has since been kicked around from pillar to post and from post to pitfall until finally he had to resign to save his self-respect. If we can get a good Administrator for OPA who believes in stimulating production rather than playing politics with OPA, I am convinced the President can readily secure from the Congress the kind of legislation which will enable OPA to attain its twofold objectives.

Neither Jeffers, Jones, nor Stettinius would endeavor to create a climate of fear and of favoritism designed to make OPA a permanent Government agency. Each of them has business experience enough and confidence enough in our American way of life to realize the wisdom of establishing OPA policies which would as rapidly as possible stimulate production so that it would equal demand and in that way eliminate all reason—except the political one—for continuing OPA beyond that point.

Mr. Chairman, when I addressed this body last Saturday, speaking in support of the resolution to override the President's veto, I pointed out that failure to override the veto might well mean the demise of OPA. I called attention to the rules of procedure obtaining in the other body at the other end of the Capitol. I predicted that filibustering tactics and dilatory techniques in that body might well consume so much time that the price structures and rental controls of OPA could fall apart before a continuing resolution would be passed. The President is a former member of that other body. He knows better than I the realistic situation prevailing at that end of the Capitol. To me, this makes all the more amazing and alarming the fact that the President listened to the ambitious advisers in his New Deal coterie to the point that he vetoed the price control extension act against the considered counsel of Speaker RAYBURN, Majority Leader MCCORMACK, and Senate Leader BARKLEY and thus severed all the life lines which Congress had constructed to hold the line against runaway prices. As the lord high executioner of OPA, President Truman must stand the consequences of what develops.

Particularly in the field of rentals does it seem to me that the President has chosen to make a reckless gamble with the public interest—especially insofar as the veterans are concerned who so badly need housing facilities at a price they can afford to pay. I hope that some form of new rental control can be established without delay, regardless of what the fates have in store for this continuing resolution and for OPA in general.

In conclusion, let me urge my Republican colleagues to join me today in voting for this 20-day continuation of OPA to permit the President to have the time he has requested to work out adjustments between the OPA Act he vetoed and one which he may be willing to support. I hope that even many of you who voted in the negative on Tuesday and Saturday and who may feel that the time has come to end OPA entirely will vote in the affirmative today. If we do nothing more in 20 days than to work out an effective rent-control bill this continuation resolution will be worth while. It is to be hoped that more will be done and that the announcement of the appointment of an able, experienced, business-minded OPA Administrator will be made so that Congress can more confidently vote on new OPA legislation. Such legislation should include a workable formula for decontrolling prices when controls are no longer necessary and it might well include provisions so that wages, along with other costs, should be included in the establishment of OPA ceilings and prices. It should also include provisions for the orderly transition from price controls back to a control-free economy so that the shock of too great and too sudden a change can be cushioned for the protection of the general public.

Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this continuing resolution, and I urge others to join me in its support. However, I do not have too great a confidence that our work today will save the situation, even though we pass this resolution overwhelmingly. The Senate is likely to act with great deliberation on this matter and it may not act at all. Every day that passes will make more difficult the reenactment of price controls and the reestablishment of essential ceilings on rentals and other necessities of life. However, that is a situation created in the White House for which the House cannot assume responsibility. Let us by our vote today at least demonstrate that once again the great House of Representatives has risen to its responsibilities by meeting a critical situation with prompt action designed to make the best of a bad situation which it did not create but which perhaps it can at least help to cure.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER].

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, I think I would not have asked for this time if I had not done so before the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] had made their speeches.

I think it is a rather small thing for us to debate and cavil about the question of who is responsible now for the position we find ourselves in. Some may want to lay the responsibility at the door of the President. Somebody else may want to say that the committees were not fast enough in their operations to get the bill before the Congress soon enough. Some may be so particular and meticulous in their way that they would try to say whether it was the Republicans or the Democrats who were responsible for the fact that the bill did not go to the President sooner. That seems to me rather childish in consideration of the position which we find ourselves in today. The fact of the business is I am convinced that when one comes through the door of this Chamber one ought to forget politics in a very large measure and remember that one is the Representative in the Congress of the United States and he has self-responsibility of all the people to the extent of his ability.

So it comes to the question: What are we going to do in the position we find ourselves in? Are we going to say we will not do anything because somebody else did not do something? We cannot afford that as Members of the House of Representatives. The country is involved, the welfare of the people is highly important, and above everything else and every other consideration—and I am glad to see Members on both sides of the aisle take that position—I stand with the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from North Dakota. I, too, voted to override the President's veto because I think now I was too fearful that a resolution would not be adopted.

I think we have come to a realization of the fact that we now personally owe a responsibility to the people of the United States, and it does not make any difference who is blamable for anything like a delay that may have occurred. I do not think we will require so much time to bring back a bill. I do not know whether it will be entirely satisfactory to everybody, but all the hearings have been had, many of the witnesses examined, the record is there, and we can move pretty quickly.

I hope the resolution will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, there is no use taking up a lot of time with a political post mortem on: Who killed Cock Robin? I think a dozen amendments in the House killed OPA and inflation control, and I think a dozen amendments in the Senate killed it. I think the President merely pronounced a dead bill officially dead when he sent his veto up here.

Today we are not faced with the question, Who killed OPA? We are faced with a decision on: Where do we go from here?

We are faced with whether we will give this country temporary interim continuation of inflation control for a mere matter of 20 days while the House tries to work out, with the Senate, a better bill than the crippled and mutilated one we sent down.

A vote against this temporary resolution today means that you are voting against production, because no processor and no producer in his right mind is going to engage in all-out production in the present uncertainty as the House and the Senate try to agree on a bill within the next 20 or 30 days. Without a temporary continuing resolution, production will be uncertain.

No one engaged in the production of most of the shortage items today—meat, butter, bread, dairy products—no dairyman, no meat processor, no manufacturer can proceed with any degree of assurance because he does not know whether he will get the subsidy provided in this temporary resolution or not.

Therefore we are apt to see a complete shut-down by almost all of the dairymen, all of the meat processors, who want to continue existing ceilings because they cannot afford to kill and manufacture and process these goods if they are not certain whether they can get the subsidy or not. Surely, if we do not have this temporary continuing resolution they cannot depend upon them.

Then what happens? It takes quite a time before these goods are processed from the raw materials and reach the dealers' counters. All of that inventory that will be built up by retailers in this interim may be at an uncontrolled price. Then these inventories will have to drop down 10, 20, or 30 percent after price control goes back on, should Congress finally agree on a bill for the next year. So business will find itself confused and confounded in an effort to try and operate in this interim unless we pass this simple 20-day continuance. We must let the people of America know where they stand.

Another thing I would like to point out is the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] that we pass only a rent control without other price controls and have that effective for a year.

In the interest of justice and equity do we dare make a guinea pig out of the landlords of the country? I am no lawyer, but may I ask, can the Congress pass a law so there will be no ceilings on anything except rents? Could we control the prices of buckwheat cakes, baby buggies, eggs, or butter selectively?

I do not think we can. I do know a little about law, and on the temple of justice across the plaza it is stated: "Equal justice under the law." I do not believe this Congress can penalize one single group of people and that group alone and make the law stick on rents, even as badly as we all need rent control.

Rent control goes with the rest of the inflation-control program, the program to stabilize the cost of living clear across the board.

We want to do the best possible job we can. I do not think the House, I do not think the Congress, I do not think the courts will recognize that an act simply stabilizing the cost of rents, penalizing one small segment of America only, and letting other costs go through the roof, is legal.

You know what will happen if we tried a law like that. You would have to raise the rent next month 15 percent, the following month 30 percent and the following month 45 percent if you try to do equity to the people who own property. For as the spiral of inflation goes on up, as the cost of their improvements, and so forth, including the maintenance of their property, spirals upward, more and more adjustments would have to be made.

I do not think this Congress wants to single out one group only for control.

Several things have been said about this satisfactory bill that the House sent down to the President. I would like to remind the gentlemen on the Republican side of the aisle that the two senior Senators in the conference refused to sign this so-called satisfactory bill, Senator TAFT and Senator MILLIKIN, and one of the senior Members of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD], refused to sign the bill.

It seems to me, that this satisfactory bill was neither satisfactory to those who wanted less price control nor to those of us who wanted a bill which we felt was strong enough to prevent inflation. If it was not satisfactory to either side, it could not have been a very effective bill.

This Nation wants effective, not phony, price control until production makes further controls by law unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

All time has expired. The Clerk will read the joint resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 1 (b) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is amended by striking out "June 30, 1946," and substituting "July 20, 1946."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Oklahoma, something should be said in respect to what attitude the gentlemen he mentioned took. Of three conferees who did not sign the conference report, two of them did not sign it because we eliminated specific decontrols in the bill. Surely the gentleman from Oklahoma is not in favor of that himself. When he states that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] refused to sign the conference report he should have checked his facts on that a little bit because, at the time the conference report was signed about midnight, Mr. CRAWFORD was on his way to the Philippines and was not available to sign the bill. He had not left any instructions what to do, so none of us assumed to have his proxy in that respect.

The reason why the two gentlemen whom he mentioned in the other body did not sign the report was because it did not contain provisions which we had eliminated from it and because specific decontrols had been eliminated it was unsatisfactory to them, not because of the manner in which the conference report came back.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MONRONEY. I want to thank the gentleman for the correction regarding the gentleman from Michigan, Representative CRAWFORD. I was not aware of those facts.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Well, the gentleman apparently has not got his facts straight in reference to the other gentleman either.

Mr. MONRONEY. The very fact that the two Senators refused to sign the report——

Mr. WOLCOTT. They refused to sign it because there were not specific decontrols in it; because they were dissatisfied on account of this bill not going far enough.

Mr. MONRONEY. Yes, and a lot of us were dissatisfied because it went too far.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then it was your responsibility to get something that was better.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, of course, it is interesting to hear my colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] lay the whole of the OPA troubles onto the Republicans. It is my understanding that the Democrats had a majority in the Congress and also a majority on the Banking Committees in both the House and Senate. It looks like they ought to have been able to bring back a bill that was not such a monstrosity. According to the President, the bill which his party gave to him was impossible. The gentleman from Oklahoma, I assume, signed the conference report.

Mr. MONRONEY. I was not on the conference.

Mr. RIZLEY. Anyhow, you voted for the conference report when it was before the House, the bill which the President says is bad and which he vetoed, and I cannot quite understand now, why you should attempt to lay the whole blame to the three Republican Members of the committees. You had your own Democratic colleagues write the conference report. So you now charge three Republican members on a committee of 14 for this terrible, terrible thing that happened.

Let us analyze what my friend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] said. The substance of what he said was the same thing that this OPA crowd has been contending for all along, that you cannot decontrol one thing without decontrolling everything. Regardless of supply and demand you must control all or nothing. That was the substance of his argument. Again says my colleague, "We must not let this die because," he said "these cattle producers are not going to keep on producing because there will not be any more subsidies." The cattle producers, bless your heart, have been trying to get rid of this thing for months, they never wanted subsidies. What they want is a fair price and a market place and not subsidies, and I doubt that meat will go up as much as is now paid in subsidies, plus the black market prices, and we will be able to get meat in a legitimate market.

He mentioned rents. I think the most sensible thing that has been offered here today is the resolution by the gentleman from Michigan. Let us analyze it a little. Rent is in a different category than any of these other things. If you take these controls off, we do not know how fast many products which the consumer buys will come back into production. We are hopeful and believe much more quickly than most people contemplate. We do know, however, that you cannot build houses in a few weeks or in a few months, because we do not have the materials. So I think the sane solution of this thing would be to continue this control bill as to rents and let us try without other controls for a while and see whether or not all of this calamity happens that they talk about.

Here is the situation. For weeks and weeks and months two committees of this House worked on a price control bill. They brought in, according to the distinguished Speaker of the House and according to the Majority Leader in the Senate there, what they said was the best bill that it was possible to get. Now we are voting on a resolution here continuing it for 2 weeks. Let me remind you what was said not only by the members of the committee, but the Democratic leaders of the Senate and the House as well. They said, "We must get this conference report approved or we will not get anything." Now you want to go back for 2 weeks in the face of all that and keep this chaotic condition. People do not know where they are. We are asked to get this control bill out today, that is true, but what they are asking us to do is to send it back for 2 weeks and try to enact something that everybody says cannot be enacted. The President said that he would not just take any bill, unless it is substantially the law as it now exists. He will again veto it. Does anybody here think that the House or the Senate, either one, is going to give us the kind of a bill that the President and the CIO-PAC apparently want? Of course, they are not.

We had better pass this resolution offered by the gentleman from Michigan continuing control on rents and then hope the respective States will take care of their own rent situations. I think everyone in this country is patriotic. If the people who produce and if the manufacturers and the retailers and the wholesalers are going to put up prices sky high, this Congress can come back and write a real control bill and put wages in with it. That is one of the troubles we have had. We have not had a control bill. When the Little Steel formula went down the river the President of the United States, I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma, was one of the first men that not only bulged the line, but he broke the line when he made the deal with the labor leaders. You cannot have price control unless some limit is placed on wages. The gentleman from Oklahoma as well as myself back in 1943, when the Gore amendment came up, voted for a control bill straight across the board, and the President of the United States then through his majority said "No," and the Congress put controls on everything but left wages alone, and wages have gone on up ever since. They are reflected in everything that is produced or manufactured, they enter into the price of everything the consumer buys, and you cannot have price control without controlling everything that enters into the price.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 1, lines 5 and 8, after the word "July", strike out the figure "20" and insert the figure "10."

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, simply to direct the attention of the Chair to it, that section 2 has not been read; therefore it is not in order to offer an amendment to it at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is correct. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment to include only the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 1, line 5, after the word "July", strike out the figure "20" and insert the figure "10."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, we have "thrashed a lot of old straw" today. It is amazing what difficulties can arise from a veto. I am reminded now of when Winston Churchill graced the rostrum here and held up his fingers to indicate the V for victory, but I think in the lexicon of Mr. Truman "V" is now for veto; but it offers no comfort because we have a difficulty to contend with.

I fancy the most important and most impressive thing the President of the United States said in the veto message was that part in which he said, "Production slow-downs will develop due to price uncertainties." Why let it continue for 20 days? Why let uncertainty with its clammy hand reach into every enterprise, large and small, in the United States of America?

I had a call from Chicago a moment ago. I understand that live cattle on the Chicago market this morning jumped from 18 to 25 cents. "Shall we buy or shall we not buy? Shall we buy suits or shall we not buy suits?" Whether it is large business or small business, that uncertainty begins to upset the whole free enterprise structure of the country. Why let it continue? Why let the agony be prolonged for a period of 20 days? Is not 10 days enough?

You know very well what is going to happen. It is always rather perilous to be prophetic, but as I see it this is what is going to happen. This resolution probably will be adopted by this House this afternoon. It will go to another body. It will be referred to the appropriate committee, on Banking and Currency. It is entirely new matter. Let me say to you that another body does not easily and idly come by that characterization of the world's greatest deliberative body. They are going to deliberate because this is new matter. I have been over checking a little this afternoon to see what the possibilities are. It may run on for 2 or 3 weeks or for 4 weeks, and so the agony is prolonged, and where is the whole free enterprise structure of the country, not knowing which way to turn?

Is the difficulty so insoluble? I fancy from what I heard in the veto message and in the President's speech on Saturday night that the principal bone of contention is that amendment that accepts the base period of 1941 for cost purposes and then adds the accruing costs. Would it be so difficult for the conferees or, for that matter, for all the members of the House Committee on Banking and Currency and the members of the same committee of another body to sit down in sweet fellowship for just about 2 hours and determine what they are going to do? They require no 20 days to do it. They require, as a matter of fact, not 10 days to do it. It can be done within a space of a few hours if it is a question of whether they are going to agree or disagree. They can make up their minds within a period of a single day. But if this runs on until July 20 there will be confusion worse confounded in every corner of the country—so why not shorten the time? If I had my way, and if July 4 was not an official holiday, I would have made it the 4th day of July and then we would know whether there would be an observance of a second Declaration of Independence. But I am willing to err on the charitable side and make it 10 days. That will serve as a pressure upon those in another body who will then have the responsibility of disposing of this resolution. But to let it run on for 20 days is going to bring confusion to every line of enterprise in every section of the country and there will be indescribable bewilderment. I sincerely hope we do not do that. I think in that one respect the President was right. There will be confusion out of that kind of uncertainty. So I recommend to you that we shorten the time by making the date July 10 and thus resolve this issue at the earliest possible date for the benefit of the country.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, certainly the gentleman from Illinois realizes the purpose for which we ask a 20-day extension. He says he is very generous in offering an amendment to make it 10 days. But we know how slow the processes of legislation are. We have heard the Chairman criticized today because he did not accede to the wishes of the Committee. If he had acceded, we would have been holding these hearings until the first of next year. Certainly the Congress is not going to cavil about 10 days which would utterly destroy the purpose of the resolution and which would make it impossible to act. I think if we are given 20 days we may have an opportunity to come to some conclusion, but certainly we can not do it in 10 days.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. It seems to me the gentleman from Illinois contradicts himself and is talking beside the point. The issue before us is to continue the OPA for 20 days as it was.

Mr. SPENCE. That is the purpose. The purpose is to give the Committee time to consider and try to come to some conclusion which will satisfy the President and those who have to administer the law.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman will recall when he appeared before the Committee on Rules there had been suggestions in the Congress and in the debate here about 15 days and 2 weeks. I suggested in the Committee on Rules what I thought would be desirable, that is, to limit the time to 2 weeks. I have sent to the Clerk's desk an amendment making such provision. Am I correct in understanding that the Chairman of the Committee would not be averse to a 2-week limitation rather than 20 days?

Mr. SPENCE. No, it seems that some of my colleagues have become very miserly with time just recently. It seems to me 2 weeks would not give us the same opportunity as 20 days. I do not think 20 days is an unreasonable request. If you followed the advice of the argument of the gentleman from Illinois, you ought to give us only 1 day.

Mr. HALLECK. I am certainly not urging anything that is out of reason. The fact of the business is that during the time this resolution is in effect this condition of uncertainty will continue throughout the country. The gentleman's committee held long hearings and gave careful consideration to this whole matter. My view is that the best interests of the country could be served by settling it as expeditiously as possible. It occurs to me that 2 weeks would be ample time for the Committee and the Congress to give it consideration.

Mr. SPENCE. May I answer the gentleman by saying there is no limitation on the time within which we could settle. If we are given 20 days to settle it and if we can settle the matter earlier than that, it would be within our province to do so.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. The type of debate that is going on now is the reason why you need all the time you can get. This is the very type that has caused delay. The conference brought the bill in at the last hour, at twilight, and now we are aroused because the President exercised his prerogative and vetoed it.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. Is it not a fact that in this resolution it provides for July 20?

Mr. SPENCE. Yes.

Mr. MONRONEY. That does not mean we will have 20 days in which to get together on a bill, because what time the other body takes to consider this comes out of that time between now and July 20. So we certainly need enough time.

Mr. SPENCE. It is certainly not an unreasonable time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman. I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. SHORT. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has the floor and has offered an amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Virginia to the amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Strike out "July 10, 1946" and insert "September 1, 1946."

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the respite offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is so brief and so inadequate as in my judgment to be totally futile. As indicated by the chairman of the committee a moment ago, we all know the legislative processes. This measure must pass the House. It then must be passed by the other body, where it will probably be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. We know just as well as that we are here that most of the time for this extension is going to be consumed in legislative processes. Now, this is a serious situation. Let us do something or let us make up our minds we are not going to do anything, and let the country know it. To merely give this respite of 10 days, proposed by the gentleman from Illinois which is going to be consumed in debate in the legislative processes, we had better not do anything. I have suggested a period of 60 days. That is September 1. I think that should give adequate time for sober consideration of the grave differences that exist between the legislative and executive agencies. Let us get this matter straight, once and for all, and let us have time within which to do it.

There is another thing which is equally if not more important. When you enact new legislation, as you are planning to do, and send it down to the White House and get it signed and enacted into law, the OPA has to change all of its regulations to meet the changed conditions. Do you think it is fair to OPA or to the business world or to the purchasers of commodities that we should pass a law one day and expect the OPA and the country to recognize it and put it into effect the next day? Now, stop and think about that for a minute, whether you are for this or against it. That is not the fair way to do it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I decline to yield.

When we do pass this legislation, if we do, we ought to pass it in ample time so that the OPA will know where they stand before the law becomes effective, so that the public will know where they stand. Then, we can get an orderly process. Let us have ample time to get this straightened out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to correct a statement made by the gentleman from Virginia. The gentleman's statement was to the effect the OPA was required to change rules on June 30 under which they must operate on July 1.

If the gentleman had studied the bill which was vetoed by the President, he would have found that it contained a provision giving OPA a reasonable period of time in which to make adjustments in their regulations, bringing them into compliance with the new law. As a matter of fact we specifically said in the law that the old regulations and price formulas would be continued for 30 days. We gave the OPA 30 days in which to make such adjustments as they saw fit in order to bring the new standards and adjustments into keeping with the new type of bill.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Since the question of extension of time has come up for consideration in the last few minutes, I should like to ask the gentleman from Michigan whether the 7th day of November next would not be a proper date for it to terminate?

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MATHEWS. Is it not possible that at the end of this 20 days they might come back and ask for another 20 days or even more?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; and if we continue this to August 31 or September 1 we merely continue the uncertainty that much longer rather than only for 20 days.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. The committee took 4½ months to collect the evidence on which the bill we presented to the President was based. What new evidence could possibly be submitted to the Congress or has been?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No new evidence has been submitted and I might state there is no new evidence or argument which has been presented in the last week which has not been presented throughout the months of hearings before the Committees on Banking and Currency of both Houses.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. The President vetoed this bill because he found it defective, and all the safeguards the gentleman was talking about were nullified by the veto. This means they have got to start over again. We cannot hark back to any provisions carried in the vetoed bill.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. At the time the President submitted his veto message he asked for 20 days' time in which a study could be made and a new bill passed. I am willing to vote for the 20 days; I shall vote for the 20 days, and shall vote against any proposal for a greater number of days at the present time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman wants to know what new evidence there is. If the gentleman who propounded the query and others will read today's papers they will see what outrageous increases in price have already taken place today. That in itself is sufficient evidence to stir us to action in the interest of the consumer and in the interest of the American people.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think it may be said, and I have told those who sought specific decontrols, especially on meat, that if it so happened that meat was specifically decontrolled and the price went up unusually high the American people would rise in their righteous wrath and be back here insisting that these controls be put back, and that if that happened they would be put back with a vengeance, and they would not come off in a matter of weeks or months and perhaps not in a matter of years. I think all industry will be hurt if they allow prices to go to unwarranted heights, for the American Congress is going to reflect the attitude of the righteously indignant people under those circumstances and put these controls back on. We are not of course going to know in 24 hours what is going to be the answer, and apparently the other body is going to take a little time to see what is going to happen before they take any action at all. What happens to prices within the next week probably will determine what kind of price control we have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, are only members of the Banking and Currency Committee to be given an opportunity to speak on this resolution even under the 5-minute rule?

Mr. SPENCE. I renew the unanimous consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHORT) there were—ayes 131, noes 107.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. BROWN of Georgia and Mr. SHORT.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 142, noes 119.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHORT moves to strike out all after the enacting clause.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not in proper form.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were—ayes 83, noes 166.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BALDWIN of New York: On page 1, line 5, after the word "substituting" strike out "July 20, 1946," and insert in lieu thereof "January 20, 1947."

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if we are going to be honest with ourselves and the American public in this crisis—and it is a crisis—everyone here has said so—that confronts the country, the only honest thing we can do is continue price control throughout the summer into the next session of Congress. It seems to me that those of us here have got to cut bait or fish, and that applies to each side of the aisle as well as the executive department. I do not conceive of this as a Republican problem or a Democratic problem. It is an American problem. I can tell those of you who have said here that the telegrams on price control come from hysterical people and from rabble rousers that those in my community, 90 percent at least of whom are in favor of price control, are not rabble rousers and are not hysterical. They are frightened people when they see the way prices go up when this price control is suddenly lifted. All we ask is that this should be continued until production and demand reach a point of reasonable balance in the economy of the Nation. Certainly we ought to permit the American people to speak on this question at the polls at the election and let the next Congress decide. Under my amendment they would have the same amount of time to decide whether this is to be continued or not as they would have under this resolution. Mr. Chairman, there is a second amendment to the next section which obviously provides the same date because the date has to be changed in the other section to correspond and when that amendment comes up I do not intend to continue the discussion by seeking recognition. It seems to me that the arguments pro and con on this whole business have been threshed out on the floor of the House for weeks and weeks. We do not need further debate. I submit this amendment in good faith and I point out to you that the Senate in 6 days, 6 months, or 6 years probably will not change the thing but at least this gives the same opportunity to these as a continuing resolution. I earnestly hope you will support the amendment.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I am sorry, sir, that while I was busily engaged in counting the teller vote, I did not have time to write out the preferential motion in proper form.

It is a bit strange that standing here on my feet for the past 20 minutes I would be denied an opportunity to be heard. Not that I count my voice so convincing but at least those of us who oppose this iniquitous resolution should have their day in court. I want only to be fair, but will not have a repugnant measure crammed down my throat without protest. Some may surrender but I have never, nor will I ever, cowardly capitulate.

Mr. Chairman, heaven knows we have enough confusion now in this country. If this resolution is passed in the form now presented, I fear chaos will really reign.

It is now more than a year since the unconditional surrender of Germany. It will soon be a year since the total capitulation of Japan. We have had 4 years of war and 1 year of peace. When those two wars ended we had the biggest pent-up demand for civilian goods in all our history. This was caused by the sacrifices and self-denials made by our people and the accumulated shortages during 4 years of war. We also had, on VJ-day, not only the best domestic market and the biggest demand for goods but also the American people, because of extraordinarily high wartime wages, and accumulated savings, had the greatest purchasing power in our history.

By all rules of the game we should have entered immediately, or very shortly after final victory, upon an era of unprecedented production and unparalleled prosperity, because both the demand and the purchasing power for goods were present.

It must also be remembered that many of our wartime plants and industries began their reconversion programs long before the collapse of Japan.

The natural, normal, and expected prosperity, however, did not follow and today, after a year of peace, our country is bogged down in its reconversion program. Selfishness, greed, and strife are to be seen on every hand. An epidemic of strikes has brought about commercial and industrial paralysis.

Our people are still being regimented by New Deal politicians in Washington who want to maintain indefinitely wartime controls. They are more interested in retaining their autocratic power than they are in setting the people free.

The infinite red tape and voluminous, intricate, and contradictory rules and regulations by an overgrown, arrogant, and arbitrary bureaucracy have stifled initiative and enterprise, cut down effort and production, and retarded reconversion and recovery. Today in this land of plenty we are faced with scarcity. One cannot buy butter. It is hard to get meat. The shelves of our dry-goods stores, hardware stores, and lumber yards are empty. We still have raw materials and the tools and skilled labor to produce goods, but both OPA and CPA, by their artificial controls, have reduced output. By increasing wages and costs and by freezing price ceilings, more than a million small businesses have been liquidated in the past 2 or 3 years.

The other side of the picture is just as bad. In 1940 we had $6,500,000,000 in circulation—money not in banks. Today we have twenty-six and one-half billions in circulation, or more than four times as much as at the outbreak of the war.

But what will your dollar buy?

Men and nations are not made rich by printing money. We have plenty of money but no goods. In fact, money is about the cheapest thing we have, but unfortunately men can neither eat nor wear it.

Our greatest need today is to stop printing money and begin producing goods, because money without goods will drive us to a ruinous inflation.

By creating scarcity and running our printing presses, the prices of all commodities are increased and black markets everywhere flourish. The Government loses revenue on bootleg transactions and our people pay exorbitant prices for inferior goods. Americans are tired of dealing under the counter. Let us be frank, forthright, and honest.

Competition in an open and free market will automatically bring about fair prices. Congress cannot repeal the natural economic law of supply and demand. There will be temporary fluctuations but under our free system, prices will naturally and normally adjust themselves. We will have an ample supply at a reasonable cost. Goods will bring no more and no less than they are actually worth.

Not only increased production is a cure of inflation but the American people should exercise common sense and self-restraint for just a few weeks. If we refused to buy things we did not really need or want, prices on every commodity would quickly be reduced and we would get back to where honest and decent people really live. I am not advocating a consumers' strike but I do wish to point out we should not be foolish and frantic—in spite of the OPA's psychology of fear—to purchase anything which we really do not need.

Future historians will call this the age of chiselization, and for very good and indisputable reasons. The OPA has made chiselers, cheats, cowards, and crooks out of good, loyal, law-abiding, honest American citizens.

The OPA is the same old political siren as the NRA. She now wears gingham instead of calico. Her aims, purposes, and methods are very much the same. She wants to get the halter around the necks of both business and workers and force them into a strait-jacket of regimentation.

Do we still want to maintain our American system of individual initiative and private enterprise, or adopt the foreign ideologies of mass regimentation and nationalization of the Nation's business?

After furnishing not only the 12,000,000 men and women in our own armed forces, but also those of our allies with the sinews of war—munitions, food, and clothing—it is now a bit strange that we should be asked or compelled to forsake the American system and adopt a plan of some foreign country that proved insufficient for the day.

This resolution as framed is innocuous, and no more than shadow boxing. It is false and deceptive. It tries to resurrect a skeleton. Though the corpse has been dead only since last midnight and its body is still warm, it yet stinks. Dead or alive—it is rotten. Like a mackerel in the moonlight, it shines and stinks, stinks and shines.

Mr. Chairman, a thing that is basically wrong and fundamentally unsound, contrary to our whole philosophy of government, cannot be made right.

This measure needs not amendment, but extinction; not a physician, but an undertaker.

Let us bury it deep to remove the foul stench from all decent breathing Americans.

For many months our House Committee on Banking and Currency held long hearings, and finally made its report. The same committee in the other body did likewise. We passed a bill, sent it to the White House where it was vetoed over the protest of the leaders of the majority party in both Houses.

Never have I questioned the motives of any man, nor shall I do it now, but I do say that the administration that is now in power with a majority in both Houses for the past 14 years will have its own way. If there be failure, whom can anyone blame except the party that is in power, that has the majority in both Houses, and on every committee?

Mr. Chairman, this is not a political issue, but is an American question and we all should face it squarely. Frankly, I do not like some of the political sparring and parliamentary maneuvering that has been going on on each side this aisle. I believe that an overwhelming majority on both sides knows that it is bad legislation and that the OPA should end.

However, some men want to carry water on both shoulders until after the election. They blow hot and cold in the same breath and are unwilling to fish or cut bait. Better should they stand up and be counted and stop their pussyfooting. The American people will not forever be deceived.

When are we going to end this intolerable situation? Shall we postpone it indefinitely? There are some who would rather maintain wartime controls than to surrender their extraordinary powers voted under the cry of emergency. They are more interested in retaining their autocratic powers than in setting the people free.

For myself, sir, I hope and pray as I have often said, that we shall forever keep America a land where every man can walk the earth his own king, the equal lord of every other man, to go his own way, work out his own will, weave into the warp and woof of magic days the dreams that haunt, the duties that inspire and urge him on.

Though I may be helpless I still want to live my own life and do not wish to become a ward of the Government. I would rather live in freedom and fail than to be bossed by a tyrant and succeed—according to the tyrant's standard.

Benjamin Franklin, one of our wisest philosphers, greatest statesmen, and unexcelled patriots, once said:

> He who surrenders a little liberty for temporary security deserves neither and will soon lose both.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I will not take the 5 minutes, but I want to say the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], speaks of prosperity. What about the man on a fixed salary? What about the people on retirement pay? Let us do a little thinking here. Let us vote for a continuation of this resolution.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BALDWIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BALDWIN of New York) there were—ayes 84, noes 159.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. BROWN of Georgia, and Mr. BALDWIN of New York to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 82; noes 168.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Section 6 of the Stabilization act of 1942, as amended, is amended by striking out "June 30, 1946" and substituting July 20, 1946."

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know if this is a Macedonian cry or not, but I do know that it is an appeal to the Congress of the United States, and to the House of Representatives for courage and for leadership. I know of no time in my brief experience here when we have so badly needed those characteristics as we need them now.

We have had presented to us a request for an extension of the present OPA. I was by accident in a newsreel theater on Saturday evening when the President spoke. It seemed to me to be the speech of a somewhat frightened man who was concerned over a condition he himself had brought about. The incident which impressed me, and which I have not heard anybody else mention, is that when he called upon the OPA employees to stand at their "battle stations" there was audible laughter in the audience.

I believe the people of the United States, as evidenced by their attitude and the telegrams that have come to me, and the telegrams that have come to many other Representatives, are looking to the Congress of the United States to bring order out of this confusion.

Repeatedly this afternoon reference has been made to these telegrams and letters. One Member spoke of a flood of telegrams. Well, let us see: I have received 26 telegrams, including 1 radiogram from Tokyo. I will take for granted that the sender of the radiogram is from my district, when he is home. Two others were from the secretary of the California CIO Council, in San Francisco—one as the secretary, the other as an individual. A fourth was from Los Angeles and I will print it here.

Destroy OPA. Wage earning families, two veterans, can't get butter, meat, bread, suits, underwear, linens, refrigerators, lumber, automobiles, because of OPA. Please restore freedom. No British loans.

I congratulate the three signers of this telegram, Albert L. Hess, C. L. Reigelman, and Margaret Wheeler Hess, on their understanding of the present situation in the United States. They put the blame exactly where it belongs.

That leaves 24 telegrams from my district; not exactly a flood, in my opinion. Of the 24, 13 of the telegrams, signed by 31 people, want the immediate end of the OPA; they do not want any pulmotor used on the body sent to Congress by the President last Saturday. Three more telegrams, signed by three people, want rent controls only, and two other wires, signed by five people, want controls kept on both rents and food. Only five wires, signed by six people, want the OPA continued, and then I have one wire from the acting chairman of a local chapter of the American Veterans Committee also asking for the reenactment of the OPA controls.

This makes 13 wires against OPA; 5 for partial controls, and 6 for OPA; and it makes 31 individuals against OPA, 8 for partial controls, and 7 for OPA. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, this is not a flood of telegrams overwhelming the Congress with demands that OPA be saved.

More people in the United States still have confidence in the Congress than the majority party seems to realize, and particularly the majority members of the Banking and Currency Committee.

There is not a Member of this House who does not know that whether OPA controls are removed today, 10 days from now, 20 days from now, or 6 months from now there will follow a short period of confusion. We would do better to have the operation now and start the economic body of the Nation toward recovery. It has been said that steers are selling on the Chicago and Omaha markets for $25 instead of the OPA "loss ceiling" of $18. If so, I am surprised it is not more. That would do little more than take up the historically deceptive subsidies the OPA has been trying to fool us with. These would be only the first cattle offered after the death of price controls. More cattle will head immediately for the markets. It means the prices will come down. We have more cattle in the United States, almost, than we have ever had. I have said repeatedly that the end of controls will mean more meat, and cheaper meat, allowing for subsidies, on most of the common cuts.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Because cattle are up on the Chicago and Omaha markets does not mean that the price of meat will be going up in the retail markets all over the country, because that is merely the black market price some people are already paying for their meat.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BARRETT of Wyoming. I just learned that cattle were selling in Omaha today for $22.50, and I understand that the top price in Chicago was about the same. The gentleman well knows that the cattle had to go up about 3 or 4 cents to compensate for the loss of the subsidies.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I know very well also that they are going into the regular markets and will therefore go into the regular distribution channels and not into the black market.

We have large crops of deciduous fruits, yet OPA decontrolled some of them, and left pears, with the second largest crop in the history of that commodity, with a ceiling under which the producer will take a loss if he ships. Potatoes are not being harvested in some areas. We have a great wheat crop. Fluid milk is at top production.

It was said here today that one market, I think in Chicago, was selling butter at 99 cents. Think a minute before getting excited. The OPA ceiling on wholesale butter was about 56 cents and the cream it took to make a pound of butter cost about 70 cents. Would you make butter? With the ceiling off and subsidies out of the way, butter will be about 75 cents, perhaps more, but probably not 99 cents. This 99-cent butter is the black market butter going back on the regular shelves at that price instead of the black market price of $1.25, which black-market buyers in Chicago and New York and Los Angeles have been paying for it. If the customer has been going without butter for months and months, let her go without 99-cent butter for a few weeks more and the price will adjust itself, but Mr. Speaker, there will be butter.

There will be meat, through regular channels, not through unsanitary and wasteful black markets. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] told several days ago how pancreatic products were in short supply because black-market operators do not make these products from slaughtered steers. There will be suits and underwear and refrigerators and lumber and the other things the veterans want, referring again to the telegram I quoted.

I see no advantage in a temporary renewal. We can just as well work on a regular bill. A temporary renewal will add to the present confusion. Supplies will not come to the markets, if there is still danger of losing on every shipment. Farmers and manufacturers and consumers will not know if OPA is alive or dead. Let us have courage to vote against the short extension; then vote for the Wolcott amendment to renew rent control, until this can be worked out, and then refuse all other controls which were killed Saturday by the President.

If the vetoed bill had continued the arbitrary powers of Mr. Bowles, I doubt if it would have been vetoed. It gave supervision of foods to the Secretary of Agriculture, and it set up an independent decontrol board for other commodities. It was vetoed, and it is a curious thing that the veto message had no suggestion of the style of the President, but had a remarkable similarity in style to the recent radio speeches of Chester Bowles.

This is a time for courage and for leadership in the House of Representatives.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I was rather surprised and, I might say, actually shocked by the statement made on the floor of this House that there were more cattle on the hoof, more meat in the lockers, and the crops were abundant with food more plentiful than ever, and still we have scarcities in the retail stores today. The housewives are crying for bread, butter, meat, and clothing. If that is true, and I have no doubt but that it is true, then who is responsible for the black market? It is the big packers who are trying to browbeat the people into submission. It is the manufacturers who have deliberately withheld those things from the market in order to break down controls in this Nation. This is what I call a real strike. A strike to wring your last dollar or war bond from you.

Might I ask you now, you who have opposed labor, you who have criticized the strikes, who is on strike against the American people, in view of the statements that were made on the floor of this House? You know it is the packers and manufacturers of this Nation and those who would destroy price controls. Yes, might I say, and I say this honestly, that a big majority of the Republican Party with the exception of a very few like, for instance, my good friends, HOMER RAMEY, JOE BALDWIN, DICK WELCH, CHARLEY LA-FOLLETTE, and a few others are on strike against the people today. You people were responsible for the loading down of the OPA with crippling amendments. Let us call a spade a spade. It is an actual fact, and you know it. You will get regular order next November, and the regular order will be an exodus of the people going down to the polls to show those who opposed OPA that the will of the people will rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, there is another responsibility for the inflation which today hangs over this country. That responsibility lies with the Members of the Congress who voted before the war and who have voted since the war to spend Federal money in excess of receipts, and lo, those in the Congress who have been the greatest spenders are the ones who, too late, now recognize the sickness they have created and cry out loudest for the opiate known as OPA. It is too late for opiates.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I voted this afternoon for the amendment for a 60-day extension of OPA and for a 6-month extension, because I feel very profoundly that whatever Congress does should be a real extension; both of these amendments were defeated, and we are now back to where we started from this afternoon. I want to say that this 20-day proposition is a 100-percent phony. In the first place, we all know that the Senate is not going to pass this 20-day proposition. In the second place, we also know that if a 20-day bill were passed by both bodies today, it would calm nobody, comfort nobody, and reassure nobody, because we would still have complete uncertainty as to what the policy would be 20 days from now. We simply cannot get away from the fact that until the Congress determines upon a long-time policy and until the President approves that policy, or until the Congress enacts that policy over his veto, there is going to be confusion, turbulence, and uncertainty.

There is only one kind of new evidence that we can secure now while we are deliberating on what our price control policy should be, and that is how the United States acts with controls off, what element of self-control there is left in the American people, how prices function when there is no OPA. We will get that evidence and that evidence will be valuable in our consideration. But if we pass here a 20-day phony, letting anybody think that there is going to be real price control for the next 20 days, I think we are cowards.

If we had voted first to extend OPA for a substantial period, for 60 days or 6 months, then this House would have considered carefully what kind of extension we wanted and amendments would have been adopted to show the kind of extension we favored. Now it looks as if the House is going to pass this 20-day phony, without amendments, without even bothering about the fact that we are merely amending a dead law, and have put in no words that would revive it.

I have felt sure and feel sure of one thing, that unless and until we act on a long-time policy we are fooling ourselves and fooling the people.

The President asked for a workable OPA law. People are wiring me to vote for a workable law. I think the law we sent to the President was workable. In any case, a 20-day extension of a law that even the President says needs at least five changes, is a completely unworkable proposition. Mark my words, a 20-day extension just will not work.

But some of my colleagues are saying, this is an emergency; the President demands it. Well, I remember Saturday, May 25, when the President demanded an emergency law to stop a railroad strike against the Government. I voted for the bill he handed us, although I had no time to study it. I found out later that the emergency was a phony; that he knew when he started to talk to us that afternoon that there was no railroad strike. From now on I am remembering that Truman-announced emergencies may be merely an excuse for him and his crowd to ask for more power.

This present proposition, of a 20-day amendment of a dead law, will help no one, not even President Truman, and in the end will fool no one except those who vote for it thinking they are helping someone, or fooling someone.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I have two amendments to offer to this resolution, but due to the limitations of time and the closing of debate I have not had an opportunity to offer either one of them. I do not suppose it would be possible for me to make any contribution to this argument that will have any effect whatsoever. However, I do not want the record to be barren and to show that someone at the time when amendments could be offered has not at least attempted to offer an amendment that would in effect commit this Congress to an effective price-control program for whatever period the extension is to be.

I do not care what the legislative council says with respect to this legislation, I know that this resolution was drawn with the idea that it would be passed last Saturday before the expiration of the present law. I say as a matter of common sense and the legalistic application of legal principles to this resolution that you are not going to accomplish the purpose that you intended. So I had at the Clerk's desk two amendments, one to the first section and one to the second section, which would reenact the provisions of the Stabilization Act and reenact the price-control law, and thus not have any question raised as to whether or not we are engaging in a mere futility by the adoption of this resolution. I submitted the amendments to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] and he was inclined to agree that the amendments should be offered. Then, after consultation with someone whom he identified as the legislative counsel for the committee, he came to the conclusion that the amendments would be superfluous. All I have to say to my colleagues is that sometime if this ultimately passes and you are attempting to protect prices and rents under the Stabilization and Price Control Acts, somebody will raise the question in the court as to whether or not you have in fact extended either act for the 20-day period. Then perhaps you will think that perhaps somebody should have raised this question here on the floor. It is too late now to do anything about it due to the steamroller tactics.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The last paragraph of section 2 (e) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended by the Stabilization Extension Act of 1944, shall not apply with respect to operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation until July 20, 1946: Provided, That no new subsidy or purchase and sale operations shall be undertaken under the authority of this section, and no change shall be made in the basis of any operations existing on June 29, 1946, for which funds are made available under this section which will increase the rate of any subsidy or the rate of loss incurred with respect to any commodity.

SEC. 4. The provisions of this joint resolution shall take effect as of June 30, 1946, except as to offenses committed subsequent to June 30, 1946, and prior to the date of the enactment of this joint resolution, and no suit, action, or prosecution shall be instituted with respect to any such offenses.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMNERS of Texas: On page 2, in line 16, at the end of the bill, add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 5. That whenever any State or subdivision thereof, which shall have established provisions for the control and regulation of the rent of housing accommodations within its boundaries, notifies the United States Administrator or official controlling and regulating housing accommodations rents that it is prepared to assume such regulation and control, no provision relating to rent of housing accommodations of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable within such State or subdivision thereof."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered indicates the direction in which we may move to decentralize Federal control and add to governmental efficiency. In a sentence it proposes that when a State or subdivision of a State shall assume responsibility with regard to rent and shall notify the proper officials of the Federal Government that it is prepared to assume that responsibility, then the activities of the Federal organization in that community shall cease.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. How will this affect the veterans' emergency housing program which contemplates that the Expediter will permit people to build homes for veterans at a certain price if they do not rent the dwellings that are built over a certain amount? In other words, we would not want the States to go in there and interrupt the veterans' emergency housing program.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. I assure my colleague that I have checked in on that and I find that the Expediter will not operate under the powers to be effected by the proposed amendment. The Expediter does not have to do directly with rent control. I understand that before he will agree that building material be used, there must be an agreement as to rent to be charged. He does not otherwise have to do with rents.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Many States have a provision in their constitution, including I think the gentleman's State constitution, prohibiting impairment of a contract.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. I have your point.

Mr. GORE. I wondered how effective that could be.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The Federal Constitution provides that a State may not enact legislation impairing the obligation of contracts. It is held by the Supreme Court of the United States that notwithstanding that provision the States may control rents in congested areas. The State of New York, following World War I, enacted exactly that sort of legislation. It was challenged on the ground that it was in violation of the Federal Constitution. The case went to the Supreme Court, and in a most specific and clear sort of determination, the Supreme Court held that that legislation on the part of the State did not violate such a provision of the Constitution or that to which the gentleman refers. It is held that such legislation falls within the broad police power of the State, and is not affected by the prohibition that States may not enact laws impairing the obligation of contracts.

In the case of Levy Leasing Co. v. Siegel (258 U. S., p. 242) appealed from a decision of the Supreme Court of the State of New York to the Supreme Court of the United States, the constitutionality of the emergency housing law of the State of New York was sustained. Mr. Justice Clark of the Supreme Court delivering the opinion for the Court, the Court held:

The warrant for this legislative resort to the police power was the conviction on the part of the State legislators that there existed in the larger cities of the State a social emergency, caused by an insufficient supply of dwelling houses and apartments, so grave that it constituted a serious menace to the health, morality, comfort, and even to the peace of a large part of the people of the State. That such an emergency, if it really existed, would sustain a resort, otherwise valid, to the police power for the purpose of dealing with it cannot be doubted, for, unless relieved, the public welfare would suffer in respects which constitute the primary and undisputed, as well as the most usual, basis and justification for exercise of that power (police power).

If this Court were disposed, as it is not, to ignore the notorious fact that a grave social problem has arisen from the insufficient supply of dwellings in all large cities of this and other countries, resulting from the cessation of building activities incident to the war, nevertheless, these reports and the very great respect which courts must give to the legislative declaration that an emergency existed would be amply sufficient to sustain an appropriate resort to the police power for the purpose of dealing with it in the public interest.

The Court concluded with this language:

Given a constitutional substantive statute, enacted to give effect to a constitutional purpose, the States have wide discretion as to the remedies which may be deemed necessary to achieve such a result and it is very clear that that discretion has not been exceeded in this instance by the State of New York.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. If the State and the Federal Government both exercise the power, they have concurrent jurisdiction with reference to this?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This amendment provides that if the State will exercise its power and assume the responsibility, the Federal Government moves out of the picture.

Mr. SPENCE. But now, both exercise the same functions?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; they may. This amendment would remove all possibility of conflict.

Mr. SPENCE. Would you not have fragmentary and uncoordinated control if you gave it to the States, without any overseeing provision by the Federal Government?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Not at all. The city of Flint, Mich., has always exercised this power, and I am assured they are doing a good job up there.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. I just wanted to add that New York has a law establishing a moratorium on the foreclosure of mortgages, and that law has been sustained.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. I do not understand why people who believe in the philosophy of government that we profess to believe in, are not willing to have their State undertake to discharge this responsibility in their community, at least if they are willing to do so.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. COMBS. Is it not a fact that the Constitution of the State of Texas, in the article dealing with the bill of rights of such State, forbids impairment of contracts?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. COMBS. And under that very provision our Supreme Court held unconstitutional the moratorium law in Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am not advised. It might be so. I know that the Supreme Court of the State of New York held that a law of that State regulating rents was a constitutional exercise of its broad police power and the Supreme Court of the United States with the question squarely before it held that such regulation and control did not violate the Federal constitutional provision prohibiting a State from enacting legislation impairing the obligation of contract; that such legislation was within the States' police powers which were not interfered with by this constitutional provision.

Mr. Chairman, this is the proposed amendment:

That whenever any State or subdivision thereof, which shall have established provisions for the control and regulation of the rent of housing accommodations within its boundaries, notifies the United States Administrator or official controlling and regulating housing accommodations rents that it is prepared to assume such regulation and control, no provision relating to rent of housing accommodations of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or of any other act shall be applicable within such State or subdivision thereof.

Mr. Chairman, the various communities of the States can do this job better than the agents of a great organization centering in Washington. But that is not the most important reason for the adoption. The thing which makes this proposed amendment of very great importance now is that it is a definite movement against the present trend toward the decentralization of governmental power; a definite movement toward putting back in the States governmental powers within their governmental capacity. It is a movement toward reestablishing the governmental sovercignty of the States and toward having the people again look to their States as the responsible sovereign agency of general government, local domestic government. It is a movement toward what we profess to believe in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. At the time I offered my amendment to section 1, I stated that I had an amendment which I wanted considered at the same time with reference to section 2. In order to get the record straight I would like unanimous consent to have had that considered at the same time. It simply changes the dates in the two paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am wondering just what shape this proposition would leave the State of New York in. We have a rent-control law; we have a commissioner in charge of the operation. The whole thing is functioning, regulations have been promulgated, and it is in effect. If this rent-control amendment were adopted, I am wondering how it would operate. I am wondering what would happen, whether or not the State of New York would have to make a certificate to the Federal Government. I am rather inclined to believe that the amendment would tend to result in considerable confusion, and I am inclined to believe, also, that it would be a little difficult to handle with the picture that the gentleman from Texas presented to us when he was on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] made practically the point I wish to make. We have a rent-control law in the State of New York and it went vigorously into effect yesterday. The State rent law operates under the sovereign power of the State of New York. For the life of me I cannot see just where this amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas would either benefit or injure us. I think it would lead to some confusion.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I suggest to the gentleman that this would not at all disturb the State of New York if it assumed responsibility for rent control; it could not.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Representatives from New York appeared at the hearing and wanted a State amendment, perhaps not precisely like that offered by the gentleman from Texas, but they wanted that in principle.

Mr. HANCOCK. If the gentleman will yield, it simply means that where a State has taken over rents the Government will stay out. How can there be any objection to that from the standpoint of New York?

Mr. REED of New York. I have no objection if the State of New York still retains its sovereign rights.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. If the gentleman will yield, would not the amendment produce conflict between State law and Federal law?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes; I think it would.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, let us live by the rules of the game. It was announced here on the floor by the chairman of my committee just before we voted on the President's veto that a resolution would be offered at the suggestion of the President, asking for 20 days to consider another bill. It was contemplated that nothing would be in the resolution beyond the 20 days' extension so that the Banking and Currency Committee of the House could go carefully into all phases of another bill. I think, since the President's veto was sustained, we certainly ought to carry out his wishes.

I believe this amendment ought to be considered by the Banking and Currency Committee. It was the purpose of the rule when granted that matters dealing with OPA would be sent to the Banking and Currency Committee and there we could take up every phase of OPA. To come in here with one amendment to change rents, means opening the resolution to many amendments.

Let us carry out the wishes of the President as they were stated by the chairman of my committee when the President's veto was sustained. If you are going to deal with rent in the resolution, it would be germane to introduce many amendments, including the bill that the President vetoed.

Now let us be fair to all parties concerned and take back to the Banking and Currency Committee all phases of the OPA for consideration and carry out the wishes of the President, or make the resolution open to all amendments, including the bill he vetoed. If the Banking and Currency Committee is going to consider another bill, it should not be hampered by this resolution.

Therefore, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas will be voted down and that the original intention of this resolution will be carried out.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, this is similar to an amendment I offered when we had the price-control bill under consideration.

The State of New York is the only State in the Union that has a rent-control act of its own. Last night, as my colleagues have said, this was invoked by Governor Dewey. He has appointed a rent director. He issued his executive order last night and froze rents at the same ceilings that are now in effect under the OPA law. We are ready to operate. The rest of you are in trouble and we would like to keep going under our own law, and I hope this is enacted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] is recognized.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I feel the same way that my colleague from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] does, that we should not load down this simple resolution to give us 20 days to consider these matters with amendments.

The distinguished gentleman from Texas has said this regulation on rents might be under the police powers of the States. I can see how that might be done under slum clearance and by other agencies, but the Constitution of the United States says, that no State shall make laws impairing the obligation of contracts and that applies to every State in the Union. I do not see how the States can impair the obligations that exist now under contracts between landlord and tenant.

As I stated, I feel like the gentleman from Georgia does. I feel the States ought to exercise their function and I feel this agency should be temporary, but I am afraid if we take this step we will get into a chaotic condition and we do not know what the result will be; therefore I ask that the amendment be defeated.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the chairman of the committee, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 371, pursuant to House Resolution 689, he reported the resolution back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOLCOTT moves to recommit House Joint Resolution 371 to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 283, nays 61, answered "present" 1, not voting 87, as follows:

Mr. Powell with Mr. Andrews of New York.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. SLAUGHTER. Had he been present he would have voted "aye." I therefore withdraw my vote of "no," and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RENT CONTROL

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 372, reenacting and continuing the effective period of certain provisions of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, in respect to the stabilization of rents for housing accommodations, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I cannot conceive how rents could be controlled without the control of other matters over which OPA exercises its powers. Certainly it would be unfair to attempt to control rents unless we attempted to control those things incident to rents and upon which rents are based.

There is a provision with respect to rents in the resolution we have just adopted and when the Committee on Banking and Currency takes up the consideration of OPA we expect to consider the control of rents. I certainly would not be in favor of any bill that did not control rents, because I think it is essential to the welfare of the American people; but I do object to the immediate consideration of this resolution at this time. I hope the matter will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KERR filed a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 6837) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GARY submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 5990) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

AMENDING EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6477) to amend section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and section 3 of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act, as amended, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 19, after "Federal" insert "Farm."

Page 3, line 1, strike out "Agriculture and Forestry" and insert "Banking and Currency."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman conferred with the minority member of the committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE]?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I did.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not see him here and no one has said anything about it.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. The only change is that we require the Farm Credit Administration——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I know nothing about it and I would prefer to know something.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I thought he had spoken to the minority leader.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; he has not.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I may say to the minority leader that the distinguished chairman and two other members of the committee were the only ones who were in favor of continuing this legislation and I am sure that by the agreement made the other day to continue it for 1 year more will take care of the Senate amendments.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It is only a technical matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on House Joint Resolution No. 371, just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I received unanimous consent some time ago to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an address by William S. Bennet. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $160, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, several days ago I asked unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech entitled "Top Public Relations Man of 1945." I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $240, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made earlier in the day and include certain telegrams and postcards.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ALMOND, from July 2 to August 2, on account of official business.

To Mr. DAUGHTON of Virginia (at the request of Mr. BLAND), for today, on account of official business.

To Mr. GRANT OF ALABAMA, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

To Mr. HORAN (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts), from July 1 to July 11, on account of official business.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A bill and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

S. 2280. An act to amend the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act to provide a secondary market for farm loans made under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

S. J. Res. 156. Joint resolution to extend the succession, lending powers, and the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. ROGERS of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on June 30, 1946, present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6682. An act to amend sections 81, 82, and 83, and to repeal section 84 of chapter IX of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 2, 1946, at 11 o'clock a. m.
